EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

IT'S TIME TO END IRRIGATION SUBSIDIES FOR SURPLUS CROPS

HON. BERKLEY BEDELL

OF IOWA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 10, 1986

Mr. BEDELL. Mr. Speaker, I invite my colleagues to join me as original cosponsors of a bill I plan to introduce shortly to stop the Government from granting massive irrigation subsidies to grow more surplus crops when we are already paying farmers not to grow the very same crops. I include the full text of the bill and a summary at the end of this statement.

The concept at the heart of the bill has previously received broad support in the House. Earlier this year, I offered an amendment to apply this concept to the Garrison Diversion project bill—H.R. 1116, April 23. Although the amendment did not pass, the surprisingly narrow margin of that vote—203-199—showed that there is broad feeling in the House that the time has come to stop this wasteful conflict between agricultural and irrigation policies. The House adopted a similar amendment of mine in 1982 during debate on the Reclamation Reform Act. Although that amendment was weakened in conference to a study of the problem, the study confirmed the problem and supported the solution in my bill.

The bill I will introduce shortly simply provides that, if an irrigator choose to use the water he receives from a federally subsidized irrigation project to grow more of crops that are already in surplus, then he must pay the full cost to the taxpayers of providing him that water.

BUDGET DEFICITS AND AG SURPLUSES

Mr. Speaker, the old saying that, "If you're not part of the solution, you're part of the problem," seems especially appropriate on this issue. Two of the biggest problems facing Congress this month are the budget deficit and the surplus of agricultural commodities. The deficit is such a big problem that are cutting funding for needed programs.

Second, we are awash in a world of surplus agricultural commodities. As a member of the Agriculture Committee who has wrestled with the farm problem, I can assure you that no serious agricultural analyst believes that the surpluses will disappear soon. Any action based on that notion is pure speculation. World agricultural production is increasing so rapidly that it is extremely difficult for the United States to sell its commodities on the glutted world markets. The United States spends millions just to store surplus commodities, and we pay our farmers more and more not to grow these crops in the first place. In fact, under the farm bill's long-term conservation reserve, we will pay farmers to take 40 million acres out of production over the next 5 years, in addition to millions of acres of annual set-asides that will take additional land out of production.

IRRIGATION SUBSIDIES

Irrigation subsidies have outlived their original purpose. The Reclamation Act of 1902 set the policy of making irrigated water available to provide opportunities to settle and develop arid western lands. One goal of this 1902 legislation was that water rates be set so that Federal costs to construct projects could be recovered in payments from the farmers who received the water. Over the years, water rates were adjusted to permit small subsidies to the smallest farmers. Successive changes in the original law resulted finally in big western railroads and multinational oil companies receiving millions of dollars in water subsidies on giant farms. In 1981, the U.S. General Accounting Office concluded that the original goals of the 1902 Reclamation Act had been achieved, and recommended that our irrigation policies should now be reevaluated in the light of current economic and social conditions.

Almost half of lands irrigated with federally subsidized water have been planted with surplus crops.

In 1985, the highly respected Natural Resources Defense Council [NRDC] published an authoritative study documenting the enormous subsidies involved, including many subsidies not authorized by Congress, and the deep environmental problems caused by continued irrigation development. The NRDC concluded that the solution was to let the market work:

The most critical need is to force water users to recognize the true costs of water. This can only be done by removing a major portion of the subsidy. If costs rise, water users will be forced to consider better ways of using water, and will have few incentives to exert political pressures for additional projects.

If this sounds like the Reagan administration talking, it should. In March of this year, the U.S. Department of the Interior wrote Congress in regard to reauthorization of the small irrigation projects loan program that:

We believe that the time has arrived to remove the Small Reclamation Projects Act program from Federal interest subsidies. In these times of Federal budget exigencies and large surpluses of agricultural production, we can no longer afford to grant interest-free Small Reclamation Projects Act loans for irrigation-related purposes.

The economics of irrigation subsidies are indefensible. For example, the Garrison project will invest an average of $5,000 in order to irrigate 1 acre in the project, but this will increase the market value of an acre of land by an average of only $400. None of us would invest our own money so poorly, why should we ask the taxpayers to do so?

THE RECLAMATION REFORM ACT OF 1982

In recent decades, recognizing that our reclamation policies must be brought into line with today's budget and agricultural realities, Congress has sought to modify reclamation policy in order to end the conflict between reclamation and agricultural policies. Many authorizations for particular irrigation projects have contained prohibitions against using the projects' water on surplus crops. Unfortunately, flat prohibitions such as this did not work as intended because of loopholes and a lack of will on the part of the Bureau of Reclamation to enforce them.

Congress again tried to address the issue during debate on the comprehensive Reclamation Reform Act of 1982. The House adopted a tough amendment of mine which would have flatly prohibited the delivery of irrigation water to grow surplus crops. This amendment was watered down in conference to a study. But this study, "Production of Surplus Crops on Irrigated Land Served by the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation," USDA Economic Research Service, February 1984—found that a full 45 percent of lands throughout the West that were irrigated with subsidized Bureau water were planted with surplus crops—59 percent of subsidized irrigated acres in California. The study agreed with the advantages of the solution embodied in the bill I will introduce shortly:

Reclamation and commodity program goals conflict * * *. Requiring farmers who use U.S. Bureau of Reclamation water to pay full cost for water used on program crops as long as the crop is declared in surplus represents a policy strategy to eliminate one of the subsidies—the subsidy provided through the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation program. Under this plan, Bureau-served farmers would be placed on a comparable basis with other program crop producers in the Nation. National production efficiency would be expected to improve as production would move towards areas of comparative advantage. Program costs would be reduced due to lower production and higher prices; administrative costs would increase somewhat to assure compliance. The use of full-cost pricing for project water on farms in excess of 960 acres already is a feature of Public Law 97-293—Reclamation Reform Act of 1982.

As the study notes, the 1982 Reclamation Reform Act made some reforms. First, it clearly defined the term "full cost" to conclude all of a project's capital construction costs, its operation/maintenance costs and the interest cost of the Government's borrowing to build the project. My new bill references this definition of "full cost."

Second, the 1982 law required beneficiaries to repay the full costs of new irrigation projects, except for categories of beneficiaries deemed more deserving of continued subsidies, such as small family farmers. My bill simply says that any farmers who choose to work against the goals of our farm programs should not qualify as a group deserving subsidies. This is a consistent application of the full cost repayment standard that exists in current law.

Requiring full cost repayment for water used to grow surplus crops is a better way to approach the problem than past proposals to absolutely prohibit delivery of water for surplus crops. The absolute prohibition was unenforceable and punitive because it stated that "no water . . . shall be delivered" to grow surplus crops on newly irrigated lands. In order to enforce this provision, the Secretary of the Interior would have to actually turn off the water. As has been pointed out in hearings before the House interior Subcommittee on Water and Power, the pressures against turning off the water are so strong that the concept doesn't work.

The concept of charging full cost for water used on surplus crops is fair. It is fair to the irrigator who can decide whether he is willing to pay full cost for the water if he chooses to use it for no productive purpose. Second, it is fair to other farmers who do not receive irrigation subsidies. Currently, those farmers suffer the consequences of a glutted market and must compete against farmers who receive subsidized water. Third, it is fair to the taxpayers, because they shouldn't have to pay for both farm programs and irrigation subsidies.

SUMMARY

First. Generally, the bill requires irrigators signing new or amended irrigation contracts to agree to pay full cost for any water they use on surplus crops. The bill would only apply to those seeking new or expanded irrigation benefits.

Second. The bill requires repayment to the government of the full cost of providing the water. Full cost is defined in the Reclamation Reform Act of 1982, the most recent comprehensive congressional revision of Federal irrigation policy. Large farmers and others who do not qualify for subsidies must currently pay this same full cost rate.

Third. A crop is defined as "surplus" if there is in effect a Federal program to pay farmers to reduce production of that crop. Currently, such programs exist for feed grains—including corn—rice, tobacco, wheat, cotton, and peanuts. A similar soybean program may be started within a few years. The agricultural marketing order crops are not covered by this bill.

Fourth. For purposes of the bill, it is irrelevant whether an individual farmer participates in farm programs. He is still required to pay full cost for water he uses to worsen the problem of surplus crops.

Fifth. Payment is calculated annually. When the Bureau of Reclamation is making its annual calculation of repayment obligations and water rates, the bill would simply require that the Bureau charge full cost for whatever percentage of water is obtained each year for irrigating surplus crops. Currently, complex Bureau calculations already take into account full cost charges for certain farmers.

Sixth. The Secretary of the Interior would announce the amount of next year's full cost charges on a project by July 1 of each year so that irrigators would have time to plan what crops to plant next spring.

The full text of the bill follows:

H.R. —

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 9 of the Reclamation Projects Act of 1939 (43 U.S.C. 485h) is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(g)(1) Any contract entered into under authority of this section or any other provision of Federal reclamation law shall require that the organization agree by contract with the Secretary to pay full cost for the delivery of water used in the production of any agricultural commodity if there is in effect for any marketing year for such commodity a program to limit production of such commodity, as announced by the Secretary of Agriculture.

"(2) The Secretary shall announce the amount of the full cost payment for the succeeding year on or before July 1 of each year.

"(3) As used in this subsection—

"(A) the term 'agricultural commodity' means feed grains, cotton, peanuts, rice, tobacco, or wheat or any other agricultural commodity for which there is in effect a similar crop reduction program; and

"(B) the term 'full cost' shall have the meaning given in paragraph (3) of section 202 of the Reclamation Reform Act of 1982 (43 U.S.C. 390bb(3)).

"(4) Paragraph (1) shall apply to any contract entered into or amended after the date of enactment of this subsection.".

NARCOTICS EPIDEMIC

HON. TOM LEWIS

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 10, 1986

Mr. LEWIS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, the narcotics epidemic assumes many frightening faces in south Florida. Nationally, the problems of enforcement, education, and rehabilitation are enormous. In Florida, they are compounded by the involvement of illegal immigrants in the drug network.

On July 30, 1986, the Florida Sheriffs Association adopted a resolution which illuminates the connection between illegal immigrants and illicit drugs. In light of the sheriffs' intimate involvement in the narcotics war, their words merit thorough consideration.

FLORIDA SHERIFFS ASSOCIATION RESOLUTION 86-1—JULY 30, 1986

Whereas, the State of Florida is overburdened with illegal immigrants, often in a refugee status; and

Whereas, these foreign nationals are all too often engaged in the manufacture, distribution and sale of illicit drugs; and

Whereas, these foreign nationals all too often are able to bond out of jail after arrest on these drug activities, assume new identities, and go forth to commit new crimes, thus evading conviction in our courts; and

Whereas, the current policy of the Immigration & Naturalization Service [INS] is to require a felony conviction as a condition precedent to deportation, it is readily apparent that the citizens of this state are being victimized again and again by the same noncitizen criminals—especially through the ever-increasing sale of "crack" cocaine;

Now therefore be it unanimously Resolved, by the members of the Florida Sheriffs Association that in order to protect our law-abiding citizens, especially our youth, from this recurrent criminal behavior, the INS adopt a policy of no bond immigration holds in secure facilities for all such criminals until prosecution and/or deportation is accomplished.

Whether or not the sheriff's resolution meets with universal agreement, I believe we should heed the old adage: where there's smoke there's fire.

My investigations into the communication and cooperation between sheriffs and the INS are by no means complete. To date, the information I have received is often confusing, conflicting, and complex. The variety of answers, alone, indicates to me an enormous need for improved communication.

The drug bill comes before the House this week. Most likely, the immigration bill will soon follow. New drug laws and new immigration laws are not a cure-all. They will be effective only if they are enforced.

One of the fundamental aids to enforcement must be communication. If a far-reaching effort among sheriffs and INS officials is made, I feel confident that we will have won a early victory in the war on drugs. Above all, public officials must operate behind a unified front.

REPRESENTATIVE HAMILTON'S PRESCRIPTION FOR HANDCUFFING THE PRESIDENT

HON. JIM COURTER

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 10, 1986

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Speaker, the amendment which Representative HAMILTON offered to the Intelligence Authorization Act for 1987 is a case of the Congress improperly meddling in a realm of government best left to the executive. The notion that Congress should debate in the open all that the President desires to do covertly is nothing less than a prescription for handcuffing the Executive. Whatever political party the Executive might represent, he is the Nation's highest elected official, and there are and will be things he is required to do covertly to defend the national security and to advance the national purpose.

While on this matter I cannot agree with the gentleman from Indiana, I have learned a lesson from Alexander Hamilton, the founder who wrote of the treaty-making something which applies to intelligence matters generally. The italics are Hamilton's own, and the political body he is discussing is this very House of Representatives: "* * * secrecy, and dispatch are incompatible with the genius of a body so variable and so numerous."

I wish to add for the consideration of my colleagues the text of an excellent essay which Hon. HENRY HYDE published in the Washington Times on August 13 of this year. Titled "Distaste for Covert Actions," it sets forth Mr. HYDE's reasons, which resemble my own, for disagreeing with the Hamilton amendment.

DISTASTE FOR COVERT ACTIONS

(By Henry Hyde)

It has been said that Queen Victoria, in rejecting the idea of submarine warfare, called it a decidedly un-British way of fighting. True or not, there are those in positions of power in Congress who express the same fastidiousness about U.S. covert actions. Among those appearing to hold such a view is Democratic Rep. Lee Hamilton of Indiana, the respected chairman of the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence.

Earlier this year, what amounts to a new anti-covert action doctrine was enunciated by Mr. Hamilton. Specifically, the Hamilton Doctrine says that any "hotly debated" aspect of U.S. foreign policy with sensitive, covert intelligence ramifications must be openly acknowledged, publicly debated, and approved by Congress before any money can be provided in support of that policy.

More recently, Mr. Hamilton has translated his doctrine into legislation that is designed to sabotage the Reagan Doctrine of aiding anti-Communist resistance forces around the world. This latest Hamilton proposal, which has very damaging foreign-policy implications, is incorporated in the Intelligence Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1987 (H.R. 4759), slated to be considered by the full House soon.

The first test case of the Hamilton Doctrine will be Angola. In essence, the Hamilton legislation stipulates that no U.S. covert military or paramilitary assistance to Jonas Savimbi's National Union for the Total Independence of Angola (UNITA) can be furnished unless such aid is publicly acknowledged and publicly approved by Congress. In other words, this is a clear attempt to reverse Congress's decision last year to repeal the 10-year-old Clark Amendment, which prohibited U.S. covert paramilitary activities in Angola.

What particularly disturbs me, as one who shares membership with Mr. Hamilton on the House intelligence committee, is that his doctrine represents a threat, ultimately, to all covert action, not just to what might be undertaken in Angola.

Debating an issue of this nature in open session empties the congressional intelligence oversight process of any real meaning.

And who makes the determination as to what is "hotly debated"—the media, certain senators and representatives, or the American public, which may have an entirely different point of view?

Questions concerning U.S. support of paramilitary operations in any part of the world should be discussed secretly within the confines of Congress's two intelligence committees. That is why those panels were established.

Members of Congress should realize there are instances when our foreign policy must be circumspect, and indeed, even appear ambiguous, to be fruitful. Angola is a case in point. As State Department officials have indicated, a public debate on whether we should have a military support relationship with UNITA might reveal specific, sensitive information to our adversaries.

The Libyan bombing episode of last April demonstrated that the president must have a covert foreign policy option that lies somewhere between no action and sending the Marines or American bombers. The Hamilton Doctrine would preclude that. Moreover, it jeopardize clandestine cooperation from other countries who feel that they cannot afford to be identified publicly as backing U.S. foreign-policy objectives and activities.

Some argue that once the general nature of a covert operation is disclosed, there is no sense in trying to protect it further. They fail to recognize, however, that as long as certain aspects of that operation are secret, the other side is kept guessing as to appropriate countermeasures. Dispelling uncertainties by congressional corroboration of information available elsewhere upgrades its probable accuracy, and thus aids our foes.

In addition, the nature of diplomacy is such that a government may diplomatically ignore rumors or even public non-official discussion of the existence of a covert action, but official acknowledgment requires a strong diplomatic response or more.

Furthermore, justifying, as Mr. Hamilton does, open congressional debate of a particular covert action, because of what he views as ostensible administration confirmation of that activity, is really a ruse for torpedoing any such operation. We should bear in mind that the president does not hold a press conference each time he notifies the House and Senate intelligence committees of a new covert plan or activity.

Admittedly, there have been some unfortunate public discussions by administration and congressional officials regarding some covert operations, but frequently these slips have occurred after someone privy to that action has apparently leaked the details. That's how, for example, the past U.S. program for aiding Nicaraguan resistance forces ultimately became the most overt covert program in American history. Although no excuse for these unauthorized revelations, such disclosures make it virtually impossible for the president plausibly to ignore or deny U.S. involvement.

In short, we must protect all covert activities. Congress cannot selectively pick and choose those we want to keep secret. Terminating those we don't like by leaks, or by public congressional debate—as envisioned by Mr. Hamilton—will eventually destroy this nation's covert-action capability. Removing a foreign-policy card from the president's hand that has been played by chief executives since the days of George Washington seriously imperils this nation's security.

As we have painfully learned in our war against terrorism, we cannot go it alone in this increasingly interdependent world. We cannot expect allies to engage in joint covert operations that may be disclosed. If we cannot guarantee confidentiality to otherwise cooperative third countries, we end up perilously isolated.

Mr. Hamilton's initiative is dangerous for everyone concerned. The Hamilton Doctrine sends a signal to the Soviet Union and to our friends alike that eventually all United States covert actions worldwide could be exposed because the U.S. Congress is an unpredictable and undependable "wild card" in the intelligence process.

Such a turn of events would irreparably damage our ability to confront Soviet expansionism, not only in Africa, but in Asia, the Middle East and Latin America, with all that ominously portends for the future of the Free World.

STATUS OF THE GENEVA ARMS CONTROL TALKS: OPENING OF ROUND VI SET TO BEGIN SEPTEMBER 18

HON. DANTE B. FASCELL

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 10, 1986

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, the United States-Soviet arms control negotiations are scheduled to resume in Geneva on September 18.

After the close of Round V on June 27, President Reagan responded to the Soviet proposal in a letter to General Secretary Gorbachev. The contents of this letter have not been officially disclosed.

Following my statement is a chart containing the United States and Soviet positions on arms control issues. This update, current as of August 1986, is based on the best available information from unclassified sources.

My last statement on the "Status of the Geneva Arms Control Talks: Round V" appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of July 14 and 17, 1986. Since that time developments have occurred in the United States and Soviet positions which are highlighted as follows:

First, in the strategic area, the Soviets have suggested procedures for verification of mobile missiles, including designating deployment areas, monitoring missiles as they leave the factory, and marking rail-mobile ICBM's to distinguish them from other rail cars.

Second, in the space and defense area, the United States has proposed to forego SDI deployment for 7½ years while continuing to research, develop and test SDI technologies as permitted by the ABM Treaty. Interpretation of the ABM Treaty is not specified. If after 5 years, defenses prove feasible, the United States and the Soviet Union will undertake negotiations on managing the transition to a defense-dominated deterrent. Absent agreement 2 years after discussions begin, each side will be free to deploy defenses unilaterally on 6 months' notice. The United States declares its willingness to share the benefits of the SDI system with the Soviet Union.

The Soviet Union also proposes to stop work on the Krasnoyarsk radar if the United States stops work on two radars in England and Greenland.

Also, in the space and defense area, the Soviet Union maintains its pledge not to withdraw from the ABM Treaty for at least 15 years and limits work on SDI-type strategic defenses to laboratory research.

At the close of the last round, both sides had proposed zero long range INF systems in Europe. The Soviets proposed that SS-20's in Asia would not be increased and would be reduced contingent upon reduction of U.S. nuclear weapon systems on ships and aircraft in Asia. The United States further proposed no contraints on British and French systems while the Soviet Union proposed that Great Britain and France pledge not to build up their nuclear arsenals.

The main provisions of the United States and Soviet proposals in the strategic area include the United States proposed ceiling of 1,250–1,450 on ICBM and SLBM launchers (with freedom to mix) and a ceiling of 350 on strategic bombers. The Soviets have proposed a ceiling of 1,600 on ICBM's, SLBM's, and heavy bombers.

The U.S. position on warhead limits calls for a ceiling of 4,500 with no more than 3,000 warheads on ICBM's. The Soviets call for a ceiling of 8,000 nuclear charges, that is, warheads, gravity bombs, and long-range cruise missiles on strategic nuclear delivery vehicles, with no more than 4,800 nuclear charges on any one type of system (ICBM's, SLBM's, or bombers).

The Committee on Foreign Affairs and the Subcommittee on Arms Control will continue to monitor the progress of the Geneva arms control talks and will provide to our colleagues up-to-date analyses and comparisons of the United States and Soviet arms control proposals tabled at Geneva and related developments.

STATUS OF GENEVA NEGOTIATIONS, AUGUST 1986

Category	United States proposal	Soviet proposal
I. STRATEGIC [1] [2]
Linkage	Agreement on strategic arms should not be dependent on a resolution on space and strategic defense issues.	Strategic arms reductions are linked to agreement on space and defensive weapons.
Delivery vehicles:
Strategic ballistic missile launchers	1250–1450—ICBM and SLBM launchers, with freedom to mix	1,600—ICBM, SLBM's, and heavy bombers. The June 1986 proposal drops the earlier Soviet insistence that U.S. INF missiles and aircraft be included in the ceiling on strategic arms. The proposal reportedly does, however, call for a freeze on these systems.
Strategic bombers	350—B–52, B–1, Stealth. Bison, Bear, Blackjack, Backfire	Do.
Weapons:
Strategic missile RV's	4,500—with no more than 3,000 on ICBM's	8,000—"nuclear charges"—i.e., warheads, gravity bombs, SRAMs, long range cruise missiles (those with a range > 600km)—on strategic nuclear delivery vehicles. No more than 4,800 nuclear charges on any one type of system (ICBM's, SLBM's, or bombers).
Weapons other than ALCM's on strategic bombers	Not limited	Do.
Long-range ALCM's	1,500—Ceiling contingent on Soviet acceptance of RV and throwweight limits	Do.
Long-range SLCM's	Not limited	Ban on long-range SLCM's on surface ships.
Throwweight	6 million lbs	No direct limitation.
New systems	This is a ban on mobile missiles and new or modernized heavy missiles. Ban on Midgetman. Ban on: SS–24, SS–25, and SS–18 followon.	Ban on new types of strategic delivery systems, with "new type" reportedly intended to apply to systems not flight tested as of an unspecified date.
Verification		Procedures suggested for verification of mobile missiles, including designating deployment areas, monitoring missiles as they leave the factory, marking rail-mobile ICBM's to distinguish them from other rail cars.
II. INF [3] [4]
Europe:
United States and Soviet long-range INF (LRINF) missiles	0 P–2's, 0 GLCM's, 0 SS–20's—Global ban on all LRINF missiles. Elimination phased over 3 years, with reduction of 140 launchers in the first year, to 70 in the second, and 0 in the third. Missiles and launchers withdrawn would be destroyed. During the reduction period, the United States would reserve the right to possess a number of LRINF systems equal to the Soviet LRINF total in Europe and Asia. The excess over allowed deployments in Europe would be retained in the continental United States.	0 P–2's, 0 GLCM's, 0 SS–20's to the west of the 80° longitude—U.S. undertakes not to transfer medium-range strategic missiles to other countries. Missiles withdrawn would be destroyed.
British and French INF systems	No constraints	Great Britain and France pledge not to build up their nuclear arsenals. Whether modernization would be permitted remains unclear.
Shorter range INF missiles	Ceiling on SRINF, either at current Soviet levels, or at levels both sides had on January 1, 1982.	No limit formally proposed, but stated willingness to withdraw SRINF if U.S. P–2's and GLCM's are eliminated.
Asia: LRINF missile launchers	0 SS–20's—Reductions phased over 3 years, in proportions to SS–20 reductions in Europe.	SS–20's in Asia would not be increased. Reductions said to be contingent on reduction of the threat posed by U.S. nuclear weapon systems on ships and aircraft in Asia.
Verification	Count each side's missiles to set totals from which reductions would be made; designate deployment areas; establish procedures for monitoring production and destruction, possibly involving some on-site inspection.	Expressed willingness to agree to appropriate verification measures, including on-site inspection.
III. Space and Defense [5] [6]
Strategic defenses	Foreswear SDI deployment for 7½ years while continuing research, development, and testing as permitted by the ABM Treaty. Interpretation of the ABM Treaty left unspecified. If after 5 years, defenses prove feasible, the U.S. and U.S.S.R. will undertake negotiations on managing the transition to a defense-dominated deterrent. Absent agreement 2 years after discussions begin, each side will be free to deploy defenses unilaterally on 6 months' notice. The U.S. declares its willingness to "share the benefits of the [SDI] system" with the U.S.S.R.	Neutral pledge not to withdraw from the ABM Treaty for at least 15 years; limit work on SDI-type strategic defenses to laboratory research, "that is, the thresh-which the United States has already approached." Stop work on Krasnoyarsk radar if United States stops work on two radars in England and Greenland.
Antisatellite weapons (ASAT's)	An ASAT agreement is not in U.S. national security at this time	United States should join the ASAT testing moratorium that the Soviet Union is currently observing.
Verification	"Open laboratories" arrangement for exchanged briefings on each other's strategic defense programs, and for reciprocal visits to laboratories where the research is being conducted.	Expressed willingness to agree to necessary verification measures.

In a speech before the CPSU Central Committee on June 16, General Secretary Gorbachev acknowledged the new proposal and provided sketchy information that confirmed some of the reports that had appeared in the Western press. The proposal was subsequently discussed in the Soviet press. See, for example, New Times, July 21, 1986, in FBIS Soviet Union Daily Report, July 22, 1986, p. AA3–AA6. On verification see Gordon, Michael, Moscow Said to Signal Willingness to Work on Arms Pack Verification. New York Times, June 22, 1986, sec. 1, p. 14.

[3] The U.S. proposal described here was advanced in February 1986, in response to the Soviet proposal of January 15. Ambassador Paul Nitze presented an outline of the U.S. proposal in Negotiations on Nuclear and Space Arms, Remarks Before a Symposium at the Department of State's Foreign Service Institute on March 13, 1986, Department of State Bulletin, v. 86, May 1986, p. 50–53. In addition to the proposals to eliminate LRINF missiles, an earlier U.S. offer to freeze INF launchers at 140 reportedly remains on the table in Geneva. See, Gordon, Michael, Arms Talks Adjourn With No Gains, New York Times, March 6, 1986, p. A3. The U.S. proposal on INF verification is reported in Oberdorfer, Don and Walter Pincus, U.S. Offers Nuclear Inspection Plan, Washington Post, March 15, 1986, p. A1; A18.

FOR A DEFENSE THAT WORKS, NOT WASTE

HON. BYRON L. DORGAN

OF NORTH DAKOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 10, 1986

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, the Pentagon has darted out of the blocks to dismiss many critics of its current policies as arm-chair intellectuals who know a lot about military reform and little about combat.

But it's a bit tougher to dismiss the critique of our military policy by a former Marine colonel with combat experience. Col. David Evans, USMC retired, recently levelled his sights on seven deadly flaws of our military system. These were detailed in an article reprinted in the Grand Forks Herald of August 17, 1986.

I include the entire article for my colleagues enrichment, but I do want to highlight Colonel Evans summary argument:

A freeze on defense spending would be an appropriate first step to sort things out. Mindless buying is producing a military described by one former Army general as a "force without power" and at a cost the country cannot afford.

The article follows:

ARE WE DESIGNING FORCES THAT CAN'T WIN?—OUR OWN COMPLEX GEAR COULD BE ENEMY IN WAR

(By David Evans)

When I joined the 3rd Marine Division on Okinawa last year, I was issued brand new equipment. Helmet, pack, canteens, the works. It was the first time in two decades the Marines had ever issued me anything new. Evidence, I thought, that the huge spending increases for defense were finally having an effect. Hard goods were trickling all the way to the tip of the national security spear.

Then I tried to install the leather sweatband in the new German-style helmet made of Kevlar. The simple spring clips on the sweatband of yore had been replaced by fasteners with little metal loops. It took a good half-hour, armed with pliers and jeweler's screwdriver, to work the sweatband into the helmet.

It was obvious the designers of the new headgear were sublimely ignorant of the infantryman's rustic lot in the field, where vise-grip pliers and miniature screwdrivers are as rare as Faberge eggs.

The helmet is symptomatic of the kind of military the United States is producing. It is one rather like the British sports cars of the 1950s. Beautiful to look at, they were nevertheless cantankerous and touchy to operate. Under less than optimum conditions—like rain—their electrical systems were maddening. They stand as an apt paradigm for today's combat systems.

War remains very simple, direct, and brutal. In contrast, our latest combat systems offer baroque complexity. They require the skills of highly trained technicians to understand and maintain. As we have pushed technology, the operating tolerances of our systems have narrowed. The military is now so complex it cannot go to war without air conditioners. Not for the comfort of the troops, mind, but to keep its delicate computers from overheating. The question is whether we are overdesigning forces that cannot win wars.

Indeed, the American military system suffers from seven deadly flaws:

1. The system is not self-correcting. Instead, the American military is stuck in the rut of ingrained and comfortable habit. Too many of the lessons learned painfully years ago remain uncorrected.

When the Marines staggered out of the Chosin Reservoir 35 years ago, they said the standard five-gallon water can was too heavy for troops weakened by fatigue and cold. They suggested a three-gallon, insulated model.

In that engagement, only the simple M-1 rifle, with its loose tolerances and robust operating mechanism, could be kept working in the extreme cold. The temperamental carbine, with its shorter bolt movement, jammed frequently. The complicated Browning Automatic Rifle (BAR) tended to clog with ice, and the Marines urged "simplification of the weapon."

Few of the men who fought that bitter campaign received actual experience in cold-weather operations beforehand. Those who survived commented enviously on the white cloaks worn by the Chinese, which made them all but impossible to spot.

The situation today: White parkas are in the system. Genuine progress there. But the standard water can remains the five-gallon model, uninsulated. "How we're going to get water to the troops remains a basic, unanswered problem," one colonel told me. The M-16A2 rifle, with its close tolerances and short bolt movement, experienced significant failures in cold weather tests in 1984.

The Marines have prepositioned a brigade's worth of equipment in Norway, but they have not designated or trained a specific unit for cold-weather operations.

Whether campaigning in the snow or desert, American troops are likely to encounter Soviet tanks. Their ability to kill them remains dismal. Recall the Army's experience with Task Force Smith, the Rapid Deployment Force of its day, fighting North Korean tanks at Osan in July 1950. The forward companies were overrun because the Army's 2.36-inch bazooka lacked the punch to kill a tank from the front. Today, the infantryman's last-ditch weapon is still essentially a disposable bazooka—the M-72—which fires a warhead that remains too small to inflict a kill.

The Army seems to have forgotten that fighting is largely psychological, and that battles are oftentimes won or lost on the strength of perceptions. If an attacking tank is hit from the front and explodes, an entire armored attack may be halted. Nobody wants to burn to death. On the other hand, if the tank is hit and keeps coming, What incentive does the defending infantryman have to stand and fight?

2. We're easy targets. Three rules for battlefield survival remain unchanged since World War I: keep a low profile, stay off the skyline and spread out. The U.S. military is distinguished by its billboard profile. The standard M-923 cargo truck is a good 10 percent bigger than the M-54 truck of 1960s vintage. Yet the new truck carries the same five-ton load.

The Army's M-2 Bradley troop carrier is fully 10-feet high. Crashing through the woods at Fort Benning, it looks as big as a house.

Standing out against a neutral background is worse—troops moving along the crest of a ridge, for example. There is an electronic skyline, too. Anything that sends out electromagnetic radiation—radars and radios specifically—can reveal one's position. The need to transmit has to be balanced against the risk of detection. Instead, radios have become a convenient crutch. There are about 1,100 of them in a Marine division now, filling the air with mostly routine administrative messages, advertising our position like so many searchlights on a dark night.

Omnidirectional antennas aggravate the situation by broadcasting in every direction. Directional antennas would greatly enhance communications security. One of the more powerful tactical radios, the AN-TSC-95, does not come so equipped, and pours its 1,000 watts of power out in all directions, like one of those faceted mirrored balls that hang from discotheque ceilings. Yet a good high-gain, directional antenna can be had for a fraction of the radio's cost. Claims one signals officer, "You can buy a better antenna for the TSC-95 from Radio Shack than the one that comes with it."

Contrary to the need for dispersion, the massive and more powerful electronics tend to aggregate into large headquarters complexes. A division command post looks like an antenna farm, pumping out electromagnetic radiation, as well as heat and noise from ranks of diesel generators, fairly shouting its location.

3. We're too complicated. The virtue of simplicity runs counter to the reigning devotion to complex weapons. Although more can go wrong with complicated systems, the U.S. military is now freighted with unnecessary complexities.

The Pentagon's approach to weapons design is a major contributor. "Cost-effectiveness analysis," says one former Army officer, "tends to drive one to single-purpose weapons because of the one-on-one simulations and the fact that special-interest communities conduct the analyses." The end effect was captured in one recent report, revealing for its frankness on the matter, "All combat-vehicle programs have designed their own unique weapons stations, resulting in a significant number of single-purpose stations with unique logistics . . . heavy demands on training, and little or no interoperability or commonality . . . between different vehicles."

The Air Force and Navy have incompatible aerial-refueling systems. The Air Force flies "female" fighters; its pilots fly next to the tanker and are plugged in by the boom on the mother ship. The Navy flies "male" fighters, mounting a probe the pilot flies into the tanker's fuel receptacle. Unless both systems are mounted on the tanker, as in the case of the new hermaphroditic KC-10, or the modification kit is handy for the older KC-135, the two systems are not interchangeable.

At a more fundamental level, all the players on the battlefield are not dealing in the same units of measure. Infantry units use kilometers and meters for horizontal and vertical measure, using grid coordinates to mark locations. Pilots flying close air support for them deal in nautical miles, feet above sea level, and latitude-longitude locations.

Some aviators claim the difference is trivial, as it is easy to convert from one to the other. But why convert at all? The conversion process injects an unnecessary source of error. The military adopted 24-hour time to eliminate potential confusion. The same argument applies for problems of location.

4. There is not enough slack in the system. We are building systems where anything less than perfect execution can upset the game plan. Loose tolerances are more forgiving, especially under the terrific and often unpredictable strains of combat. The Navy's latest air-cushioned amphibious landing craft, the LCAC, is a good example of the kind of unforgiving systems now entering service. Since the LCAC is more like a helicopter with the roof off than a boat, the latest employment manual cautions that the "spotting of cargo is critical" to stay within center-of gravity limits. Three inches is the allowed tolerance. Now imagine doing this with a 60-ton tank from a heaving loading ramp at sea.

Laser-guided bombs are the current rage in high-fashion weaponry. Accurate yes, but they present unique problems. Laser spotters held by troops on the ground generate pulsed codes. These are meant to be read by a seeking device in the nose of the bomb hung under the wing of an aircraft. Yet the ground-based spotter pulses in a three-digit code while the bomb only "recognizes" a four-digit code. So, rather than having both components use the same three- or four-digit code, the bomb's coding has to be carefully translated beforehand into a three-digit equivalent.

There is absolutely no room for error here. Not only must the laser on the ground and the seeker in the air work perfectly, the pilot must be in constant radio contact with the infantryman to ensure that the ground laser is turned on at precisely the right time. If it is turned on too early, the bomb will lock on too early and fall short of the target. Moreover, since the pilot has to ride right down the laser beam, he must come in directly over the soldier's back. Thus, a bomb that falls short is likely to fall on friendly troops.

5. We are not ready for close-in fighting. The Army and Marine Corps have adopted a three-layer approach to anti-tank combat: TOW heavy anti-tank missiles for kills beyond two miles, the DRAGON medium anti-tank missile for kills at about a mile, and shoulder-launched rockets at belt-buckle range.

For these weapons, they have not invested in enough ammunition to do the job. The military does not buy munitions according to war-time need, but on the basis of what share of its peace-time budget it chooses to spend on ammunition. The planned consumption rates that result are absurdly low—in intense combat, one shot every two days for the TOW, and one shot every four days for each DRAGON, for example. "I'll shoot up my allowance in the first five minutes," said one astonished battalion commander when he was informed of these planned firing rates.

Even with adequate stocks of missiles, there are problems. The TOW can be spoofed by smoke and heat. The DRAGON is notoriously unreliable. After a decade of neglect the Army is finally moving to replace the near-useless DRAGON with an effective weapon of European design, but only for select units such as Rangers.

However, few battles are won or lost at long range. Opening fire early at long range can betray one's positions, and Rommel, a master at setting anti-tank ambushes, repeatedly inveighed against opening fire too soon for this very reason.

The nature of the battleground probably will not allow for the distant shots, anyway. Germany, for example, is heavily wooded and urbanized, and the Bundeswehr estimates 55 percent of all targets will be sighted at less than a quarter-mile. The Soviets, too, figure roughly 60 percent of all anti-tank engagements will take place within a half-mile range.

Army Gen. Frederick J. Kroesen, former commander of NATO's Central Army Group, is even more conservative. "Fog . . . and smokegenerating devices in abundance lead me to believe the next war will be won or lost at the 300-meter (fifth of a mile) range, just as in the past."

It is at this vital range that American troops are most vulnerable to the unnerving psychological impact of massed armored attacks, and where they stand virtually naked. The Army and Marines are buying the AT-4 shoulder-fired rocket to replace the M-72. It is not much of an improvement and is known among cynics as "The Paint-Scratcher" because it will not penetrate the frontal armor of modern Soviet tanks.

Effective alternatives are available. Yet the situation now is that Soviet tanks will be able to break through at close range, and then there is almost no limit to what they can do. They will create havoc in the rear, overrunning artillery units with impunity. The standard U.S. 155-mm artillery piece, although an excellent weapon for long-range fire, cannot kill tanks at close range, as it does not come supplied with anti-tank shells.

6. We are over-centralized. The swirling nature of a mechanized war of movement, slugged out at the small-unit level, calls for on-the-spot decisions. Leaders at the head of their troops will see more and react more quickly than commanders in the rear.

"There is no inspiration in the squeaking voice made dim and quavering by a mile of (telephone) wire," said Patton. But state of the art has come to mean centralized command, and a growing family of esoteric command-and-control systems are intended to push the flow of information to the rear.

This definition from a Marine Corps handbook is instructive: "Command-and-control is an active system for decision-making where decision-makers are some distance from events (emphasis added) on which their decision is based," and (significantly) "from the people who must carry it out"!

Note the shift away from officers as commanders and leaders to pallid "decision-makers" who, like wingless queen bees, are absolutely dependent on a rich flow of information from engaged troops who have more pressing matters than sending detailed reports to the rear. The big difference from the bunker generalship of the First World War is that what was once done with telephone lines now take place via radio.

The on-site, personal presence of the commander remains the greatest "force multiplier" of all. Instead, he has been pushed to the rear, snuggled up to a dozen or more radios, all broadcasting like beacons telling the enemy exactly where he is.

There are signs of change. Col. Creighton Abrams Jr., commander of the Army's 3rd Infantry Division artillery in Germany and son of the late Army chief of staff, suggests committing each artillery unit in a sector to support a designated front-line maneuver battalion. "This violates the time-honored principle of maximum feasible centralized control of artillery," Abrams admits, "but it frees up the bottleneck" of trying to control all the artillery firing from a central location. Abrams' argument for decentralization recognizes the fast-paced nature of modern maneuver combat, where there isn't time for elaborate coordination through centralized facilities far to the rear.

7. We do not push ourselves in training. The prospect of our complex systems working in battle is not likely to be discovered in peacetime, because our units and systems are rarely stressed under less than ideal conditions. Most large-scale exercises lack operational realism. Intended to orchestrate and rehearse the complicated command relationships stemming from over-centralization, the basic systems are not challenged.

"We should start field problems with a quarter instead of a full tank of gas," says one logistician, in order to pressure the supply systems from the first hours.

Despite all the Pentagon hype about Soviet numerical superiority, we do not train to deal with it. Maneuvers are typically carried out against token and hopelessly outnumbered enemy forces. Although battalion commanders are admonished they must be prepared to fight outnumbered, they practice against company-size foes. Local air superiority is taken for granted. Frequent time-out's are provided to refresh and supply units.

The ingrained and comfortable habits of peacetime exercises are not easily shed; recall that 6,500 troops were hurled against a few hundred haphazardly armed Cubans at Grenada.

Occasionally the defense establishment admits to itself things are badly amiss. Last spring the RAND Corp., a Pentagon-funded think tank, offered this confessional to its board of trustees. "The Army is currently deploying increasing numbers of technically sophisticated weapons that are hard to maintain, extremely expensive, and whose wartime demand rates are difficult to forecast." This assessment applies with equal, if not greater force, to the other armed services.

Appearances can lead to a false perception of power, and the U.S. military stands like a fine porcelain figure, good for display but best not dropped onto the hard surface of the battlefield. How did we get here? By not looking at the reality of war. "Touchy, sensitive, delicate technology has no place at the front line," asserts one Marine reserve colonel. He's right, of course, but that is what the troops have got.

Faddish jargon has become a substitute for clear and serious thinking about the underlying foundations of combat effectiveness. Poetry devoid of philosophy is merely verse, and spending absent a sound concept of national defense is simply procurement. A freeze on defense spending would be an appropriate first step to sort things out. Mindless buying is producing a military described by one former Army general as a "force without power," and at a cost the country cannot afford.

CONVERT SEES THE LIGHT ON NICARAGUA

HON. ROBERT K. DORNAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 10, 1986

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, I urge all of my liberal colleagues to carefully read the enclosed article by a repentant radical who has seen the light on Nicaragua.

Mr. David Horowitz, founder of the New Left and a leader of the first anti-Vietnam demonstrations in the Untied States, apparently has taken the time to investigate his own liberal double standards, which characteristically are soft on communism and excoriate America's allies. For Horowitz, the convoluted perception of reality which liberals embrace is most apparent in the debate on Nicaragua. As Horowitz states, "If my former comrades who support the . . . Sandinistas were to pause for a moment and then plunge their busy political minds into the human legacies of their activist pasts, they would instantly drown in an ocean of blood."

Sadly, his statement is true. Communists have left a legacy of blood, destruction, and oppression. Are we going to let this happen in Nicaragua? It is high time that others like Mr. Horowitz realize that the Soviet Union and other Communist regimes are not to be coddled or treated as moral equivalents but must be vigorously opposed before their terrible legacy can expand unchecked.

I again urge my liberal colleagues to read this article. If someone like David Horowitz can see the light, perhaps some of you will too.

(By David Horowitz)

(Following are excerpts from a speech given at the University of California in Berkeley. David Horowitz was a founder of the Vietnam Solidarity Campaign and editor of the radical Ramparts magazine. His recent book (co-authored with Peter Collier) entitled "The Kennedys: An American Drama," was on the New York Times and other best-seller lists for months. We thank Mr. Horowitz for his permission to publish these observations.)

Twenty-five years ago I was one of the founders of the New Left. I was one of the organizers of the first political demonstration on the Berkeley campus—and indeed on any campus—to protest our government's anti-Communist policies in Cuba and Vietnam. Tonight I come before you as the kind of man I used to tell myself I would never be.

I offer no apologies for my present position. It was what I thought was the humanity of the Marxist idea that made me what I was then; it is the inhumanity of what I have seen to be the Marxist reality that has made me what I am now. If my former comrades who support the (Nicaraguan) Sandinistas were to pause for a moment and then plunge their busy political minds into the human legacies of their activist pasts, they would instantly drown in an ocean of blood.

The issue before us is not whether it is morally right for the United States to arm the contras, or whether there are unpleasant men among them. Nor is it whether the United States should defer to the wisdom of the Contadora powers—more than thirty years ago the United States tried to overthrow Somoza, and it was the Contadora powers of the time who bailed him out.

The issue before us and before all people who cherish freedom is how to oppose a Soviet imperialism so vicious and so vast as to dwarf any previously known. An "ocean of blood" is no metaphor. As we speak here to-night, this empire—whose axis runs through Havana and now Managua—is killing hundreds of thousands of Ethiopians to consolidate a dictatorship whose policies against its black citizens make the South African government look civilized and humane.

A second issue, especially important to me, is the credibility and commitment of the American Left.

Today the Left dimisses . . . warnings about Soviet expansion as anti-Communist paranoia, a threat to the peace, and a mask for American imperialism. We said the same things about Truman when he warned us then. Russia's control of Eastern Europe, we said, was only a defensive buffer, a temporary response to American power—first, because Russia had no nuclear weapons; and then, because it lacked the missiles to deliver them.

Today, the Soviet Union is a nuclear super-power, missiles and all, but it has not given up an inch of the empire which it gained during World War II—not Eastern Europe, not the Baltic states which Hitler delivered to Stalin and whose nationhood Stalin erased and which are not all but forgotten, not even the Kurile Islands which were once part of Japan.

Not only have the Soviets failed to relinquish their conquests in all these years—years of dramatic, total decolonization in the West—but their growing strength and the wounds of Vietnam have encouraged them to reach for more. South Vietnam, Cambodia, Laos, Ethiopia, Yemen, Mozambique, and Angola are among the dominoes which have recently fallen into the Soviet orbit.

To expand its territorial core—which apologists still refer to as a "defensive perimeter"—Moscow has already slaughtered a million peasants in Afghanistan, an atrocity warmly endorsed by the Sandinista government.

Minister of Defense Humberto Ortega describes the army of the conquerors—whose scorched-earth policy has driven half the Afghan population from its homes—as the "pillar of peace" in the world today. To any self-respecting socialist, praise for such barbarism would be an inconceivable outrage—as it was to the former Sandinista, now contra, Eden Pastora. But praise for the barbarians is sincere tribute coming from the Sandinista rulers, because they see themselves as an integral part of the Soviet empire itself.

"The struggle of man against power is the struggle of memory against forgetting." So writes the Czech novelist Milan Kundera, whose name and work no longer exist in his homeland.

In all the Americas, Fidel Castro was the only head of state to cheer the Soviet tanks as they rolled over the brave people of Prague. And cheering right along with Fidel were Carlos Fonseca, Tomas Borge, Humberto Ortega, and the other creators of the present Nicaraguan regime.

One way to assess what has happened in Nicaragua is to realize that wherever Soviet tanks crush freedom from now on, there will be two governments in the Americas supporting them all the way.

About its own crimes and for its own criminals, the Left has no memory at all.

To the Left I grew up in, along with the Sandinista founders, Stalin's Russia was a socialist paradise, the model of the liberated future. Literacy to the uneducated, power to the weak, justice to the forgotten—we praised the Soviet Union then, just as the Left praises the Sandinistas now.

In the society we hailed as a new human dawn, 100 million people were put in slave-labor camps, in conditions rivaling Auschwitz and Buchenwald. Between 30 and 40 million people were killed—in peacetime, in the daily routine of socialist rule. While leftists applauded their progressive policies and guarded their frontiers, Soviet Marxists killed more peasants, more workers, and even more Communists than all the capitalist governments together since the beginning of time.

The Left would still be denying the Soviet atrocities if the perpetrators themselves had not finally acknowledged their crimes. In 1956, in a secret speech to the party elite, Khrushchev made the crimes a Communist fact; but it was only the CIA that actually made the fact public, allowing radicals to come to terms with what they had done.

Khrushchev and his cohorts could not have cared less about the misplaced faith and misspent lives of their naive supporters on the Left. The Soviet rulers were concerned about themselves: Stalin's mania had spread the slaughter into his henchmen's ranks; they wanted to make totalitarianism safe for its rulers. In place of a dictator whose paranoia could not be controlled, they instituted a dictatorship by directorate—which (not coincidentally) is the form of rule in Nicaragua today. Repression would work one way only: from the privileged top of society to the powerless bottom.

The year of Khrushchev's speech—which is also the year Soviet tanks flattened the freedom fighters of Budapest—is the year that tells us who the Sandinistas really are.

Because the truth had to be admitted at last, the Left all over the world was forced to redefine itself in relation to the Soviet facts. China's Communist leader Mao liked Stalin's way better. Twenty-five million people died in the "great leaps" and "cultural revolutions" he then launched. In Europe and America, however, a new anti-Stalinist Left was born. This New Left, of which I was one of the founders, was repelled by the evils it was now forced to see, and embarrassed by the tarnish the Soviet totalitarians had brought to the socialist cause. It turned its back on the Soviet model of Stalin and his heirs.

But the Sandinista vanguard was neither embarrassed nor repelled. In 1957, Carlos Fonseca, the founding father of the Sandinista Front, visited the Soviet Union with its newly efficient totalitarian state. To Fonseca, as to Borge and his other comrades, the Soviet monstrosity was their revolutionary dream come true. In his pamphlet, A Nicaraguan in Moscow, Fonseca proclaimed Soviet Communism his model for Latin America's revolutionary future.

This vision of a Soviet America is now being realized in Nicaragua. The commandante directorate, the army, and the secret police are already mirrors of the Soviet state—not only structurally but in their personnel, trained and often manned by agents of the Soviet axis.

But the most important figure in this transformation is not a Nicaraguan at all. For twenty years, from the time the Sandinistas first arrived in Havana, they were disciples of Fidel Castro. With his blessings they went on to Moscow, where Stalin's henchman completed their revolutionary course. Fidel is the image in which the Sandinista leadership has created itself and the author of its strategy. Its politburo, the comandante directorate, was personally created by Fidel in Havana on the eve of the final struggle, sealed with a pledge of millions in military aid. It was Fidel who supplied the arms with which the Sandinistas waged their battles, just as he supplied the Cuban general—Zenen Casals—who directed their victorious campaign (just as the Soviets supplied the general who directed Fidel's own victory at the Bay of Pigs). Without Castro's intervention, Arturo Cruz and the other anti-Somoza and pro-democratic contras would be the government of Nicaragua today.

And it was Fidel who showed the Sandinistas how to steal the revolution after the victory, and how to secure their theft by manipulating their most important allies: the American Left and its liberal sympathizers.

To believe in the revolutionary dream is the tragedy of its supporters; to exploit the dream is the talent of its dictators. Revolutionary cynicism, the source of this talent, is Fidel's most important teaching to his Sandinista disciples. This is the faculty that allows the comandantes to emulate Fidel himself: to be poets and hangmen at the same time. To promise democracy or organize repression, to attack imperialism and join an empire, to talk peace and plan war, to champion justice and deliver Nicaragua to a fraternity of inhumane, repressive, militarized, and economically crippled states.

"We used to have one main prison, now we have many," begins the lament of Carlos Franqui, a former Fidelista, for the paradise that Nicaragua has now gained. "We used to have a few barracks; now we have many. We used to have many plantations; now we have only one, and it belongs to Fidel. Who enjoys the fruits of the revolution, the houses of the rich, the luxuries of the rich? The comandante and his court."

The idea that Marxist revolution will mean economic benefit for the poor has proved to be the most deadly illusion of all. It is because Marxist economies cannot satisfy economic needs—not even at the levels of the miserably corrupt capitalism of Batista and Somoza—that Marxist states require permanent repression to stifle unrest and permanent enemies to saddle with the blame. This is also why Castro has found a new national product to supply to the Soviet market (a product his Sandinista disciples are in the process of developing in their turn). The product is the Cuban nation itself, as a military base for Soviet expansion.

The event that sealed the contract for this development was the moment of America's defeat in Vietnam in April 1975. This defeat resulted in America's effective withdrawal from the crucial role it had played since 1945, as the guardian of the international status quo and the keeper of its peace.

To the Soviet imperialists, America's loss was an opportunity gained. In 1975 the Kremlin began what would soon be a tenfold increase in the aid it has been providing to Cuba. Most of the aid was of military intent. Toward the end of the year, 36,000 Cuban troops surfaced in Africa, as an interventionary force in Angola's civil war. Soviet aid to Cuba tripled and then quintupled as Castro sent another 12,000 Cuban troops to provide a palace guard for Ethiopia's new dicator. Mengistu Haile Mariam, who had thrown himself into the Soviet embrace with a campaign which he officially called his "Red Terror." A year after his henchmen had murdered virtually the entire graduating class of the high schools of Addis Ababa—just the most poignant of Mengistu's 100,000 victims—Fidel presented him with a Bay of Pigs medal. Cuban socialism's highest award.

Ethiopia's dictator is only one of the international heroes who regularly pass through the Cuban base to be celebrated trained, and integrated into a network of subversion and terror that has come to span every continent of the globe. And in the Sandinista revolution Fidel's colonial plantation has produced its most profitable return: an opportunity for Moscow to expand its investment to the American land mass itself.

Nicaragua is now in the grip of utterly cynical and utterly ruthless men, exceeding even their sponsors in aggressive hostility to the United States. The Soviets may be the covert patrons of the world's terrorist plague, but not even they have had the temerity to embrace publicly the assassin Qaddafi as a "brother" the way the Sandinistas have. The aim of the Sandinista resolution is to crush its society from top to bottom, to institute totalitarian rule, and to use the country as a base to spread Communist terror and Communist regimes throughout the hemispheres.

The Sandinista anthem which proclaims the Yankee to be the "enemy of mankind" expresses precisely the revolutionaries sentiment and goal. That goal is hardly to create a more just society—the sordid record would dissuade any reformer from choosing the Communist path—but to destroy the societies still outside the totalitarian perimeter, and their chief protector, the United States.

I would like to say this to my former commrades and successors on the Left: you are self-righteous and blind in your belief that you are part of a movement to advance human progress and liberate mankind. You are in fact in a league with the darkest and most reactionary forces of the modern world, whose legacies—as the record attests—are atrocities and oppressions on a scale unknown in the human past. It is no accident that radicals in power have slaughtered so many of their own people. Hatred of self, and by extension one's country is the root of the radical cause.

As American radicals, the most egregious sin you commit is to betray the privileges and freedoms ordinary people from all over the world have created in this country—privileges and freedoms that ordinary people all over the world would feel blessed to have themselves. But the worst of it is this: you betray all this tangible good that you can see around you for a socialist pie-in-the-sky that has meant horrible deaths and miserable lives for the hundreds of millions who have so far fallen under its sway.

TROUBLE IN PARADISE: THE SOVIETS MAKE INROADS IN THE SOUTH PACIFIC

HON. WM. S. BROOMFIELD

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 10, 1986

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, the Soviet Union sees the South Pacific as a vital area into which they are projecting economic, diplomatic, and military influence. Our country must do more to protect U.S. interests in that strategic region. We must act forcefully and decisively in formulating a stronger policy for the South Pacific.

Recent events have shown that now is the time for the United States Government to do more to buttress our South Pacific foreign policy in order to keep the Russian bear out of the South Pacific. Already, a number of island nations in that area are responding to Soviet overtures. Believe it or not, the Russians have succeeded in opening the door to the South Pacific.

Using the former United States military base at Cam Rahn Bay in Vietnam, the Soviet Pacific Fleet is growing and extending its area of operations. The Soviet Union is attempting to sign fishing and port access agreements, and establish diplomatic relations with a number of South Pacific nations. Soviet influence will inevitably grow and United States will suffer in the final analysis.

Now is the time to strengthen our relations with the nations in the South Pacific. It is time for us to act quickly and firmly. That region is too important for us to ignore.

With these thoughts in mind, I commend the following speech at the Heritage Foundation by Representative BEN BLAZ of the Territory of Guam to my colleagues in the Congress.

The text of the speech follows:

RETURNING TO PARADISE: COMBATING THE SOVIET THREAT TO THE SOUTH PACIFIC

(By Representative BEN BLAZ)

The Southwest Pacific is no longer a peaceful, palm fringed preserve of American goodwill. The region, long a staunch U.S. ally, has been thrust into the global struggle by a new Soviet strategy. The South Pacific has become the newest area of superpower rivalry.

The U.S. faces a three-pronged Soviet strategy in the region. Soviet naval expansion has made their Pacific fleet their largest and gained them their long-sought goal of a warm water port at Vietnam's Cam Rahn Bay—ironically a U.S.-built port.

Politically, they are attempting to inject themselves into the region through expanded diplomatic contacts and efforts at spreading nuclear free fallacies. Those efforts are complemented by economic ploys such as so-called fishing and economic development agreements aimed at securing port access and eventualy naval and air facilities.

The Soviets are capitalizing on several trends in the region: (1) the rise in nationalistic/anti-colonial sentiment; (2) the spread of nuclear free Pacific fervor; (3) resentment over disputes with U.S. commercial fishermen; and (4) resentment with French nuclear and colonial policies. These developments threaten a major pillar of our Pacific Basin policy—strategic denial of the area to hostile outside forces.

The stakes are substantial: (1) the U.S. alliance structure in the Pacific and Southeast Asia; (2) vital sea lines of communication to U.S. allies and trading partners; (3) the right of passage and port entry for our nuclear Navy; (4) access to the natural resources of Oceania and the Indian Ocean; and (5) American prestige in the all-important Asia-Pacific era.

TWOFOLD NATURE OF THE PROBLEM

There are really two problems confronting the United States in the South Pacific: the long-term Soviet challenge in the region and the current trend of the area's nations to flirt back.

The Soviet half of the equation is easiest to understand. Soviet leaders have decided to become players in Asia and the Pacific because of the phenomenal increase in trade and development in the region and the Pacific Basin's enormous potential for future growth.

The expansion over the past decade of the Soviet Pacific Fleet—which is now the largest fleet in their navy—and the development of Soviet naval and air bases at Cam Rahn Bay are the most visible signs of this new Soviet thrust in the region.

The Soviets want to gain access and bases for their fleet and aircraft through fishing and other economic development and diplomatic agreements; and they seek to deny U.S. ships and aircraft access and bases and encouraging nuclear paranoia and underwriting extremist elements of the nuclear free Pacific movement.

The problem of South Pacific nations flirting back at the Soviets is less clearly understood. Previous Soviet attempts in the 1970s were ignored or rebuffed by South Pacific nations. But now some of these nations are responding, accepting Soviet aid and diplomatic relations, and providing port access and on-shore facilities for Soviet commercial vessels.

New Zealand has refused U.S. nuclear Navy port visits because the Labor Party there has swallowed the fatal fallacy, actively promoted by Soviet propaganda, that unilaterally banning our nuclear Navy will protect them. The United States has responded by ending New Zealand's role in the ANZUS Mutual Defense Pact.

The Republic of Kiribati is renewing its $1.5 million fishing agreement with the Soviets and may add port access to the benefits granted Soviet vessels. This agreement allows Soviet trawlers and spy ships access to the largest exclusive economic zone in the Pacific—several million square miles—and positions their spy ships to observe testing at our Kwajalein Missile Test Range in the Marshalls.

Kiribati leaders have said they entered this Russian gambit out of disgust and resentment with the U.S. failure to enter a tuna fishing rights agreement that would allow the island to collect fishing fees from U.S. tuna boats.

Vanuatu has decided to establish diplomatic ties with Cuba, Libya, and the Soviet Union as well as provide the Soviets port and on-shore facilities at Espiritu Santo (a U.S. base in World War II) in a soon-to-be-announcing fishing treaty. Vanuatu's proximity to the racially troubled French colony of New Caledonia and potential for influencing developments there are very disturbing.

Traditional friends such as Fiji also are entertaining Soviet offers of fishing treaties.

Anger with French nuclear and colonial policies has led to heightened anti-nuclear sentiment and the development of South Pacific nuclear free zones. French policies in Tahiti and New Coledonia also create resentment in the region and these anti-French feelings wash onto the United States because of the mistaken belief that we can force the French to change their policies.

The South Pacific, our World War II ally, is allowing Soviet inroads because of disillusionment with the United States and resentment with what the region's leaders see as our lack of interest in their welfare as well as disagreement over fishing policies.

In a sense, we are the victims of the passing of the Coral Sea generation. Those South Pacific leaders who remember the American servicemen, American democracy and equality, and the enormous productive power of the American economy are passing. This generation is being replaced by a younger generation which has no memory of the war-years partnership. They are more critical of our commitment to the region and want to see positive action from us to demonstrate our interest. Our reservoir of goodwill has not run out completely but we can see the end to it unless we act soon and act forcefully.

The most pressing issue is resentment with what the leaders see as years of "Jolly Roger" tactics by American tuna boat operators who refused to recognize the islands' fishery rights and would not pay fishing fees for tuna caught in the nation's exclusive economic zones—their major sources of wealth.

It would be difficult to overemphasize the deep resentment these "tuna wars" have created in the region. It is not an exaggeration to say that the current U.S. image in the South Pacific is dominated by the vision of rapacious and arrogant tuna boat operators.

Kiribati's Russian gambit is seen in the area as a direct result of the U.S. government's unwillingness to negotiate a new fishing pact recognizing these rights and fee payments.

The absence of adequate and clearly targeted U.S. financial aid to the region and the possible cut in AID funding for the next fiscal year are also a large part of the problem.

COMBATING THE SOVIET THREAT TO THE SOUTH PACIFIC

There is not much that can be done in the short term about Soviet adventurism in the region, but there is much we can do about the sudden receptivity of the region to Soviet allurements.

A complete denial of a Soviet presence in the region is not feasible or probably even desirable. We have political and economic relations with the Soviet Union, as do our closest allies. Why shouldn't the South Pacific?

Most important, we must recognize the roots of the problem in the South Pacific lie in changing leadership and the perceptions of the new regional leaders with short-term economic and political problems with the United States.

Who are these new generation leaders and what is it they seek for their nations? What do they want from the Soviets and us?

"The Pacific Way" is anti-colonial, yet conservative; traditionalist yet Christian; issues are openly debated but resolved through quiet compromise and consensus decision making.

The region is politically and culturally conservative with a strong commitment to democratic institutions and pluralistic societies. Interpersonal relationships are extremely important. Face-to-face dealings can solve problems thought unsolvable.

There is no grinding poverty, no clashing class conflicts. Families and Kin groups provide basic necessities and bind all levels of society.

The ideal leader in the Pacific Way is the person who distributes the food, goods, resources as widely and fairly as possible.

So in international perceptions and relations, South Pacific leaders tend to view issues in terms of which countries can best approach the ideal of the Pacific Way—which country will be seen as giving—or thought likely to give—the fairest payments for services or the fairest amount of aid.

In short, the Pacific Way is diametrically opposed to everything communist doctrine and practice stand for. Despite our disagreements with regional leaders, the South Pacific retains a strong affinity for Americans and American ideals. Island leaders welcome U.S. interests, involvement, and concern, especially if it is followed up with aid and trade over the long term.

Few regional leaders savor the prospects of superpower competition, but they have discovered the best way to get our attention is to flirt back at the communists.

The leaders and people of the South Pacific want to be our friends. Can we be theirs?

LESSONS FROM FREE ASSOCIATION NEGOTIATIONS

The long, complex negotiations between the U.S. and Micronesia grappled with the same basic issues we face in the South Pacific today: How to meet the conflicting needs and wants of small Pacific island nations while protecting our preeminent strategic interests in the region.

The island mini-states want independence, sovereignty, dignity as members of the world community, political stability and, most important, assured long-term economic growth so they can gain a better life for their people. The United States wants assurance of political stability and strategic denial of the area to hostile outside forces.

The outcome of 17 years of difficult negotiations with Micronesia was the U.S. recognition that there is not necessarily an inherent conflict between self-determination/economic development and strategic denial.

By our recognizing that we had a responsibility and self-interest in accepting and respecting Micronesia's sovereignty and underwriting its development, the Micronesians, persuaded by our willingness to negotiate a long-term commitment, were willing to endorse and support our strategic interests.

The South Pacific is not in the same situation as Micronesia but what I believe they are saying to us is, if we are not interested in their long-term economic well-being (beyond lip service and about $8 to $10 million a year in development aid), then they will go elsewhere for underwriters.

The essence of the free association agreement with Micronesia—a long-term, comprehensive commitment to the region's political and economic development in return for strategic denial of the area—is the solution we are seeking with the South Pacific.

I am not suggesting we enter an auction with the Soviets for the favor of the South Pacific. That leads us into a game of manipulation we should not play and does not address the real long-term needs of the region.

Nor am I suggesting we shoulder the burden alone. Whatever we do in the region, we must do it as a community effort with regional organizations like the South Pacific Forum and our major allies, especially Japan, Australia and New Zealand. This does not mean the aid cannot be bilateral and clearly marked USA.

I am not talking about huge expenditures even over the long run. There is a fundamental reality of scale here that places clear limits on the amount of aid the islands can absorb. There are about 5 million people on islands scattered over several million miles of ocean.

THOUGHTS ON AN ECONOMIC/POLITICAL STRATEGY FOR THE PACIFIC BASIN

In conclusion, I offer the following thoughts for a plan to combat the Soviet threat to the South Pacific:

(1) In conjunction with our allies, negotiate with the region a comprehensive, long-term development plan, properly scaled to the size and needs of the island nations—a South Pacific initiative that addresses immediate solutions to major stress points in our relationship with the region; conclude at the earliest possible time a fisheries treaty recognizing the EEZs and fishing fee rights of the region.

This plan should also address long range plans to better integrate, economically and strategically, the South Pacific, Micronesia, and our Southeast Asian allies.

(2) Upgrade our presence. Our physical presence in the region is minimal and that lack of constant personal contact on leadership as well as academic and people-to-people levels feeds an impression of the U.S. as unconcerned, uncaring, and uninterested in the welfare of South Pacific people.

We need to return to paradise, to rediscover the South Pacific on all levels—diplomatically and politically, with expanded cultural ties, tourism, business investment—a broad spectrum presence.

(3) Strengthen the moderate center. Expand the moderate center of the political spectrum in the region through regional approach and support. Allow moderates to bring extremist nations around through Pacific Way consensus.

(4) Clarify our nuclear position and disengage from the French connection through an expanded public displomacy effort in the region. The U.S. does not now and does not intend to dump nuclear waste, conduct nuclear tests, or store nuclear weapons in the South Pacific.

This policy conforms with the basic needs of the island states for nuclear weapons free societies.

We have little control over French actions, and if we cannot make them see their nuclear testing policy is creating strategic problems in the region, we should reevaluate our position on French nuclear testing and, if needed, clearly disassociate from their policy.

We must also seriously examine and, if necessary, clearly disassociate ourselves from French colonial policy in Tahiti and New Caledonia. The volatile situation in New Caledonia and the specter of racial war there between the indigenous Melanesians and white settlers requires us to speak out on behalf of democratic self-determination. We have an excellent, progressive record of fostering self-determination in the Philippines and Micronesia. We should not allow ourselves to be associated with French Policies that regional leaders view as colonial and regressive. We must continue to stress that any unilateral barring of U.S. nuclear forces is dangerous and destabilizing because it can generate in nations a perception of superior Soviet strength and the attendant political influence that might be gained by that perception.

HOLY CROSS CHURCH TO MARK CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION

HON. FRANK J. GUARINI

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 10, 1986

Mr. GUARINI. Mr. Speaker, Archbishop Theodore E. McCarrick, of the archdiocese of Newark, will preside and will be principal concelebrant at a mass with more than 25 priests on the altar of Holy Cross Church, Harrison, NJ, at 12 noon on Sunday, September 14, 1986, to celebrate the 100th anniversary of the dedication of Holy Cross Church building. Holy Cross is the oldest Catholic parish in the West Hudson area.

Among the cocelebrants will be the pastor, Rev. Msgr. Hugh A. O'Donnell, who will be joined by the present and former curates of the church and by 25 of the more than 40 priests who grew up in the parish. They will be coming from many different cities to participate in the celebration. Most Rev. Theodore E. McCarrick, archbishop of Newark, will deliver the homily.

Over the past century, the parish has grown in population but decreased in area. In 1868, when it was founded as a mission parish, it numbered approximately 400 families and stretched as far north as Lyndhurst. Now covering only Harrison, it serves about 1,200 families. Holy Cross is the mother church of St. Cecilia's, Kearny.

The name has also been changed. When the Mission Church of St. Pius at Third and Jersey Streets was replaced by the present imposing edifice, it was consecrated as the Church of the Holy Cross. Parish records do not reveal any reason for this name change. Served in early years by priests from St. Patrick's Pro-Cathedral, Newark, the first resident pastor was Rev. James J. McGahan, who was assigned in 1871.

He was succeeded in 1974 by Rev. Thaddeus Hogan. In 1878, Rev. Pierce McCarthy became pastor, and in 1883, Rev. Maurice P. O'Connor assumed the pastoral duties. It was during his pastorate that the present church was built, with the cornerstone being laid on the Feast of the Assumption, August 15, 1886. Father O'Connor was very active in the community affairs until his death on December 13, 1913.

In April 1914, Msgr. George J. Fitzpatrick became pastor. It was he, who, in 1928, erected the twin towers of the church which house one of the finest sets of chimes in the country, an 11-bell carillon. The present Holy Cross School was erected at Fourth and Jersey Streets in 1915 during the tenure of Msgr. G.L. Fitzpatrick.

In June 1942, Msgr. William A. Costelloe, who had been a curate at Holy Cross, became pastor. Under his administration, the extensive library was established in the school and the children's playground property was acquired.

Following the death of Monsignor Costelloe, Msgr. Harold V. Fitzpatrick became pastor in 1964. Unused for many years because of worn out parts, the chimes were restored and started ringing again on Easter Sunday of 1968. During Monsignor Fitzpatrick's pastorage, he modernized the church auditorium which included the addition of another entrance, serving both the church proper and the auditorium.

In 1972, Rev. Edwin J. Paulmann was appointed pastor of Holy Cross. All the stained glass windows, which had been originally crafted in Germany, were repaired or replaced as necessary. Father Paulmann conscientiously maintained the church building until his retirement.

Rev. Msgr. Hugh A. O'Donnell was appointed pastor in 1981. Monsignor O'Donnell has continued to make improvements on the entire physical property of Holy Cross, including the convent, the school, and the church. Recognizing the desire of the newly arriving Portuguese-speaking people to worship God in their own language, Monsignor O'Donnell was instrumental in providing a Portuguese language mass every Sunday in Holy Cross Church with the services of a Portuguese-speaking priest to meet their spiritual needs.

Holy Cross Church has helped people in their worship of God for 100 years and, God willing, will continue to do so for many years more.

I am sure my colleagues here in the House of Representatives and those former parishioners of Holy Cross Church wish to join me in paying tribute to a grand and illustrious parish.

I will close with a fervent wish on behalf of all the good people of many nationalities, supporters, and friends that the Holy Cross Church prospers and continues its good works in its second century.

FLORIDA GRAPEFRUIT HELPS "PEEL-IT-OFF"

HON. TOM LEWIS

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 10, 1986

Mr. LEWIS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, more and more physicians are agreeing that a proper diet and weight control are prime ways to reduce the overall risk of disease. Cancer, hypertension, diabetes, osteoporosis, and coronary heart disease, the Nation's No. 1 killer, are just a few of the diseases where diet appears to play an important role in prevention and control.

As health care costs, now some $400 million per year, continue to rise, nutrition is becoming of increasing concern to consumers, businesses, and legislators. Lost productivity, unfit workers, and limitations to mobility from poor health and shortened lifespans are just a few of the conditions which could respond to national nutritional diligence.

Despite increased media coverage of nutrition in recent years, Americans still struggle with achieving a healthful diet and fit lifestyle. Almost 90 percent of Americans think they weigh too much, according to Better Homes and Gardens magazine. Some 115 million are trying to diet each year. Weight problems are increasing in children, with some 10 to 15 percent of youngsters and 20 percent of teens judged to be overweight.

A telephone poll conducted by the Hearst Corp. revealed that more than half of the respondents did not know how many calories women ages 20–45 need daily. More than half of those surveyed did not know that the human body gets energy from carbohydrates, protein, and fat, or what percentage of excess pounds was necessary to be considered obese.

Americans are, by and large, nutritionally ignorant, and they are looking for more information to help them develop the healthy lifestyles they would like. A recent Food Marketing Institute study revealed that more than one-third of Americans feel supermarkets should supply nutrition information.

The Florida Department of Citrus has been a leader in providing the American public with helpful nutrition information. For more than 50 years, American shoppers have been able to learn basic nutrition principles through programs and materials sponsored by the Florida Department of Citrus.

This year, the FDOC is spearheading a new campaign to continue to encourage consumers to pay attention to their diet. It is called Peel-It-Off. This diet and fitness program is designed to motivate consumers to consider January 1987 as National Diet Month, a time to start the new year with better health habits and to undo any excesses and negligence of health indulged in during the holidays.

Florida citrus growers are proud of the nutritional quality of their fruit. Their grapefruit is an excellent source of vitamin C, potassium, B vitamins and fiber, and has only 80 calories per grapefruit.

The Peel-It-Off educational effort will promote safe and healthful eating, whatever an individual's diet and exercise plan may be. Backed by nationwide print publicity, and using a celebrity dieter to motivate consumers to take charge of their health, this intensive 1-month effort will provide much needed encouragement to the thousands of Americans who seek healthier, more productive lives.

Mr. Speaker, through my capacity as Florida's only Representative on the House Agriculture Committee, and given the importance of sound nutrition and the serious consequences to our Nation if it is neglected, I hereby submit for this RECORD this outline of the Peel-It-Off Program and urge my colleagues to support the Florida Department of Citrus' efforts to promote January as National Diet Month.

DEPUTY SECRETARY WHITEHEAD ON FOREIGN AID

HON. JIM COURTER

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 10, 1986

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Speaker, congressional budget cutting has been such that even the most traditional and essential expenditures are being called into question, and some Americans believe that foreign assistance is a good place to begin with the scissors. But as Deputy Secretary John C. Whitehead explains in the following letter, much of our foreign assistance serves more than one purpose, one of which is American national security. In many cases to cut foreign aid is to diminish the American foreign presence and endanger the bases for the American forces which are posted abroad to guarantee American security. I hope my colleagues will consider closely the arguments which Deputy Secretary Whitehead advances in this letter to the Wall Street Journal of September 3, 1986.

A SAVING THE U.S. CAN'T AFFORD

Harry Shaw (editorial page, July 15) argues that the administration has overstated the seriousness of the $5 billion cut in its request of $22.6 billion for the international-affairs functions of the fiscal 1987 budget. Mr. Shaw contends that the administration can muddle through without dire consequences if we shave "big-ticket items" such as aid to Israel, Egypt, NATO and other allies who provide military facilities to us, and assistance to Central America; and if Congress gives the administration more flexibility in allocating foreign aid.

Mr. Shaw's analysis is a strategy of retreat. By concentrating only on 1987, he neglects the broader context and trends of our diminishing resources for foreign assistance. FY 1987 is the second straight year of major budget cuts in foreign aid funds, and there is every indication that the same restrictive budgetary environment will be with us in 1988 and beyond. The question is not whether we can adjust to a single year's budget problem—we could—but whether we can afford continuing erosion of the vital U.S. security interests that sustained lower foreign assistance levels will bring about.

Mr. Shaw mistakenly assumes that countries providing us military facilities will accept without question the deep reductions he contemplates. Our friends see their interests clearly—and they must now measure them in an environment of declining benefits of cooperating with the U.S. and rising costs in terms of threats to their security.

Our development and security assistance requests for $16.2 billion in 1987 serve interrelated and crucial objectives:

—34% would go to Israel and Egypt, reinforcing our search for Mideast peace.

—26% would go to base-rights countries such as the Philippines, Greece and Turkey, and military-access states such as Kenya, Korea and Pakistan.

—11% would go to Central America and the Caribbean.

—17% would go to countries who share our democratic values such as Colombia and India; where new democracies have emerged such as Bolivia and Uruguay; and where basic economic reforms are occurring such as Ecuador and Senegal.

The funding cuts that Congress would have us absorb would require us to turn our backs on critical countries in Africa and the Middle East when their need for U.S. support has never been greater. The resulting void in strategic areas encourages our adversaries to fill in behind us.

It would cost the U.S. many times the $800 million Mr. Shaw claims we would save to replace the bases we could lose by "shaving" our security assistance. The political costs are equally daunting. Standing with the U.S. and supporting Western security interests can be risky. How do we explain to Egypt and Morocco that budget cuts are "inevitable" in light of the dangers they face because they are working with the U.S. toward peace in the Middle East? If countries support publicly U.S. interests and in return see they must stand alone as we work out our sums in the budget game Mr. Shaw would have us play, how can we advance our foreign-policy interests?

JOHN C. WHITEHEAD,
Deputy Secretary, State Department.

COMMEMORATIVE GOLD AND SILVER COINS IN CELEBRATION OF THE 100TH CONGRESS

HON. DANTE B. FASCELL

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 10, 1986

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, in January 1987, the 100th Congress of the United States will convene. This occasion will be a milestone not only for this institution, but for American constitutional and representative Government. Our two-century experiment in democracy has revealed that the legislative branch, especially the House of Representatives, is what one Member called "a mirror in which the American people can see themselves."

Like the U.S. population, Congress has exhibited tremendous historical growth in its size and workload. The Senate's size is, of course, fixed by the number of States regardless of population; in fact, this is the only provision of the Constitution which cannot be altered without the express consent of all the States. Through the 19th century, the House expanded somewhat erratically, with its greatest periods of growth occurring in the first two decades of the Republic and again immediately following the Civil War. Both Houses have apparently attained their ultimate size: since 1910, only Alaska and Hawaii have been added, and the House has remained constant at 435 Members—with a brief interval at 437 immediately following the admission of Alaska and Hawaii.

Looking at the first Congress through modern eyes, one is struck by the relatively small circles of people involved. The House of Representatives, that "impetuous council," was in 1789 composed of 65 Members—when all of them showed up. The aristocratic Senate boasted only 26 Members, two from each of the original 13 States.

Growth has profoundly affected the work of Congress. It compelled the House to develop strong leaders, to rely heavily on its committees, to impose strict limits on floor debate, and to devise elaborate ways of channeling the flow of floor business. It is no accident that strong leaders emerged during the House's rapid growth periods. After the initial growth spurt of the first two decades of the Republic, vigorous leadership appeared in the person of Henry Clay, whose speakership—1811–14, 1815–20, 1823–25—demonstrated the potential of that office. Similarly, post-Civil War growth was accompanied by an era of strong speakers lasting from the 1870's until 1910. Size is not the only impetus for strong leadership, but it tends to centralize procedural control.

In the smaller and more intimate Senate, the evolution has been more gradual. The relative informality of Senate procedures, not to mention the long-cherished right of unlimited debate, testify to the loose reins of leadership. Compared with the House's elaborate system of rules and precedents, the Senate's rules are relatively brief and simple. Informal negotiations among Senators interested in a given measure prevail, and debate is typically regulated by unanimous-consent agreements engineered by the parties' floor leaders.

This spectacular growth—in number of people and in bricks and mortar—has profoundly altered the operation of Congress as a representative assembly. Whereas once Members dealt with each other directly on a daily basis when Congress was in session, they often interact today through staff aides and complicated organizational arrangements. Informal relationships have been replaced by rules, procedures, and precedents. In short, Congress has shifted perceptibly from a small, unified, corporate body to one that has a bureaucratic character—with all of the trappings of size, complexity, specialization, and routinization.

During the Republic's early days, the Government at Washington was, as the authors of Federalist 22 put it, "at a distance and out of sight." Lawmaking was a part-time occupation. As President John F. Kennedy was fond of remarking, the Clays, Calhouns, and Websters of the 19th century could afford to devote a whole generation or more to debating and refining the great controversies at hand. During the 1920's, as recalled by Representative Joseph W. Martin, of Massachusetts, the most pressing issue considered by the Foreign Affairs Committee during one session was a $20,000 authorization for an international poultry show in Tulsa, OK.

Even in the 1950's, the legislative schedule was quite manageable, as indicated in Speaker Samuel Rayburn's description of a Representative's ideal day's activities:

The average Member will come down to the office around 8 or 8:30. He spends his time with visitors until around 10 o'clock, then he goes to a committee meeting, and when the committee adjourns he comes to the House of Representatives, or should, and stays around the House Chamber and listens.

Needless to say, the days of a single morning committee hearing and time to witness the entire floor proceedings in the afternoon are long gone. Conflicting committee sessions and snatches of floor deliberations are now the order of the day.

Congress' workload—once limited in scope, small in volume, and simple in content—has grown to staggering proportions. In general, the number of measures introduced and passed has risen, as has the number of committee and subcommittee meetings and the number of hours Congress is in session. By every measure—hours in session, committee meetings, floor votes—the congressional workload just about doubled in the 20 years between 1957 and 1977, though it has since declined.

In the face of a workload expanding both in quantity and breadth of subject matter, Congress responded by restricting the depth of its involvement—mainly by concentrating on fewer but more complex issues; it delegated more decisions to executive-branch agents, and shifted its own role to that of monitor, vetoer, and overseer. The proliferation of reporting requirements, legislative approval and veto provisions, and oversight activities testified to this strategic shift. Congress eventually countered this heightened dependence upon the Executive in the wake of the Vietnam and Watergate crises by striving to regain control it had delegated away. This legislative resurgence, marked by the 1973 war powers resolution and the 1974 Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act, has substantially restrained the tendency toward Presidential excess.

Embracing John Locke's doctrine that "the legislative is not only the supreme power, but is sacred and unalterable in the hands where the community have placed it," the Constitution vests all legislative powers in Congress, the first branch of Government. The breathtaking array of powers granted to the legislative branch reflects the framers' view of the legislature as the chief repository of governmental powers. Article I, section 8, of the Constitution, which enumerates Congress' powers, expresses the framers' vision of a vigorous legislature as a keystone of energetic government.

Raising and spending money for governmental purposes lies at the heart of Congress' prerogatives. The "power of the purse" was the lever by which parliaments historically gained bargaining advantages over kings. The Constitution's authors, well aware of this, gave Congress full power of the purse. There are two components of this power: taxing and spending.

Financing the Government is carried out under a broad mandate in article I, section 8: "The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, impost and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States." Although this wording covered all known forms of taxing, there were limitations: taxes had to be uniform throughout the country; duties were prohibited on goods traveling between States; and "capitation * * * or other direct" taxes were prohibited, unless levied according to population, article I, section 9. This last provision proved controversial, especially when the Supreme Court held in 1895—Pollock versus Farmers' Loan and Trust Co. that it applied to taxes on incomes. To overcome this confusion, the 16th amendment, ratified 18 years later, explicitly conferred the power to levy income taxes.

Congressional power over Government spending is no less sweeping than revenue power. According to article I, section 9, "No money shall be drawn from the Treasury, but in consequence of appropriations made by law." This is one of the legislature's most potent weapons in overseeing the executive branch.

Congress possesses potentially broad powers over the Nation's economic and political well-being. It may coin money, incur debts, and regulate commerce. It may establish post offices, build post roads, and issue patents and copyrights. It has the duty of specifying the size of the Supreme Court and of establishing lower Federal courts. It has the power to provide for a militia and call it forth to repeal invasions or suppress rebellions.

Congress plays a key role in foreign relations with its sole powers of declaring war, ratifying treaties, raising and supporting armies, providing and maintaining a navy, and making rules governing the military forces. Finally, Congress is vested with the power "to make laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers," article I, section 8.

Article I established two legislative bodies: the House of Representatives, section 2, whose powers were to be derived from the American people; and the Senate, section 3, whose powers were to be derived from the States. In this sense, as explained in Federalist 39, the House of Representatives would be a national body, the Senate a Federal body. Article I of the Constitution assigned Congress a mix of attributes, some national in character, some of a Federal character. The multiple character of congressional powers contributed to a ratification consensus, as well as to the elaborate system of checks and balances woven throughout the Constitution.

This constitutionally endowed dual character, national and Federal, shapes Congress' central challenge or dilemma. Congress is charged with two great functions, representation and legislation, which are not always neatly compatible. There are times, for both individual Members of Congress and the institution as a whole, when tension ensues from our efforts to serve as both a representative assembly and a law-making body. Inevitably there are occasions when the short-term attitudes or priorities of our individual constituencies are in conflict with long-range national interests. The difficulty in objectively assessing long-range interests further complicates the dilemma of formulating responsible public policy while expressing the concerns of our geographic constituencies.

In our 200 years of constitutional democracy, the United States has matured from a largely homogeneous agrarian Nation of seemingly endless natural frontiers to an increasingly heterogeneous industrial, technological and cultural international leader. Congressional actions more often have paved the way for individual and national progress and recognized the need for concerted action in response to constituent, Federal, national, and international problems.

In the House of Representatives, planning and direction for the coming bicentennial commemoration is in the hands of the Commission on the U.S. House of Representatives Bicentenary, created in 1985 and chaired by our colleague, LINDY BOGGS. Implementing these plans will be the responsibility of the Office for the Bicentennial of the House of Representatives, under the direction of Dr. Raymond W. Smock. These are being aided by experts from the Congressional Research Service, the Senate Historical Office, and other agencies.

The coming bicentennial celebration is not only an occasion for praising the Founders' wisdom and taking comfort from the success of our achievement. It is also an opportunity to reflect seriously on the continuing challenges that face our legislative institutions. It is sobering to remember that our Congress, based on 18th century principles of representation, was created for a world very different from the one we live in today. Far older than most of the world's present governments, our constitutional structure was invented before the industrial revolution, before mass production and space flight, before computers and television, before penicillin and genetic engineering and before Hiroshima and Auschwitz.

The survival of this representative system shows its resilience in the face of such changes. Yet people have always questioned whether representative assemblies, composed of generalists elected from separate geographic areas, can cope with the vexing challenge of finding and expressing the common good. In many respects, today's challenges are more awesome, and the margin of error more narrow, than at any time in our history.

In the coming weeks I will present a series of statements reflecting on the 100th Congress. These statements will recall the first Congress, will highlight some of the most memorable achievements during the first 99 Congresses, and will address Congress' present state and future role. The 100th Congress provides a particularly appropriate occasion for us to reflect and contemplate this institution's past and future efforts to fulfill its constitutional charge.

As we in Congress and citizens throughout the Nation begin our celebration of this historic event, it is particularly appropriate that the Congress authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to mint a gold coin in commemoration of the 100th Congress. This legislation, which I am introducing today, will authorize the minting and issuing of both $5 gold coins and $1 silver coins in commemoration of the 100th Congress. These coins are to be used as legal tender, and the design on the coins will be selected in consultation with the Commission of the Fine Arts. I hope that you will join me in cosponsoring this historic commemorative legislation honoring this great legislative body.

CRUSADE AGAINST DRUG ABUSE

HON. MELVIN PRICE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 10, 1986

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to submit, for the RECORD, the best five essays on drug abuse written by sixth grade students from the 21st Congressional District of Illinois. I would also like to commend the teachers for their devotion and patience in educating and developing our youth of today for their future of tomorrow.

Monte Cope, East Middle School, Alton, IL.

What I would do if offered drugs:

If someone offered me drugs, I would say "no!" I don't want to ruin in my life what a lot of people have ruined in theirs. I want to keep my life as healthy as possible. I don't want to destroy what I've got. If I'm lonely, I play with my puppies. If I'm upset or unhappy I talk to my mom. If someone should offer you drugs, say "No" to drugs and "Yes" to your life!

As a good citizen, how I can help my community:

I would like to help my community by telling children and parents about how dangerous drugs can be. I'd set up a drug abuser plan. If a person needs help, they can call a number and make an appointment. I'd try to give them help. We should make drug detectors and search forests, abandoned houses, club houses and old hangouts for drugs and make more shows like Miami Vice.

Leslie Stavely, Parkview Elementary School, Granite City, IL.

What I would do if offered drugs:

If I was offered drugs, I would say NO! If you take drugs, you're just wasting your life away. You're killing your self everytime you take that one little puff, or that one little pill. So if anybody tries to push me into taking drugs, I would say NO!

As a good citizen, how I can help my community:

As a good citizen, I can help my community by not taking drugs. If I knew anyone who took drugs, I would encourage them to try to quit. I would help them in their hard times. I would also encourage my friends to say NO!

Rebecca Thompson, Webster Elementary School, Collinsville, IL.

What I would do if offered drugs:

If I were offered drugs as many of my peers have, I would say NO. That's all. Sometimes people take NO for an answer without any questions. I've never been offered drugs before but people who take them think they've escaped their problems. I think drugs stink!

As a good citizen, how I can help my community:

As a good citizen of Collinsville I'd look around to see if anyone is using drugs. If they are, I turn them in immediately. I wouldn't want a high teen-ager behind the wheel of a car, killing some innocent person. It happens much too often.

Dawn Renee Pattison, St. Boniface School, Edwardsville, IL.

What I would do if offered drugs:

If offered drugs, I'm probably one person who could honestly say "no." I like my life the way it is. I don't need it messed up by something artificial. Love is all we need, and if more people knew that, then who knows how much better the world would be.

As a good citizen, how I can help my community:

I could help my community by passing flyers out at the carnivals and public places. I could also put up a display at the library with my friends. Another thing I could do is to keep my friends from doing drugs

Noël Howard, Rosewood School, E. Alton, IL.

What I would do if offered drugs:

If someone told me drugs were neat,
And they'd give me a feeling nothing could beat,
I'd tell them "No!" and go away,
Then I'd leave, that's all I'd say.
I don't think it's "cool" to take coke or pot. . . .
You'd just be the dope you are taking or got!

As a good citizen, how I can help my community:

To be a good citizen, I'd try to help out
By obeying laws and going about
Helping my community stay clean.
I won't vandalize and won't be mean,
I want my community to be nice and fit.
Since it helps me, I'll help it.

SOME BANKS SUPPORT CREDIT CARD RATE DISCLOSURE

HON. GEORGE C. WORTLEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 10, 1986

Mr. WORTLEY. Mr. Speaker, the Financial Institutions Subcommittee of the Banking Committee recently approved legislation that requires detailed disclosure of interest rates and fees in all bank credit card solicitations.

This legislation will provide long overdue protection to the consumer, and it is interesting to note that a number of financial institutions are supporting this approach.

I recently came across an op-ed column by John R. Underwood, president of the First Wisconsin Bank of Green Bay, supporting credit card disclosure legislation introduced by Representative TOBY ROTH, one of the principal authors of the legislation accepted in the Banking Committee.

The text of the article follows:

[From the Green Bay (WI) Press-Gazette, July 26, 1986]

DISCLOSURE LAW NEEDED FOR CREDIT CARD SOLICITORS

(By John R. Underwood)

Last year, the average Wisconsin family received 18 solicitations for MasterCard or Visa bank credit cards from out-of-state credit card issuers.

To date, about 15 percent of the state's households have accepted those offers. But how many knew the costs they were incurring when they signed up for an out-of-state credit card?

These solicitations typically opened with the exciting pronouncement, "A new credit card with a $5,000 credit line has been reserved in your name."

Very few of these solicitations included information on the annual fee charged for the card, its interest rate or any other charges involved. These consumers were not informed of the cost of the cards until they had agreed to accept one. Does that sound like a good business practice to you?

We at First Wisconsin, along with many other Wisconsin financial institutions, think that's putting the cart before the horse. People should be informed of how much a credit card is going to cost them before they decide whether to take it.

That's why we support a bill proposed by Rep. Toby Roth, R-Wis., that would require earlier disclosure of credit card costs.

The current disclosure law, the Truth in Lending Act, in effect enables credit card issuers to "close the sale" before stating the terms of the agreement, which typically include higher interest rates and annual fees than can be obtained locally.

Roth has introduced a bill that would require the creditor to clearly disclose the costs involved in all applications or solicitations for a credit card plan.

Consumers deserve to be given all pertinent information regarding open-end credit card plans up front, and the information should be stated in easily understandable terms. This information should include annual interest rates, annual fees and any other charges the card may carry.

As it stands, Wisconsin is the only state in the nation to have a law (Act 244) requiring the formal disclosure of credit information on every application or solicitation for an open-end credit plan. This also includes applications in an advertisement.

Wisconsin's law will require the disclosure of annual interest rates, annual fees and any other costs of the card. The requirements of Act 244, which goes into effect Jan. 1, 1987, will apply to all credit card issuers doing business in the state.

But the state faces an uphill battle in trying to get out-of-state credit card issuers to comply with its requirements when soliciting in Wisconsin.

As it is, they have managed to get around the disclosure requirements outlined in the federal Truth in Lending law by keeping their solicitations—usually direct mail offers—very vague. By not stating any credit terms at all, they are not subject to disclosure requirements.

By not stating the costs involved up front, these issuers make their cards sound appealing, persuading customers to sign up for them even though they may already carry a bank credit card and may be ill-advised to apply for additional credit.

Roth's bill currently is being reviewed by the House Consumer Affairs and Coinage subcommittee, which is expected to pass on the bill, or a variation, for further consideration by the House.

Congress is said to be inclined to pass a bill requiring more stringent disclosure laws. Such a bill is expected to be passed by Oct. 1.

We hope consumers will be more aware of the dangers of overextending their credit if they are informed of all the costs a credit card imposes before they sign up for the card. We urge Congress to follow the lead of Wisconsin in requiring early and easily understood disclosure of credit card costs.

A TRIBUTE TO THE INFORMATION CENTER FOR HANDICAPPED INDIVIDUALS

HON. WALTER E. FAUNTROY

OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 10, 1986

Mr. FAUNTROY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring to the attention of my colleagues the work of the Information Center for Handicapped Individuals, Inc. [ICHI] a public interest, community-based, nonprofit agency designed as the protection and advocacy system for both developmentally disabled individuals and individuals with mental illness, who reside in the District of Columbia, as mandated by Public Law 98-527 and Public Law 99-319, respectively.

The information center has had, as its primary purpose since its inception in 1969, the representation of, and advocacy for, the interests, needs, and rights of handicapped individuals.

On September 12, 1986, the Information Center for Handicapped Individuals will hold its annual conference at the Washington Convention Center. This year's theme is "Expanding the Commitment to Advocacy."

Dr. Jean Elder, Acting Assistant Secretary, Office of Human Development Services, U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, is the keynote speaker, and will set the tone for the conference. Morning panelists also include Ms. Audrey Rowe, commissioner, commission on social services, and Dr. Reed Tuckson, acting commissioner, commission on public health, DC Department of Human Services.

The morning workshops will address issues in special education; the AIDS crisis; and client assistance in vocational rehabilitation. Afternoon workshops will focus on special education, employment discrimination, and Social Security disability. The luncheon speakers include Ms. Cathy Hughes, president and general manager of WOL-AM; and Mr. Steven Schwartz, Esq., director for the Center of Public Representation.

The first annual Roland J. Queen, Sr. Memorial Award will be presented to Mr. Vincent Gray, executive director of the District of Columbia Association for Retarded Citizens. Ms. Angela Owens, editorial director of WRC-TV4 News, is to be mistress of ceremonies. Ms. Eva Britt, Ms. Wheelchair D.C. 1986, will also be in attendance.

The executive director of the Information Center for Handicapped Individuals, Inc. is Mrs. Yetta W. Galiber. Under her direction, the center produces the following publications: the Directory of Services for Handicapped Conditions, a contemporary and exhaustive directory of services for handicapped conditions; Access Washington, a guide to metropolitan Washington for physically disabled individuals containing information on accessibility of recreation facilities, restaurants, sites of interest, and theaters; and Here Comes the Sun, a directory of summer programs for handicapped children and adults.

In 1971, Mrs. Galiber initiated the Christmas Store for needy handicapped children. Last year, more than 8,000 children came to the store and purchased toys with play money. The center also sponsors the Ms. Wheelchair D.C. Pageant, which recognizes the accomplishments of disabled women in the District of Columbia, despite the attitudinal and architectural barriers which confront them.

The information center is planning a fundraising campaign next spring. I urge all my colleagues and the residents of the District of Columbia, its business and industries, to join me by helping to raise the consciousness of this Capitol City, by supporting the information center's efforts, so the center can expand and continue its fine work.

BIRMINGHAM SOUTHERN'S NEAL BERTE NAMED "DISTINGUISHED LEADER"

HON. BEN ERDREICH

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 10, 1986

Mr. ERDREICH. Mr. Speaker, the president of Birmingham-Southern College, Dr. Neal Berte, is well known across the State of Alabama, as well as nationally, for his selfless dedication to the education of our young people. He has taken a leadership role in improving even further an already highly regarded liberal arts school. During his tenure, Birmingham-Southern has doubled its enrollment, doubled its endowment to some $22.5 million, raised more than $30 million in new moneys to fund capital improvements and general college needs, and been cited in several national publications for the excellent educational opportunities it offers.

Dr. Berte has been the recipient of many academic honors and awards, including a Ford Foundation Scholar, Rockefeller Foundation Fellow, and Omicron Delta Kappa National Scholarship winner. He was selected from literally thousands who were nominated for consideration as one of this Nation's top 100 emerging leaders in higher education in a national survey by the American Council on Education and Change Magazine, and named college "Administrator of the Year" in Alabama by the American Association of University Administrators in 1981.

But while Neal Berte is noted for his impressive academic and professional background, the educational community is not alone in reaping the benefits that are offered by his zeal for learning and zest for life. Dr. Berte somehow manages to make time in an all-too-busy schedule to serve on a number of civic and community-oriented organizations, including chairing the Steering Committee for Leadership Birmingham, serving as board member for the Boy Scouts, Alabama Symphony, Chamber of Commerce, Operation New Birmingham, the Jefferson-Shelby Counties Lung Association, the National Conference of Christians and Jews, and the American Heart Association, to mention only a few.

In recognition of his commitment to community involvement, Dr. Berte was selected to receive yet another award, the "Distinguished Leader's Award," which was presented to him by the National Association of Community Leadership Organization (NACLO) at its annual conference in Indianapolis on September 7-9.

Our fate as a Nation may well depend on how prepared our young people will be to face the challenges that will surely lie before them in the years to come. Dr. Neal Berte has been, and remains, totally committed to making certain that our youth receive the best education possible. And the priority he places on community involvement is a shining example to our young people of the importance of volunteerism and community service.

All of our lives have been made better as a result of Dr. Neal Berte's educational and community involvement. I am certain my colleagues in the House join me in congratulating him for his selection to receive the "Distinguished Leader's Award," and commending him for his good work.

BOROUGH OF SPOTSWOOD, NJ, ENDORSES PRESIDENT'S COUNTERTERROR ACTION

HON. JIM COURTER

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 10, 1986

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Speaker, the bloody crimes of several days ago in Pakistan and Turkey should remind us just how long Europe has been quiet. That period of calm began on April 14 when, after years of provocation, President Reagan ordered retaliation for Libyan-assisted international terrorist attacks. The subsequent respite we won was well deserved.

But the air raid on Libya was somewhat controversial. Many American opinionmakers reiterated the view that it would only bring bloodier counterattacks, and the Arab opinion would rally to the side of Colonel Qadhafi. Some of us argued then—and we can certainly tell now—that none of that is true. The air raid was a sweeping success, and if Libya or other states perpetuate their politics of murdering innocent civilians to make "political statements" then another like it might become necessary.

Among those who saw events clearly after April 14 were the county officers of the Borough of Spotswood in Middlesex County, NJ. I wish to record their view—and their vision—by submitting for today's RECORD the text of the resolution they approved in a meeting of May 1986, and forwarded to me under the signature of Reggie Pasterczyk, clerk of the borough.

RESOLUTION

Whereas, acts of terrorism around the globe present a continuing threat to all innocent world residents, and

Whereas, acts of the Libyan government have not only condoned, but have actually fostered global terrorism; and

Whereas, our President, Ronald Reagan, has taken necessary and warranted action to express our Country's complete opposition to terrorist acts; and

Whereas the citizens of Spotswood, as part of the world community strongly support the actions of our President: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, by the Borough Council of the Borough of Spotswood, County of Middlesex, New Jersey, That:

1. We fully support the actions of our President in dealing with Libya; and

2. Copies of this resolution be sent to President Reagan, Senator Bradley, Senator Lautenberg and Congressman Courter.

SOUTH FLORIDA-NEVADA LAND EXCHANGE

HON. DANTE B. FASCELL

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 10, 1986

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I have asked our colleague from Nevada, BARBARA VUCANOVICH, to add my name as a cosponsor of H.R. 5435, legislation to authorize an exchange of lands owned by the Aerojet Corp. in south Dade County, FL, for federally owned lands in Nevada. The Florida lands would then be sold to the South Florida Water Management District, with the proceeds to be used for land acquisition in U.S. wildlife refuges in Florida.

This land exchange would appear to be good for all concerned. Aerojet would gain land it needs to proceed with rocket development for our Nation's defense; the Department of the Interior will obtain revenue for the purchase of lands necessary for the preservation of endangered wildlife; and the State of Florida will become owner of property immediately east of Everglades National Park which could otherwise have been subject to development. It is my understanding that the water management district, which administers the central and southern Florida flood control project for the Army Corps of Engineers, plans to flood this area as a means of relieving excess water in the park.

Mr. Speaker, all of these uses are laudable and for the public good and it is for this reason that I am cosponsoring the legislation. However, I do want to go on record as expressing my sincere hope that nothing in this legislation should be interpreted as an intent to reduce or eliminate flood protection for agricultural or residential properties in the area. Forty percent of the Nation's winter tomatoes are grown by four companies on land north of that being exchanged. These companies were formerly located in the area known as the Hole-in-the-Doughnut of Everglades National Park and were asked to leave by the Department of the Interior following a determination, with which I agreed, that farming was not a compatible activity in the park. However, having relocated some 10 to 15 years ago, there remains nowhere else for these growers to go should their land become unarable as a result of increased water levels caused by flooding to the south.

Not only would this be an infringement of private property rights—an issue on which the growers have already sought judicial relief—but a substantial amount of our Nation's winter tomato supply would be gravely affected. Those administering the lands to be acquired must work in a spirit of cooperation to ensure that an action that has great benefit for one natural resource does not cancel itself out by adversely impacting on another.

RETIREMENT OF MAJ. GEN. JACK WATKINS

HON. ROBERT J. LAGOMARSINO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 10, 1986

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, few functions of the Federal Government are as important as our national defense, and few organizations have contributed as significantly to our national defense as the U.S. Air Force Strategic Air Command. For the past 6 years, the 1st Strategic Aerospace Division of SAC, headquartered at Vandenberg Air Force Base, CA, has been commanded by Maj. Gen. Jack L. Watkins. This year, General Watkins will step down after 35 years of service in the U.S. Armed Forces.

During his years of command at Vandenberg, General Watkins has led the base to numerous awards from the Department of Defense and the Air Force. In addition, he and his wife, Mary Ann, have been heavily involved in local community support and activities. Under his direction, the Central Coast United Way raised a record amount of contributions for public service agencies in Santa Barbara County, and relations between the base and the local communities of Lompoc and Santa Maria, as well as the County of Santa Barbara, reached even higher levels of cooperation and mutual support. Indeed, Vandenberg under General Watkins and his predecessors has been more than a neighbor, it is an integral part of the community and the 19th District of California.

As commander of "I STRAD," as it is known, General Watkins is responsible for directing all SAC missile combat crew training; controlling and conducting SAC ballistic missile operational testing; and providing host base support for all tenants at Vandenberg, including Air Force Systems Command, Military Airlift Command, and Air Force Communications Command.

General Watkins, a native of Pittsburgh, PA, entered the army in 1946, qualifying as a parachutist and gliderist before separating in 1948 to attend college. He was recalled to active duty during the Korean conflict and served with antiaircraft units as a battery executive officer and commander in the United States and Germany before returning to the University of Pittsburgh and receiving his bachelor's degree in 1954. In 1955, he received a direct commission as a lieutenant in the U.S. Air Force, graduated from pilot training and served until 1961 with the Tactical Air Command and Military Air Transport Service. Subsequent assignments included headquarters U.S. Air Force in Washington, DC; Bolling Air Force Base; U.S. Army Command and General Staff College; Joint Task Force Two in Albuquerque, NM; Industrial College of the Armed Forces; professor of aerospace studies at the University of Pittsburgh; and vice commandant, Air Force Reserve Officer Training Corps.

In 1973, he was named vice commander and acting commander of the 416th Bombardment Wing, K.I. Sawyer AFB, MI, and in 1974 commanded the 416th Bombardment Wing at Griffiss AFB, NY. In 1975, he assumed command of the 45th Air Division at Pease Air Force Base, NH, before being assigned to SAC headquarters at Offutt AFB, NE, where he served as deputy chief of staff, operations. In 1979, General Watkins became vice commander, 15th Air Force, with headquarters at March AFB CA, assuming command at Vandenberg in November 1970.

General Watkins is a command pilot with more than 10,000 flying hours in 26 different types of aircraft. He wears the master missile, gliderist, parachutist, and space badges. His military decorations and awards include the Legion of Merit with two oaks leaf clusters, Meritorious Service Medal, Joint Service Commendation Medal, and Air Force Commendation Medal.

Mr. Speaker, the residents of the 19th District are proud of the record of Vandenberg AFB under General Watkins, and grateful for the role he has played both as base commander and active citizen in the local community. We wish Jack and Mary Ann well in their future endeavors, and know that they will continue to have many valued friends and associations in the community they have served so well. In conclusion, I would like to add my own thanks and that of my wife Norma in appreciation to our friends Jack and Mary Ann for their many years of service to our country in both their public and private roles. I know my colleagues in the Congress join me.

NATIONAL CPR AWARENESS WEEK

HON. STAN PARRIS

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 10, 1986

Mr. PARRIS. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a joint resolution to designate the week of October 19 through 25, 1986, as "National CPR Awareness Week." By focusing public awareness on this simple first aid procedure, we could reduce the number of heart attack deaths by promoting the CPR training program in the United States.

Heart attacks are the leading cause of death in the United States, and as many as 1.5 million people will suffer a heart attack in 1986. I am sorry to say that nearly half of these people will die. Cardiopulmonary resuscitation is a life-saving procedure and it could prevent many of these deaths, if only more people knew how to perform it. With the success that fire and rescue departments and many trained individuals have had in saving lives that would otherwise have been lost due to heart attacks, it is vital that we maximize public participation in CPR training.

National CPR Awareness Week is an ideal way to encourage more people to sign up for CPR training classes. I urge my colleagues to join me by supporting this resolution which will help State and local heart associations work with the public to reduce the number of heart attack deaths in our country.

A TRIBUTE TO GEORGE AND GLADYS BROOKS

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 10, 1986

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, this coming weekend, the National Commission on Human Rights for our Prisoners of War and Missing in Action in Southeast Asia are going to honor two outstanding Americans who have devoted their lives to assuring that our missing heroes in Southeast Asia are not forgotten.

In fact, it is no exaggeration to state that no one has done more for this cause than have George and Gladys Brooks of New Windsor, NY.

George and Gladys became involved in the cause of our POW/MIA's during the early 1970's; in fact, while the Vietnamese conflict was still in progress. They kept the issue alive before the Nixon administration, and at that time cofounded the National League of Families. It was through their efforts that the majority of American prisoners were freed in Janaury 1973.

Throughout the Ford and Carter administrations, the Brooks' continued their commitment, traveling to and from Washington at their own expense to remind our Nation of the need for a full accounting. They even travelled to Southeast Asia to follow any and every lead. Those were frustrating times for all of us involved with this issue, but the hopes and determination of George and Gladys Brooks have kept their faith alive in all our hearts.

Although George and Glady's own son, Nicholas, was missing in action in 1970 in Southeast Asia, it was not his capture that initially prompted their involvement in this issue. A full year prior to the disappearance of his own son, the Brooks' became involved in the quest for Joseph Mobley, a friend and classmate of their son. As it turned out, Joe Mobley came marching home, but for 12 long years the Brooks' did not know the fate of their own son, Nick, who was shot down over Laos.

It was March 1982 when the long wait ended for George and Gladys Brooks. The remains of their son were finally returned to them. But their commitment did not end. George remained as chairman of the board of the National League of Families, and they both continued to devote themselves to the cause of our POW's and MIA's since.

In great part, the calm, reasoned yet determined leadership of the Brooks' have led our current administration to give top priority to a full accounting of our missing American heroes.

At the time their son's remains were returned home, a local newspaper quoted a neighbor of the Brooks; marveling at their total commitment. "It wasn't something they went around and said anything about. They were on a hectic schedule. You'd invite them over and they'd get a phone call and have to leave. That's how they lived their lives."

In the intervening years, the Brooks' commitment only increased.

Mr. Speaker, I urge all of our colleagues to join with us in paying tribute to a truly fine couple, outstanding Americans, George and Gladys Brooks of New Windsor, NY.

JEMEZ PUEBLO FIREFIGHTERS

HON. BILL RICHARDSON

OF NEW MEXICO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 10, 1986

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, it is with great sadness that I bring to your attention an article from Indian News Notes, a publication of the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

Four members of a fire fighting crew from the Jemez Pueblo in New Mexico were killed August 24 when a National Guard truck carrying the exhausted crew back to base camp went off the road and overturned. Two other members of the crew suffered major injuries, and seven were moderately injured with fractures. The Indian crew had been fighting an 18,000-acre fire in the Boise National Forest. The newspaper USA Today said of the four that they "died upholding the long tradition of Native Americans serving as the elite of the USA's wildfire fighters." The 2,000-population Jemez Pueblo was in mourning August 25 and outsiders were barred from entering. Fire fighter Al Waque commented, "If one family grieves, we all grieve because we're all related to each other. We are all brothers and sisters." More than 2,000 of the 16,000 fire fighters battling blazes in six northern western states in August are Indians. George Leech, an Arizona fire-training officer said, "I think the Indian crews are among the better ones. They seem to have a better level of endurance." He added, "They are a lot more tied to the earth. The resources still mean something to them." Paul Tosa, a Jemez tribal leader, told USA Today that among the fire fighters "there is very much pride. They are very special people."

Mr. Speaker, I call upon all of my colleagues in the House to join me in saluting the heroic efforts of the Jemez Pueblo firefighters, and expressing our grief for their tragic loss. My condolences go to the families and friends of these heroes.

INTRODUCTION OF MYASTENIA GRAVIS WEEK RESOLUTION

HON. SILVIO O. CONTE

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 10, 1986

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased once again to introduce a resolution that designates the week of October 12 as "Myastenia Gravis Week." This resolution is for the recognition of a most serious health threat that as yet has not been conquered. Many of the Members of this most honored body supported this resolution last year and I would urge them to do so again.

Myastenia Gravis, also known as Erb-Goldfam disease, is a neuromuscular disease which has affected up to 300,000 Americans of both sexes, all ages and all races. MG affects neither the muscle nor the nerve, but the synapse—the gap between the nerve and the muscle which conducts the electrical current from the nerve to the muscle.

Myastenia Gravis can strike any area of the body at any time. Because Mr. Speaker, it is such an unpredictable disease, it is often misdiagnosed as chronic fatigue, which allows the disease to progress until the victim is in severe danger. Until recently, MG has been fatal for 85 percent of its victims. There is still no prevention or cure, but significant progress has been made.

The establishment of Myastenia Gravis Week, from October 12 to 18, will call attention to the serious problems MG victims face each day. This increased awareness will not only make potential victims more sensitive to the symptoms and the dangers of this serious disease but will also lead to increased research in the quest for a cure. The successes that we have been experiencing in solving the problems attendant with other such diseases should give us all heart that resolutions such as this, do make a difference in the fight against these diseases.

I hope that all of my colleagues will join me in approving this resolution.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. WILLIAM LEHMAN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 10, 1986

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Speaker, on August 15, I intended to vote in favor of final passage of H.R. 3129, but I am recorded as having voted against passage. I would like the record to show that I did, in fact, support passage.

SOCIAL SECURITY NOTCH RALLY

HON. TOM BEVILL

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 10, 1986

Mr. BEVILL. Mr. Speaker, today thousands of senior citizens from all over the country have come to our Nation's Capital to rally against the Social Security notch provision. I would like take a moment to commend all of them for their unwavering commitment to this most worthy cause. These and thousands of other senior citizens are sending a clear message to Congress that the present inequity in Social Security benefits will not be tolerated.

The "Notch Babies" continue to have my full support on this issue. Because of the notch provision, workers born between 1917 and 1921 receive significantly lower benefits than those born before those years. In some cases, the differences in benefits can add up to more than $1,000 a year. For American retirees on fixed incomes, this situation is flatly unfair.

That is why I have consistently supported legislation which would correct this injustice. The notch provision is a result of changes made in 1977 to the Social Security benefit formula. The 1972 benefit formula overcompensated for inflation. However, the 1977 amendments underestimated inflation and ignored the post-age 61 earnings of the "Notch Babies." Those affected by the notch provision have been unfairly penalized as a result of the 1977 amendments.

I am very pleased to be a cosponsor of H.R. 1917, which would eliminate the notch problem and insure that all our senior citizens will be fairly compensated for their lifetime contribution to our great Nation. I realize how important these benefits are to millions of Americans. Our senior citizens deserve our utmost respect and support. They are calling on all of us here in Congress to take action to correct this unfair situation. Let's join together to repeal the Social Security notch provision.

TRIBUTE TO COL. RICHARD SAVOIR

HON. ROBERT J. MRAZEK

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 10, 1986

Mr. MRAZEK. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to salute the retirement of Col. Richard Savoir from the West Point Liaison Program where he has served for the past 14 years.

Colonel Savoir graduated from Southern University and was commissioned as second lieutenant on active duty with the 8th Army ordinance inspection team in Korea. Following his term of active duty, Colonel Savoir attended Columbia Teachers College and State University of New York at Stony Brook, where he received master's degrees in teaching. While pursuing his career as a teacher, Colonel Savoir was active in the Army Reserves. In 1972, Colonel Savoir joined the Liaison Program at West Point where he has served for the past 14 years.

Because of his outstanding service both in and out of the military, it is with a great deal of pleasure that I salute Colonel Savoir on his retirement. I personally wish Colonel Savoir the best of luck for the future.

SALUTE TO LINDEN, NJ, INDUSTRIAL ASSOCIATION

HON. BERNARD J. DWYER

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 10, 1986

Mr. DWYER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, it is an honor to bring to the attention of the Congress the fine work and many contributions of the Linden Industrial Association which was incorporated in 1935 to promote the mutual interests of industries in Linden and surrounding areas.

Over the past 50 years, the member companies, through their concern and enthusiasm, have fulfilled the goals set forth by the association's founders. The Linden Industrial Association has established itself as a vital part of the community, working to enhance local commerce and improve the quality of life for all citizens.

The organization symbolizes what can be achieved when small businesses and large companies combine their talents and energies in the pursuit of common goals. Our towns, the State of New Jersey, and the entire Nation benefit from this high level of dedication and effort. The association's members, both past and present, are to be commended for their excellent work and genuine sense of civic awareness.

The Linden Industrial Association has provided invaluable input on local issues, always striving to keep our communities safe and strong, and area businesses thriving. This spirit of cooperation and commitment has yielded benefits manifold and a private and public sector partnership that has been enormously successful. As the Linden Industrial Association enters the 21st century, it will continue to provide crucial leadership in the sustained development of local commerce and keeping our communities vibrant. I salute the association for its fine work.

H.M.S. RICHARDS MEMORIAL BANQUET

HON. CARLOS J. MOORHEAD

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 10, 1986

Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Speaker, on September 21, 1986, the Greater Glendale Chapter of the Committee of 500 of the Voice of Prophecy will host a memorial banquet in honor of Elder H.M.S. Richards, a pioneer radio evangelist.

The event is a fundraiser for the Voice of Prophecy, which was started by Elder Richards in 1930. For more than five decades, Elder Richards labored and loved. He then turned "the Voice" over to his son, Elder H.M.S. Richards, Jr.

Today, the Voice of Prophecy broadcasts Christian programs to 80 countries around the world. In North America, programs are aired daily over hundreds of radio stations.

The central message of the organization is that man must care for man if his community, his country, his kindred are to be successful. This Christian theme was placed at the core of the Voice of Prophecy by its founder who died a short while ago. In his absence, his son carries the cause and the theme onward. The memorial banquet is an effort of caring friends who want to support and nurture the organization and the idea. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to announce this kind of event to my friends in the House of Representatives.

BROOKVILLE—NO. 1 COMMUNITY OF THE YEAR IN PENNSYLVANIA

HON. WILLIAM F. CLINGER, JR.

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 10, 1986

Mr. CLINGER. Mr. Speaker, the Borough of Brookville, PA, will be recognized on September 29 as the 1986 "Pennsylvania Community of the Year" by the State chamber of commerce. Because Brookville is located in my congressional district and because I travel there frequently, I can see why the borough was selected for this outstanding honor.

In selecting the outstanding community in Pennsylvania, the State chamber considers a number of factors, such as a community's contributions to business and commerce in the State, its ability to generate new jobs, stimulate public and private investment and develop working partnerships between business and government.

Brookville, with a population of 4,500, impressed the selection committee for a number of reasons.

It has a nationally recognized Main Street project which generated $3 million in private investment and created 30 new jobs.

It successfully completed a $1.19 million drive to build a new hospital.

It raised over $600,000 of private money to refurbish the local YMCA, making Brookville the smallest community in the Nation with a full service YMCA.

Chamber officials said they were impressed with Brookville's ability to use small amounts of public capital and larger amounts of private investment to "stimulate new projects and revitalize the downtown, preparing their community for the future," according to an editorial in the DuBois Courier-Express.

The editorial went on to applaud the "Brookville spirit," adding that "other depressed communities in the area undergoing similar renaissance efforts should maintain the same spirit that brought Brookville success."

I know that my colleagues in the U.S. House of Representatives join me is congratulating Brookville for being selected as the 1986 "Pennsylvania Community of the Year" and wish the borough's residents continued success in making Brookville a great place to live.

DAVID TRACHTENBERG EXPLORES THE "REAGAN DEFENSE BUILDUP"

HON. JIM COURTER

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 10, 1986

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Speaker, the term "Reagan defense buildup" has been repeated so many times that it has become an article of faith. In fact, the term is more rightly viewed as an oxymoron. Due to a variety of factors, not the least of which is congressional opposition, the Reagan defense modernization program has become a mere shadow of its former self.

The evidence for this claim is conveniently assembled and convincingly presented in the following article by David Trachtenberg of the Committee on the Present Danger. As Mr. Trachtenberg demonstrates, the Strategic Modernization Program has been virtually checkmated by continued Soviet strategic modernization, while the Soviet/Warsaw Pact conventional forces continue to expand at an alarming rate.

In response to this grim prognosis, the Congress returned the defense budget to a negative growth rate for 1986 and appears poised to compound the error in 1987. If "unilateral attrition" is to be our national defense policy, let the proponents of this policy state it openly, as they attempt to refute Mr. Trachtenberg's arguments.

WHAT REAGAN BUILDUP?

During the 1984 presidential campaign, the Reagan Administration naturally chose to emphasize the successes rather than the shortcomings of its defense program. It was only after the election that the Administration's rhetoric on defense shifted toward a more sober assessment of the U.S. Soviet military balance. Nevertheless, the damage has been done and the myth of a massive Reagan defense buildup has proved difficult to dislodge.

For starters, consider the area of defense spending, which is the only part of the federal budget determined by external factors: the nation's domestic priorities can be set and changed by Americans; the Soviet threat can not. Contrary to common belief, during the Reagan years there's been an overall decline in the growth of U.S. defense budget authority (the amount appropriated for immediate and future disbursement). The largest annual rate of real growth over the past ten years (more than 12 percent) was in fiscal year 1981—the final year of the Carter Administration! Thereafter, with one exception, the rate of real growth in defense budget authority declined—from 11.8 percent in 1982 to 7.6 percent in 1983 and to 4.4 percent in 1984. After an increase to 5.9 percent growth in 1985, fiscal year 1986 budget authority actually declined by 6.2 percent. This is the first time in fifteen years that defense budget authority is lower in absolute terms than in the previous year.

In part, these cuts have come about because of Congress's concern with the size of the federal budget deficit and with reports of Pentagon "waste." The relationship of defense to the deficit, however, is widely misunderstood. As a percentage of the federal budget, defense spending accounts for only one quarter of expenditures—down from one-third in the early 1970s—yet it has absorbed a disproportionate share of spending cuts.

And while tales of Pentagon procurement "horror stories" have fostered a belief that much of the money spent on defense is wasted, of greater importance to U.S. security is the less publicized fact that more efficient production rates have reduced the unit costs of weapons systems. Some of these systems actually cost less today in real terms then they did four or five years ago. The annual growth rate in the cost of major weapons systems fell from 14 percent in 1980 to less than 1 percent in 1984. Nevertheless, Americans seem to be more familiar with stories of over-priced hammers then with the fact that the B-1B bomber is being delivered on schedule and under budget.

A sound defense cannot be obtained "on the cheap," yet just over 6 percent of the nation's economic output goes for defense, hardly a disproportionate share. (An estimated 15-17 percent of Soviet GNP goes to military purposes.) While the Reagan Administration has been accused of favoring strategic over conventional forces, the percentage of defense resources allocated to strategic forces has changed little since the Carter Administration—less than 15 percent of the defense budget, another fact that is not widely known.

Moreover, most Americans erroneously think that the United States spends several times as much on nuclear forces as on nonnuclear forces, and they are unaware that in the past ten years the Soviets have outspent the United States on strategic forces by a margin greater than three to one. Significantly, the Soviets spend only about 10 percent of their military budget on personnel costs. The rest goes for weapons, equipment, and facilities. The United States, by contrast, spends almost half of its defense budget on personnel. This is one reason why Soviet military production levels far exceed U.S. levels.

In the critical area of military investments (spending on research and development, procurement, and military construction), the Soviets have outspent the United States by some $500 billion since 1970. It is the cumulative effect of this gap in investment which has led to the major military imbalances that grow more critical every year.

The most striking deficiency of the Administration's defense program has been its inability to restore the strategic nuclear balance. This is the fulcrum on which all other military power rests—a fact the Soviets have consistently recognized.

To its credit, the Administration is seeking to modernize all components of U.S. strategic nuclear forces. The problem is that most of these improvements are years—and in critical cases, many years—from fruition. In the meantime, little emphasis has been placed on reducing existing U.S. strategic force vulnerabilities—particularly ICBM vulnerability.

Today, the increasing accuracy of Soviet ICBM's has left U.S. ICBMs dangerously open to a Soviet strike. The Air Force has repeatedly told Congress that "using a small portion of their ICBM force, the Soviets could destroy most of our current ICBMs in a first-strike." Secretary Weinberger has said that at least 95 percent of U.S. ICBMs are vulnerable to Soviet attack. Such an attack would leave the United States with an inaccurate sea-based force incapable of retaliating against Soviet missile forces held in reserve, and a greatly diminished bomber force unable to retaliate promptly and unlikely to penetrate the extensive Soviet air defense network.

How ironic that an administration which entered office proclaiming that a remedy to the ICBM vulnerability problem was its most urgent strategic priority has now ruled out the only near-term options for accomplishing that task—more survivable basing and a vigorous strategic defense program. The MX ICBM, originally designed to be mobile and therefore more survivable than current U.S. Minuteman ICBMs, is now being deployed in the same fixed Minuteman silos the Administration admits are already vulnerable to Soviet attack. Although the technology for hardening silos to protect them against nuclear blast effects appears promising, there are no plans to harden any of the silos that will house the fifty MX missiles whose deployment has recently begun. This will leave the MX missile force just as vulnerable to attack as the current Minuteman missiles the MX is designed to replace, while presenting the Soviets with a greater incentive to strike first in a crisis.

Existing technology makes it possible to deploy a timely and effective ballistic missile defense of U.S. ICBMs—unlike the current Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI) which focuses on exotic technologies that are many years, if not decades, from realization. Such a deployment, however, would violate the ABM treaty, something the Administration has not yet decided to do (even though it protests that the Soviets have already done so).

Eventual deployment of a more survivable Midgetman missile is uncertain because of the Administration's lukewarm support of the program. Some argue that the Midgetman will be too costly to build and too difficult to deploy, or that it will be too difficult to verify under an arms control agreement. Others believe it will undercut the Administration's push for another fifty MX missiles, even though Congress is unlikely to appropriate funds for additional MX deployment. The latest U.S. arms control proposal, which calls for a ban on all mobile ICBMs, inspires little confidence that mobile missiles will ever be deployed by the United States. By offering to give up the Midgetman, the Administration has clearly indicated it would rather not spend limited resources on this program. Congress may agree.

But the problem again is that in strategic systems, as elsewhere, the United States has not kept pace with Soviet efforts. While the United States debates the merits of fifty MX missiles, the Soviets complement their already huge ICBM force by deploying modern SS-24 and SS-25 missiles. The CIA has reportedly concluded that Soviet ICBM production over the next five years will "increase substantially," compared with the last five years.

To date, the United States has deployed only seven Trident submarines. Although the Tridents carry more missiles than the older Poseidon submarines, they do not offset the greater number of U.S. launch platforms removed from service in recent years. To make way for the newest Trident last year, the United States dismantled a Poseidon submarine in order to comply with the unratified SALT II treaty, which the Soviets are violating. And in May the President ordered two more Poseidons dismantled (although he declared his intention to add to U.S. strategic forces later this year "without dismantling additional U.S. systems as compensation under the terms of the SALT II Treaty").

In intercontinental bombers a once-heralded U.S. advantage has now disappeared. The Soviets today possess some 450 bombers compared with 327 for the United States. The planned procurement of U.S. air-launched cruise missiles has been cut by more than half, while work continues on an advanced cruise missile for future deployment. The limited deployment of cruise missiles on B-52 bombers, begun in 1982, does not reduce the vulnerability of those bombers to Soviet attack since most are deployed too close to U.S. coasts and only a small fraction are on stand-by alert.

Recent figures indicate that the Soviets continue to outproduce the United States in every major category of strategic systems. For example, last year alone the Soviets produced 100 ICBMs, compared with none for the U.S.; 100 SLBMs, compared with our 75; and 50 bombers, compared with only two for the United States. In addition, the latest intelligence estimate jointly presented to Congress by the CIA and the Defense Intelligence Agency notes that over the past ten years, "Soviet strategic forces received roughy 3,500 ICBMs and SLBMs, three times as much as the United States procured." These trends can be expected to continue, even if the Administration's defense request had been approved by Congress.

The balance in European-based nuclear forces has also continued to shift in the Soviets' favor. The eventual deployment of 108 U.S. Pershing II ballistic missiles and 464 ground-launched cruise missiles (GLCMs) is more than offset by already deployed Soviet SS-20 missiles, carrying more than 2,000 warheads, and the reduction in other U.S. European-based systems. The United States continues to phase out older tactical nuclear weapons from the NATO stockpile. Approximately 1,400 U.S. nuclear weapons are to be withdrawn from Europe by 1989, bringing the NATO stockpile of warheads down to its lowest level in twenty years. The United States is withdrawing five warheads for every Pershing II and GLCM warhead deployed in Europe.

Against these reductions, Soviet shorter-range nuclear weapons targeted against Western Europe have grown in number and accuracy. A fraction of Soviet SS-21, SS-22, and SS-23 ballistic missiles are capable of destroying almost every one of NATO's critical military installations. Estimates show the Soviets now enjoy at least a six-to-one advantage in shorter-range tactical ballistic missile launchers deployed in Europe.

The greatest gains in U.S. deterrent strength over the past five years have come in the area of conventional forces. Force readiness has improved, the quality of enlistees is up, and the replacement of older equipment with newer, more sophisticated systems is continuing. By most assessments, the conventional war-fighting capability of the U.S. armed forces is better today than five years ago. In any conflict, however, the U.S. forces of today will not be fighting the U.S. forces of five years ago. They will be fighting Soviet forces, which have also modernized extensively. From 1980 to 1984, the Soviets deployed about 80 new weapons systems—twice the number deployed by the United States. In the face of a determined Soviet effort, U.S. improvements remain inadequate to make up for almost two decades of neglect.

Given the unexpected qualitative improvements to Soviet conventional forces, the U.S. deterrent capability in Europe is declining. According to recent Army testimony, the U.S. modernization program has been matched by a Soviet program that has "moved more aggressively than any of our estimates predicted. They have increased their numerical advantage more than expected, and, more alarming, have reduced and, in some cases, reversed, the qualitative advantage we held. . . . By many of the measures which we have used to compare our forces, we have indeed lost ground."

In conventional forces, the United States continues to be outproduced in many critical areas. A comparison of weapons systems produced in 1985 shows the following:

	U.S.	U.S.S.R.
Fixed-wing combat aircraft	320	700
Rotary-wing aircraft	235	550
Attack helicopters	50	250
Other military helicopters	185	300
Tanks	1,375	2,700
Other armored vehicles	1,700	3,500
Infantry combat vehicles	655	2,500
Artillery, mortars, rocket launchers	330	4,100
Antiaircraft artillery	25	100
Major surface combatants	8	8
Amphibious ships	2	2
Attack submarines	3	6

U.S. budgetary constraints threaten not only to halt progress in improving our military capability but also to overturn some of the gains made in the last few years. Cuts in the defense budget will in all probability affect the readiness and capability of U.S. conventional forces first.

Other nations look to the United States to counterbalance the growth of Soviet military power. If the United States fails to exercise this responsibility, there is no other nation, or coalition of nations, that is capable of filling the void. A defense program that will not halt the unfavorable trends in the U.S.-Soviet military balance, let alone reverse them, is not a defense program.

TRIBUTE TO JUDGE EDWIN BEACH

HON. ROBERT J. LAGOMARSINO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 10, 1986

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to pay tribute to California Appellate Court Judge Edwin Beach of Santa Paula, CA, who is retiring after faithfully and skillfully serving within the State of California as a member of the judiciary. For 27 years, Edwin Beach has served at every level of court in California, excluding the Supreme Court, to which he was assigned temporary duty by then-Gov. Ronald Reagan.

A self-proclaimed conservative justice, Mr. Beach believes, "judges should not make the law nor stretch it to fit their own views of what law should be. Judges should take the point of view that all branches of government should leave the private citizen alone, just so long as he or she doesn't interfere with the freedom of others." In defense of the private citizen, Mr. Beach has commented that the American style of attempting to evaluate the potential bias of jurors is ridiculous. Moreover Mr. Beach believes that the courts should not ask people questions concerning their particular philosophy because, "it is really none of the court's business."

In sum, the citizens of California will miss the service of Edwin Beach who has defended the rights of private citizens and the laws of his state. I would like to congratulate Justice Beach and wish him success in his future endeavors.

CYPRUS AMBASSADOR ADDRESSES AHEPA CONVENTION ON CYPRUS

HON. JAMES J. FLORIO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 10, 1986

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, the Republic of Cyprus has entered its 12th year of brutal occupation and division by Turkish armies and hope for a solution has become dimmer as time progresses. While Greek Cypriots continue to live in fear of further invasion from the north, while the island continues to be partitioned barring communication and access to either side, while the people of Cyprus continue to hope for a solution to this unacceptable state of affairs, we in the Congress must continue to work toward a solution and continue to encourage commitment to resolving this situation.

In recent years, various proposals have been offered only to be rejected because they did not address the fundamental question that is being posed by the forced occupation of Cyprus. The centerpiece of any solution must call for the removal of foreign occupying forces from Cyprus. Any solution that does not include the removal of troops does not address the fundamental concern of the Greek Cypriots and the international community. Recently, the Cyprus Ambassador to the United States, the Honorable A.J. Jacovides, addressed the 64th Annual Convention of the Order of AHEPA in Miami, FL. He stressed to this distinguished group of Greek-Americans the importance of continuous concern and involvement in seeking solutions. I wanted to share with my colleagues the text of the Ambassador's insightful speech:

REMARKS BY AMBASSADOR A.J. JACOVIDES

I am honored and delighted to be with you once again. This is the sixth time that I have the privilege of addressing your Annual Convention and I feel that I am among good and trusted friends. I know, and very much appreciate, that these feelings are genuinely reciprocated by you.

I also feel privileged to be sharing this dais with many distinguished Hellenes, including Helen Boosalis and Nick Veliotis whose achievements and contribution to public service make us all feel proud of our heritage.

I bring you the warm greeting and best wishes of President Spyros Kyprianou for the success of this Convention and for the progress and prosperity of the great Greek American community. He asked me to convey to all of you—and especially the Supreme President and Lodge, the Chairman and members of the Committee on Cyprus and Hellenic Affairs as well as the Executive Director and his staff—the deep gratitude of the Government and people of Cyprus for all you have been doing to promote our just cause.

As I look around this great room, I see that this is a magnificent setting. It is of course right and proper that the Convention has many social, entertainment and sporting events. It is natural that here in Miami, in August, in these opulent surroundings, with many friends and relatives around, it is not easy to focus on pressing realities several thousand miles away. I wish

I were able to make a joke or two, to say something pleasant and amusing and join in the relaxed atmosphere of the balmy Florida summer evening.

Unfortunately, I cannot. As the Ambassador of Cyprus in this great country, I am allowed no such luxury. Instead, I must remind you of certain gruesome realities and ask for your continued and intensified efforts to help us in our struggle so that justice will prevail.

For twelve long years now—twelve years too long—the Turkish Attila illegally occupies much of our homeland; the refugees are still denied the inalienable right to return to their ancestral homes; the missing persons are yet to be found; colonists from Anatolia are still settled in the homes and lands of the forcibly uprooted Greek Cypriots. And the systematic effort to obliterate our national and religious heritage from the occupied areas and to legitimize the results of the invasion is being relentlessly pursued by Turkey, with the help or tolerance of those who misguidedly try to accommodate her designs for the sale of ephemeral and questionable expediency.

Justice, freedom, the respect of human rights and the rule of law, these are the very principles at stake in the extremely difficult situation we are currently confronted with.

The Cyprus problem, in its true dimensions of Turkish aggression, occupation, massive violation of human rights and attempted secession, is at a critical phase.

Recently, on the occasion of the 100th anniversary of the Statue of Liberty, where AHEPA so creditably participated, many beautiful words were spoken of freedom as an American ideal—and rightly so. But, the torch of liberty should be shining bright not only in New York's harbour but for all people who love freedom everywhere in the world, including our martyred island.

Actions speak louder than words. What we need to see is effective action to curb and remove the Turkish Attila from Cyprus and thus cure the problem, not only expressions of interest and concern and occasional measures of containment and damage limitation. The so-called "strategic importance" of Turkey can be no excuse for inaction since it is beyond dispute that, in the final analysis, Turkey needs the United States more than the United States needs Turkey. Moreover, a just, fair and lasting compromise solution which we can accept, would be in the best interests of all the parties concerned, including the United States and even Turkey itself. For moral, legal and geopolitical reasons, we count upon the support of the United States, your adopted country, for effective help towards such a solution. The long suffering people of Cyprus fervently hope and trust that, with your help, they will not continue to be disappointed. By taking a determined stand in support of the cause of Cyprus, you would not only be doing your duty to your fellow Hellenes in Cyprus; you would also be acting as loyal American citizens in the best interests of the United States as a nation justly proud to be regarded as a nation of laws and a champion of freedom.

It was encouraging to hear Vice President Bush, at the recent Clergy-Laity Congress give the assurance in the presence of His Eminence Archbishop Iakovos, of renewed efforts by the United States to help find a solution to the Cyprus problem. It is our hope that these efforts will be directed primarily towards Ankara where they are most needed, thus providing the necessary leverage towards the implementation of the U.N. resolutions on Cyprus—resolutions which the U.S. supported—as we have been urging all along.

It is only through the combination of U.N. good offices and mediation with effective and meaningful leverage on Ankara by the United States and other countries in a position to exercise such leverage, that the Cyprus problem can find a fair and lasting solution. The right framework for such a solution is clearly provided by the unanimous United Nations resolutions which are legally binding on all.

More recently—on 28 July 1986—Congressman William Broomfield, the ranking Republican on the House Foreign Affairs Committee, in an important policy statement, urged U.N. Secretary General Perez de Cuellar "to restudy his recent peace plan with the idea in mind of focusing on the Turkish troop issue." "The United Nations," he stressed, "must make the overall draft framework agreement more sensitive to the legitimate concerns and point of view of the Greek Cypriots." "Our Government," declared Congressman Broomfield, "must actively work with the United Nations in making future peace plans more realistic vis-a-vis the perspective of the Greek community on Cyprus. Our Government must make it perfectly clear, both to Secretary General de Cuellar and to the Turkish Government, that the first step in the peace process must involve the removal of the Turkish occupation troops."

Meanwhile, humanitarian aid to Cyprus is still necessary for refugee housing, schools and hospitals but also as a way of sending a political message of continuing caring and support by the American people. Very recently, we received an unpleasant surprise through the Administration's declared intention to reprogram, that is to say take away 12.35 million dollars from aid for the current year or 85% of the total amount which Congress earmarked for Cyprus refugee aid, in order to fund a different program.

This was unfair and unwarranted. If reprogramming was needed to meet other legitimate needs—and, of course, we are aware of the current fiscal constraints—the obvious candidate for it would be the enormous amount of aid given annually to Turkey. Remember that Cyprus would not have needed any aid if it were not for the Turkish brutal invasion that uprooted the refugees from their ancestral homes through the illegal use of American supplied weapons.

Remember also that massive U.S. aid—your tax dollars—in effect subsidizes the illegal Turkish occupation of Cyprus. Recently, it was admitted in official Turkish Central Bank figures that Turkey spends 800 dollars annually to subsidize each Turkish Cypriot; and this is in addition to the hundreds of millions of dollars which is the annual cost to Turkey for maintaining its illegal occupation army in Cyprus. No wonder this attempt to take away the bulk of the humanitarian aid voted and earmarked for Cyprus by Congress, has created a storm of protests in both the Senate and the House of Representatives and strongly worded letters objecting to it were written by the key members of the Senate and House Foreign Relations and Appropriations Committees and by many other friends of Cyprus on Capitol Hill. The outcome is still uncertain and this is a matter which you, as American citizens and taxpayers, should know about. More than dollars and cents, it raises an issue of principle, as was rightly pointed out in main editorials of the Greek American press and by several Greek American Organizations.

Our message to you is loud and clear: The omens are not good and we need all the political support we can get in our struggle to restore justice for Cyprus. The recent illegal visit of Prime Minister Ozal to the part of Cyprus occupied by the Attila troops, an act which has been rightly called "unwise" by the State Department and was unreservedly condemned both in Cyprus and abroad, his provocative statements while in Cyprus, the open threats uttered by Turkish generals against the Republic of Cyprus, the ominous recent increase of the Turkish occupation troops in number and American-supplied equipment and Denktash's latest arbitrary measures are all clear messages that what Turkey seeks is to impose her unacceptable terms and to bring about a solution to the Cyprus problem that will serve her ultimate expansionist objectives in the whole region.

Let me categorically state that we in Cyprus are determined neither to capitulate nor to surrender. Our firm stand, with the support of democratic Greece and Hellenism as a whole, is to pursue our course, with faith, dedication, and a sense of responsibility, in order to overcome the obstacles and to achieve a just and viable solution based on the unanimous and legally binding UN resolutions. If such a solution is reached, Cyprus has the human and economic resources and can indeed become, instead of a bone of contention, a bridge of peace and understanding in the Eastern Mediterranean region, for the benefit of all Cypriots and for peace in the area.

I thank you for your attention and for allowing me to take some of your time on matters which are not only of the utmost concern to your fellow Hellenese in Cyprus but dear to the hearts and minds of all right-thinking people everywhere. I trust you will agree that these are matters which you should be aware of and that you feel about them as strongly as I do.

Let me conclude by reminding you that when united and determined, Greeks, through the ages have performed miracles. Our pledge is not to rest until justice is restored to Cyprus. With your help, this can and will be done.

Thank you for your attention.

TRIBUTE TO THOMAS UZZALINO

HON. ROBERT G. TORRICELLI

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 10, 1986

Mr. TORRICELLI. Mr. Speaker, I rise in honor of Thomas Uzzalino upon his elevation to the executive vice-presidency of the International Union of Bricklayers and Allied Craftsman.

Thomas Uzzalino has long been a dedicated leader of the labor union movement in New Jersey. From 1963 to 1975 he rose steadily in the ranks to assume even more important posts in the Bricklayers Local 23, the Bergen County Building Trades, and the Bergen County District Council of Bricklayers.

In 1975, Mr. Uzzalino left his post as president of the Bergen County Building Trades to assume the duties of the vice president of the New Jersey State Building and Construction Trades Council, AFL-CIO.

In 1981, Mr. Uzzalino became the secretary-treasurer of the New Jersey State Building and Construction Trades Council.

During his tenure as president of the New Jersey State Conference of Bricklayers, Mr. Uzzalino exerted strong and effective leadership. He quickly became recognized as an outstanding leader and assumed the post of the international union special deputy, Bricklayers and Allied Crafts, in 1983.

Thomas Uzzalino married the former Patricia Hishon of Dumont, NJ, in 1957. They are the parents of four fine children: Joseph, Marie, Peter, and Patricia Ann.

I, therefore, take this opportunity to publicly recognize Mr. Uzzalino's many years of active concern and skillful leadership. I am confident that he will brilliantly fill the post of vice president of the International Union of Bricklayers and Allied Craftsmen.

A CONGRESSIONAL SALUTE TO CHARLES P. SLOCOMBE

HON. GLENN M. ANDERSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 10, 1986

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to pay tribute to Charles P. "Chuck" Slocombe on the occasion of a dinner to be held in his honor on October 3.

Chuck was born in 1907 and is a native of the San Francisco Bay area. He came to the Long Beach Harbor area in 1928 as an oilwell worker and teacher of Sunday school at Emmanuel Presbyterian Church. Soon afterward he became involved in organizing harbor cruises, which ultimately led to his many decades of important contributions to the southern California maritime community. During his early years on the harbor he was known as a seismologist searching for oil deposits off the coast, and as a skipper of sportfishing boats, pilot boats, and water taxis. During World War II, Chuck's knowledge of the harbor area proved valuable to U.S. Navy intelligence.

After the war, Chuck spent some 20 years in a variety of duties with Pacific Towboat. During this time he also worked to develop and operate Pierpoint Landing, one of the biggest waterfront tourist attractions in Long Beach. After leaving Pacific at age 65, Chuck helped Crowley Maritime Corp. to inaugurate their Catalina Island passenger service.

When Chuck took his second retirement 12 years later, he became cochairman of the Tall Ship Olympic Parade of Sail for the Los Angeles Olympics, which was witnessed by some 1.4 million people.

Chuck is also a Cetacean Society expert on whales and has given presentations on the subject to over 400,000 persons, including students and professionals. He is also an avid amateur radio operator. Most recently Chuck has been engaged in raising funds for an International Seafarer's Center for Long Beach, which has already been a huge success.

Chuck is a valuable asset to the Long Beach community and an inspiration to us all. My wife, Lee, joins me in honoring Chuck on this very special occasion. We would like to take this opportunity to congratulate him on his achievements and express our wishes for continued happiness for Chuck, his wife Ann, their daughters Sharon and Betty, their grandsons Dan and William, and their great-grandchildren Brett, Brian, Beverly, and Kelli.

ONE MAN'S WAR ON DRUGS

HON. ROMANO L. MAZZOLI

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 10, 1986

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues the personal contribution one young man is making in the continuing war against drugs.

A native Louisvillian, Gary Baker has embarked on a cross-country, marathon-style journey to carry a simple message to America's youth about the dangers of alcohol and drugs.

While we in Congress prepare to consider comprehensive legislation in the fight against illicit drugs, we should be mindful of the outstanding individual efforts that are helping to increase public awareness and the call for an all-out attack on this national scourge.

I commend to my colleagues the following newspaper article from the Courier-Journal about Gary Baker's remarkable quest. His dedication and sacrifice to this cause is deserving of our highest respect and admiration:

COAST-TO-COAST RUNNER TAKES STEPS TO FIGHT DRUG AND ALCOHOL ABUSE

(By Tom Stone)

Twenty-eight days after he began his coast-to-coast marathon, Gary Baker ran across the Jefferson County line yesterday ahead of schedule, carrying a statement to youth that they should "Just Say No" to drugs and alcohol.

"This marathon is the culmination of a 10-year dream of mine to run across the United States," Baker said last night, resting at his parents' home in southern Louisville.

Baker, 40 started his transcontinental marathon in Virginia Beach, Va., on July 16. After walking and running 700 miles, he still has three months and 2,300 miles left before he reaches Los Angeles.

"It had always been a selfish idea, an ego trip," said Baker, a Louisville native. "but a few months ago, I began looking for a way to do it for a worthy cause."

Through all the places he travels—large cities and rural towns—he carries with him the message of the "Just Say No" Foundation, a national organization that tries to help youngsters resist peer pressure to use drugs and alcohol.

"The primary goal of the marathon is to encourage people to organize "Just Say No" clubs," Baker said. These clubs are groups of youngsters, 7 to 14 years old, united in their commitment not to drink or use drugs.

The trip is costing Baker about $6,000. He is also taking an expensive leave of absence from his job as a salesman at Standard Coffee Service Co. in Tennessee.

About $2,000 was collected from small businesses in Nashville, Tenn., to help offset some of the expense, Baker said. Also, New Balance shoe company has donated running equipment to him, and Days Inn is providing free lodging at its motels along his route.

Baker's wife, Debbie, and their two children are staying at their home in the small town of Edgewood, Tenn., during most of the four-month marathon. But they're coming to Louisville tomorrow night to spend the weekend with him.

"I told her when we got married that I was going to do this," Baker said. The Bakers will celebrate their eighth anniversary two weeks after Baker expects to complete his marathon.

Baker said his encounters with drugs and alcohol and his observations of the damage they can do prompted him to support the "Just Say No" campaign.

He worked as a bartender while studying at the University of Hawaii, where he earned a bachelor's degree in health and physical education.

And he taught alternative courses in a Virginia high school, where he worked with potential dropouts, many of whom had problems with drugs and alcohol.

Baker plans to resume walking and running on Shelbyville Road near the Watterson Expressway at 10 a.m. today. He will travel west to Frankfort Avenue, then jog down Main Street to the Riverfront Plaza/Belvedere, where he will have a press conference at 11:30 a.m.

Until now the only mission of the marathon was to carry the message of the "Just Say No" Foundation and get new clubs started.

Beginning today, however, the marathon will also be part of a national fund-raising project to help finance "Just Say No" clubs in schools, Baker said.

The "Just Say No" foundation received a license Monday to operate as a non-profit organization and solicit donations, said Tom Adams, the foundation's director.

"We're asking people to match each mile he runs with a penny," Adams said. At a penny a mile, Baker's marathon would cost a contributor $30.

For more information about starting a "Just Say No" club, call (800) 258-2766. Donations can be mailed to the foundation at 1777 North California Blvd., Suite 200, Walnut Creek, Calif. 94596.

Baker is also challenging people to show their commitment against drugs by running with him at the track at Fairdale High School from 6 to 7 p.m. Sunday.

He is a 1964 graduate of Fairdale, where he played football as a senior.

The toughest part of the marathon so far, Baker said, were the first five days. But after blisters on his feet turned into calluses, the running became easier.

Now his biggest challenge is not getting run over on winding two-lane highways, Baker said.

But despite 90-degree temperatures, occasional downpours and rough terrain, Baker said the marathon has been worth everything he's put into it.

"It's a dream come true," Baker said. "I'll never get a chance to do anything like this again."

APARTHEID

HON. CHARLES A. HAYES

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 10, 1986

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, an historic event recently took place in the Republic of South Africa with the installation of Desmond Tutu as Anglican Archbishop of Capetown.

Archbishop Tutu, a steadfast advocate of peace and harmony, has been at the forefront in the struggle against the hideous system of apartheid. Unfortunately, the official policy of our Government toward apartheid has given the archbishop no assistance in his efforts to dismantle it.

There is a growing groundswell of American support for distancing the United States from the apartheid regime of the Republic of South Africa. This Chamber has already gone on record to impose stiff economic and trade sanctions against South Africa and the U.S. Senate has done likewise. Unfortunately, the Reagan administration has failed to see the writing on the wall and has steadfastly followed its policy of constructive engagement.

Mr. Speaker, the time is at hand that the U.S. Government disassociate itself, clearly and without reservation, from the system of apartheid. With that thought in mind, I would like to share with our colleagues a recent editorial published in the USA Today newspaper entitled, "It's futile, immoral to cling to apartheid."

The editorial follows:

IT'S FUTILE, IMMORAL TO CLING TO APARTHEID

Is Washington deaf to South Africa's drumbeat of death?

Twenty-one states hear it.

They are selling off their South African investments. Why? They hope to pressure Pretoria to abandon apartheid—the immoral law that allows 5 million whites to subjugate 24 million blacks. Two weeks ago, California voted to sell $11.4 billion in investments tied to South Africa.

Cities and colleges hear it, too. More than 70 U.S. cities and more than 100 colleges have voted to divest. Last week, Harvard had to cancel a fancy alumni dinner because of protests about its $400 million in South African investment.

The states, cities, and campuses hope to undercut South Africa's economy. They don't want Pretoria to have one U.S. penny to spend on an obscene policy that has made blacks aliens in their own land.

The drumbeat of death has been pounding for two years. Since September 1984, 2,300 people have died protesting apartheid. Day after day—death after death. Listen:

Four blacks killed Sunday by police in Durban. Two killed Saturday in Port Elizabeth. Twenty killed in Soweto and their funeral desecrated by police hurling tear gas.

But in Washington, the official response to that drumbeat has been a minuet of missed opportunities.

Last Thursday, President Reagan refused to order tough sanctions. Instead, he extended for a year modest measures that even his aides admit were ineffective in pressuring white South Africa to share power with blacks.

Congress, meanwhile, is dancing around the issue and may run out of time. The House wants a tough bill calling for all U.S. businesses to pull out within six months. The Senate has a milder bill to restrict new U.S. investments in South Africa. If a compromise is adopted, President Reagan may veto it. And Members of Congress will go home in October to campaign, whether it's enacted or not.

It would be outrageous if Congress failed to act on this great moral issue. It is not enough for just cities, states, and colleges to strike out at apartheid. Congress must pass the toughest sanctions possible. Congress must let the world know that it does not share the weak moral position of the White House.

It is time for the USA to make it crystal clear that we oppose apartheid, we oppose the government that invented it, and we will take strong steps to stop it.

Those who claim that South Africa should be left alone are deaf and blind to the inevitable: Unless apartheid is ended, South Africa will sink into a racial blood bath.

On Sunday, whites and blacks together sang Anglican hymns and African chants as Desmond Tutu was enthroned as Archbishop of Cape Town. This rare drumbeat of joy rang out for a man who says economic sanctions could save South Africa. We must listen to him.

Black South Africa is crying out for help. Oppressed blacks give their lives daily to fight apartheid, but all they ask of us is to close our pockets to their tormenters.

We must hear their pleas and end death's drumbeat.

STANLEY M. FISHER IS INDUCTED AS NEW PRESIDENT OF THE FEDERAL BAR ASSOCIATION

HON. LOUIS STOKES

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 10, 1986

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Speaker, it is my honor and privilege to bring to the attention of my colleagues the installation of Stanley M. Fisher of Cleveland as president of the Federal Bar Association, headquartered here in Washington, DC. He will assume the presidency of that 15,000 member organization on October 1, 1986.

Stanley Fisher has been a leading member of the Cleveland legal community for more than three decades and is the first Ohio lawyer elected as president of the FBA. Currently of counsel to the Cleveland law firm of Arter & Hadden, Fisher was the first recipient of the Superior Service Award of the FBA Cleveland Chapter, and has twice received Distinguished Service Awards and Commendation Awards. A 1953 graduate of Oberlin College, Fisher earned his law degree at the University of Michigan Law School in 1950, and was a law clerk to Chief Judge Charles Simon of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit, which sits in Cincinnati, OH. Since 1971, he has served as special counsel to the attorney general of Ohio, and has been an adjunct lecturer of law for the Cleveland Marshall School of Law.

Mr. Speaker, Stanley Fisher also serves as a national uniform law commissioner. He is a life member of the Judicial Conference of the Sixth Circuit and has been admitted to the bar in Ohio, Michigan, and Florida. He has been an active member of the Federal Bar Association for more than 30 years and served as president of the Cleveland Chapter of the FBA in 1971–72 in addition to holding a number of national offices within the organization.

Mr. Fisher is also a member of the Bar Association of Greater Cleveland and the Cuyahoga County Bar Association and has served the Cleveland Bar as a trustee, and chairman of the professional ethics committee and Federal court committee and has served the Cuyahoga Bar as chairman of the American Bar Association, the American Association of Trial Lawyers, and the American Judicature Society. Stanley and wife, Elaine are the parents of four children, including Ohio State Senator Lee I. Fisher, an outstanding legislator and a personal friend.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to offer my most sincere congratulations to Stanley M. Fisher on his election as president of the Federal Bar Association. I am confident that he will lead that organization capably and admirably and will work diligently to continue the fine tradition of that 65-year-old association.

SOCIAL SECURITY NOTCH RALLY

HON. C.W. BILL YOUNG

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 10, 1986

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Speaker, older Americans from throughout our Nation gathered on the Capitol steps this afternoon to voice their concern about the Social Security notch situation.

As the representative of the highest concentration of Americans age 65 and over in our Nation, I certainly understand their concern about this inequity and have discussed this matter with thousands of my constituents. During the rally, I had an opportunity to meet with retirees from Florida to discuss the notch situation and its effect on all Social Security recipients born since 1917.

The notch is the result of the 1977 amendment to the Social Security Act which sought to correct an unintended flaw in the formula used to calculate Social Security benefits. This formula, enacted in1972, seriously overcompensated for inflation, creating a situation where some beneficiaries, if the formula had not been changed, could, over time, have received Social Security benefits greater than their annual earnings before retirement. Actuaries projected that without a change in this formula, the Social Security trust funds quickly would have become insolvent.

Congress acted in 1977 to correct the flawed formula, but in doing so, established a new set of formulas which resulted in beneficiaries born in 1916 receiving proportionately larger Social Security checks then born in 1917 and after, even if the workers had almost similar lifetime earnings records. This discrepency in benefits was dubbed the notch.

Before Congress can rectify the notch situation, we must fully understand the alternatives available to us and the cost associated with each alternative. Legislation I have cosponsored would require the Secretary of Health and Human Services and the Commissioner of Social Security to immediately prepare such a report to Congress.

As a member of the House Appropriations Subcommittee which oversees funding of the Social Security Administration, I have discussed this matter with Social Security officials, and in answer to my questions during our hearings was told that the estimated cost of providing increased benefits to those affected by the notch would be $82 billion through 1990.

Mr. Speaker, any solution to the notch problem should be one that is fair to Americans born in 1917 and after, but will not jeopardize the stability of the trust funds for all current and future retirees. Congress acted in a strong, bipartisan manner in 1983 to ensure the financial solvency of the Social Security system well into the next century. We must work together in a similar fashion to provide fairness to all beneficiaries, in a financially responsible manner.

IMPRESSIONS OF A VISIT TO THE SOVIET UNION

HON. JAMES J. FLORIO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 10, 1986

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, this past July, I had the opportunity to visit the Soviet Union with several members of my community. The visit left such a vivid impression on me and confirmed my views that we must continue to stress the importance of human rights and emigration in our dealings with the Soviets, that I issued a newsletter to my constituents to highlight for them my impressions of the visit. I wanted to share with my colleagues the text of my newsletter:

A VISIT TO THE SOVIET UNION

I recently visited the Soviet Union to explore bilateral issues of interest relating to trade, tourism, arms control and human rights accompanied by Michael Varbalow and Dr. Eugene Bass, President and Vice President of the Jewish Federation, Marcy Sanders, President of the Federation's Women's Division, Morton Jacobs, Past President of the Jewish Community Relations Council (JCRC), and his wife Claire, and Alan Respler, Executive Director of the JCRC. The mission to the Soviet Union included meetings with Soviet trade and tourism officials, U.S. Ambassador Arthur Hartman and Consul General Charles Magee, and numerous Soviet refuseniks.

HUMAN RIGHTS

The most poignant part of this mission included meetings with individuals that have expressed the wish to emigrate but have been repeatedly refused and subjected to harassment for their desire to leave. These "refuseniks" are those who seek to exercise the human rights guaranteed to them by international accord including the freedom of speech, the freedom of religion, the freedom of political thought and expression, and the freedom of movement and emigration. An application to emigrate immediately triggers the loss of the jobs, pervasive surveillance, harassment which becomes commonplace, false criminal charges, trials of a sort and imprisonment.

I was able to meet with three of the 20 Divided Spouses, Svetlana Braun, Sonia Melnikova-Eichenvald, and Dimitri Vlasenkov. They come from different backgrounds—Ukrainian, Lithuanian and Armenian—and have married American spouses but are not permitted to join their spouses in the West. Their mail is oten intercepted, they are harassed, followed, and beaten. The majority of the Jewish refuseniks I met with were highly educated professionals ranging from mathematicians to engineers that had undergone harassment and loss of status once they applied to emigrate. In Leningrad, refuseniks such as Aba Taratuta, a mathematician now working as a night watchman and elevator operator, Lev Shapiro, an electronics engineer now an electrician in an apartment building, and Mark Reznick, painted a disheartening picture of life as a refusenik. Despite this loss of status and the danger they face, they continue to practice their religious beliefs, teaching Hebrew to their children, organizing Jewish cultural events and festivals and stoically withstanding harassment by Soviet authorities. Harassment begins at an early age as 8 year-old Naomi Shapiro experienced when she was refused admission to the school her brother attests because her father, Lev, has applied to emigrate. Alexi Bronstein, the step-son of long-time refusenik Lev Bronstein who died in May, lives a life of constant obstacles as a medical student. Last year, his mame appeared in an article associating him with an anti-Soviet underground movement and immediately, his grades dropped and he is in danger of being expelled. Eugene Gilbo, whose two academic degrees were stripped as he applied to emigrate, worked as an entrance examiner in the Leningrad Polytechnic Institute where he was told to give failing grades to exams submitted by Jewish applicants.

Harassment extends to inhumane treatment of refuseniks who need to leave to seek treatment of disease. I met with Inna Kitrosskaya-Meiman, Tatjana Kheifetz-Bogolmonaya, and Benjamin Charny, who were repeatedly denied exit visas. Their tragedy was further compounded when they were stricken by serious forms of cancer and underwent numerous operations and painful treatments that were not effective. They cannot leave the Soviet Union to seek further treatment.

Many of the refuseniks face imprisonment on false charges for requesting to leave. Anna Lifshitz awaits her husband, Vladimir's release from his three-year sentence to a labor camp 5,000 kilometers away. He was tried for writing to the West to protest the loss of his job and his son's loss of an educational opportunity because of his parents' status. His wife was barred from the courtroom and asked to testify against her husband. Valdamir Slepak and his wife, whose son now lives in Philadelphia, were sentenced to Siberia for having protested the denial of their emigration application. They served their sentences but have been waiting to leave since 1970.

One of the key threads that ran through all of the meetings with refuseniks was their feeling that the issue of emigration and family reunification is a matter that must be given high visibility and international attention. There was an acknowledgment that the Soviet government recognizes the existence of concern about human rights issues and this is a view that I share after having met with Soviet officials. It is important that our government stress the importance of this issue with the Soviets and underscore the position that human rights concerns must be addressed in order for the two nations to have an economic relationship.

TRADE

As Chairman of the House Subcommittee on Commerce, Transportation and Tourism, I met with Soviet officials from the Soviet Ministry of Foreign Trade and the Moscow and Leningrad Chambers of Commerce and Industry. The Soviet Union could benefit from Western technology and trade as their inefficient economy has been devoted to a military build-up to the detriment of their primitive domestic economy. The Soviets have needs that can form a market for U.S. manufacturers in the areas of food processing—40% of their tomato crop rots before it gets to market—hotel management, energy development, communications, and construction. However, it is crucial to note that before the U.S. can have such meaningful exchanges, the Soviet authorities must address the many human rights and emigration concerns that are raised through the treatment of Soviet Jews, Ukrainians, Pentecostals and many groups that seek to retain their identity and their fundamental freedoms. The Jackson-Vanik trade mechanism which ties trade with the Soviet Union to progress in emigration and permits trade as emigration levels rise continues to play an important and necessary role in U.S.-Soviet relations.

TOURISM

U.S. tourism from the U.S. to the Soviet Union remains low at 55,000 visitors per year. A meeting with the Chairman of Intourist in Leningrad dealt with areas for improvement including better hotel construction and management, increased tours and facilities and the need to further exchanges and opportunities for discussion. Soviet officials were receptive but emphasized concern that the Soviet Union retain control over products of any joint ventures. Officials expressed awareness of obstacles to better trade and tourism including human rights concerns as well as a willingness to address these concerns while furthering an economic relationship.

ARMS CONTROL

The escalating arms race and the increasing slices of the budget that are devoted towards building a sophisticated arms arsenal in both countries was a topic of concern. Sophisticated advances in the defense area are paralleled with the primitiveness of the day-to-day life in the Soviet Union. The promise of a second summit meeting between the leaders of the two nations has sparked hope that an agreement can be reached and a strong desire in the U.S. Congress for not only a verifiable arms control agreement but a commitment to the previously negotiated agreements. This was evident in the August approval by the House of Representatives of a Defense Department Authorization bill, which contained provisions which avocated a mutual moratorium on nuclear tests, reduced funding for the Administration's Star Wars program, prohibited the use of funds for weapons that would violate U.S. compliance with the SALT II treaty, and continued the moratorium on chemical weapons.

TRIBUTE TO WILLIAM PALKO

HON. ROBERT G. TORRICELLI

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 10, 1986

Mr. TORRICELLI. Mr. Speaker, I rise in honor of William P. Palko, president of the Palko Engineering and Supply Co. of Garfield, NJ. Mr. Palko has an outstanding record of public service. He has contributed to the well being of his fellow citizens on the community, county, and State levels.

As president and trustee of the Garfield Boys Club, Mr. Palko was the driving force behind the swimming pool drive which has provided Garfield with one of the finest facilities in the United States.

From the directorship of the local YMCA to the chairmanship of the Passiac Valley United Way, Mr. Palko has served his community well. His interests have encompassed affirmative action compliance and the construction of day nursery facilities.

A graduate of Rutgers, the State university, Mr. Palko has found the time to remember his alma mater. As president of the Alumni Association of his fraternity, Mr. Palko spearheaded a drive for a substantial addition to his chapter house.

I honor Mr. Palko as the epitome of the concerned citizen. In every area which has touched his life, Mr. Palko has contributed his time, his resources, and his talent.

A CONGRESSIONAL SALUTE TO DON G. GILL

HON. GLENN M. ANDERSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 10, 1986

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to a civic leader in my district, Don G. Gill. Don is being honored on October 23 aboard the Queen Mary by the Long Beach Community Services Development Corp. for his dedicated service to the community. This auspicious occasion gives me an opportunity to express my appreciation for his work in behalf of Long Beach and its environs.

A lifelong resident of Long Beach, Don began what would prove to be a long career of school and community service at an early age. Seizing opportunities for education and personal growth, he participated extensively in athletic, academic, and extracurricular endeavors. This was to be a pattern Don would continue throughout his life, continuing after his college graduation whereupon he plunged headlong into numerous community improvement projects and other civic-minded pursuits.

Don has undertaken, and succeeded in meeting, numerous challenges in the community arena for more than 40 years. He has held major leadership posts in the All-Western Band Review, the Kiwanis Club of Long Beach, the Economic Opportunities Commission, the Mayor's Commission on Human Affairs, the Congress for Community Progress, the Community Welfare Council, the Heart Fund, March of Dimes, California International Sea Festival, and the United Way. He has also made significant contributions of time and energy to the Public Social Services Commission of Los Angeles County, to the new main library committee, the police and fire memorial trust, LBUSD elementary and secondary education committee, and the SAE Alumni Association. Moreover, Don has the distinction of being the only individual in Long Beach history to be president of both the junior chamber of commerce and the chamber of commerce. Clearly, Don's long list of accomplishments highlights the truly remarkable contribution he has made toward the betterment of our community.

My wife, Lee, joins me in extending our warmest congratulations to Don G. Gill on this special occasion. His many years of community service and civic duty are an inspiration to us all. We wish Don, his wife, Sandy, and their children, Kim, Alison, and Tony, all the best in the years ahead.

FARM CREDIT SYSTEM BORROWER INTEREST RATE RELIEF ACT OF 1986

HON. ED JONES

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 10, 1986

Mr. JONES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation aimed at permitting the institutions of the Farm Credit System to establish competitive interest rates for their farmer, rancher, and cooperative borrowers. I am pleased to note that a bipartisan group of over 100 of my colleagues is joining me as sponsors of the Farm Credit System Borrower Interest Rate Relief Act of 1986.

For more than 50 years the Farm Credit System has been the largest and one of the most important and stable suppliers of credit to American agriculture. As our Nation's farmers and ranchers continue to suffer under the worst economic depression since the 1930's, the Farm Credit System today finds itself in serious financial difficulties as well. The reasons are simple and obvious: When agriculture producers don't make a profit, they are unable to service their debts.

Production credit associations [PCA's] and Federal land banks [FLB's] today are carrying more than $7.5 billion in nonaccrual farm loans that are not considered fully collectible, and they hold another $5 billion in other high risk loans. Even though repayments are not currently being made on most of these troubled loans, the Farm Credit System is continuing to bear the cost of servicing its obligations to investors who have purchased bonds to finance the System's past lending activities. In other words, while the System tries to practice forbearance with its borrowers, it nevertheless must meet its bills when they come due to the investing public.

The growing volume of troubled loans and continued deterioration of farmland values has finally caught up with the Farm Credit System. Last year, the System posted the largest annual loss of any financial institution in history, nearly $2.7 billion. For the first 6 months of 1986, the System lost another $968 million, and there is little reason to believe this trend has yet to run its course.

To add to the System's problems, it is also experiencing a serious flight of its best borrowers away from its PCA's and FLB's to other lenders whose terms and conditions are more attractive and quicker to respond to the recent overall downward trend in interest rates. From a peak of over $85 billion in total outstanding loans at the end of 1983, the System's loan volume has fallen to $61.5 billion as of June 30, 1986, and it continues to decline day by day.

The System is losing too many of its profitable loans, but because of current Federal regulatory requirements it is prohibited from reducing its interest rates to more reasonable levels so it can compete for new loans and hold on to the customers it now has.

The facts are clear about what has happened to the wholesale cost of money over the past year. Five-year Treasury bills have dropped from 9.81 percent to 6.8 percent. Since August 1985, the prime rate has dropped from 9.5 percent to 7.5 percent. Home mortgage rates have fallen from an average of 12.41 percent to 10.5 percent. However, during this same period, the Farm Credit System's interest rates have only dropped an average of less than 1 percent.

Many System institutions have been seeking to lower their rates—but the System's regulator, the Farm Credit Administration [FCA], has consistently rejected, delayed, and limited any interest rate reductions. This needs to stop. My bill would simply allow the Farm Credit System to determine its own interest rates without the prior approval of Government regulators. Commercial banks are not required to seek prior approvals for their interest rates from the Federal Reserve, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, or the Comptroller of the Currency. System institutions should not have to submit to prior approval either.

Therefore, the legislation I am introducing addresses this problem head on:

First, it removes the System's regulator—the Farm Credit Administration—the routine authority to set interest rates charged by the institutions of the Farm Credit System.

Second, it prohibits the Farm Credit Administration from specifically requiring System institutions to charge rates which are higher than the rates available from other lenders in their geographic area in order to meet required capital levels.

Third, it prohibits the Farm Credit Administration from charging System banks with an "unsafe and unsound" business practice if they follow the good, sound business practice of establishing interest rates to their farmer, rancher, and cooperative customers based upon their marginal cost of funds, the creditworthiness of their borrowers and the cost of servicing loans.

Last year, when the Congress acted to assist the Farm Credit System, our primary concern was to ensure that agriculture producers have access to adequate sources of credit at competitve rates. It is an irrefutable conclusion that the rates charged farmers today by commercial banks, savings and loan associations and insurance companies are lower than rates which the System is being forced to maintain by its regulator. The System's rates are neither competitive nor reasonable, and we have an obligation to provide expeditious, constructive and corrective action.

Mr. Speaker, as I introduce this bipartisan legislation today, I am concerned that we not lost sight of the fact that the Farm Credit System is a group of institutions which Congress created more than a half century ago to ensure necessary credit for agriculture at reasonable rates in good as well as bad economic times.

My point, Mr. Speaker, is that no financial regulator tries to save an ailing institution by requiring that it charge rates which are noncompetitive. No regulator seeks to make an institution nonviable by running off its good borrowers.

Certainly the System has significant financial problems. Some might say that what I am proposing might even make those problems worse. However, I firmly believe that the System's financial problems are only compounded when farmer after farmer is driven away from the System by unreasonably high interest rates. If the System should ever need direct Federal financial assistance, the cost of that assistance will be significantly higher if the System loses a valuable portion of its present paying customers.

The FCA has already begun its attack on this bill, insisting that it removes the regulatory tools necessary to ensure safe and sound operation of the System.

However, there is a major difference between permitting a commercial lending institution the right to set its interest rates to be competitive and the implication that this action is irresponsible and questionable under safety and soundness principles. There is only one provision of this legislation which addresses safety and soundness and that is only with respect to setting interest rates.

In fact, there are numerous other enforcement authorities which already exist in the Farm Credit Act and are readily available to the Farm Credit Administration.

This legislation does nothing to prevent the FCA from exercising its enforcement authorities to cure bad lending or management practices, inadequate loan documentation or the providing of credit without sufficient resources.

If the FCA believes that Farm Credit System institutions are poorly managed, they have sufficient regulatory authorities at this time to demand corrective action and/or remove management and boards of directors.

The Farm Credit Administration implies that the removal of their authority to regulate interest rates means that their powers to set capital requirements are eliminated. That's simply not true. The Farm Credit Administration continues to have the authority to establish minimum capital requirements for each institution. However, it does not give the FCA the power to require minimum capital by maintaining uncompetitive, excessively high interest rates.

At this point in the RECORD, I insert a letter from the president and chief executive officer of the Farm Credit Corporation of America addressing the criticisms already raised by the Farm Credit Administration.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION OF AMERICA,
September 10, 1986.

Hon. ED JONES,
Chairman, Agriculture Subcommittee on Conservation, Credit and Rural Development, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I have studied the arguments being made by Farm Credit Administration (FCA) in opposition to your legislative initiative to allow the Farm Credit System to charge competitive rates. FCA appears to base its concerns on the "safety and soundness" issue and the "dissipation of capital" issue.

Unfortunately, there are hundreds of banks and savings and loans in this country which are also currently facing serious financial problems. I am not aware of a single case where a federal regulator, other than FCA, has required a weak institution to charge rates above competitive levels under the guise of "safety and soundness" or as a means of "preserving capital".

As director of the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation (FSLIC) during the turbulent period of 1981-1983, I participated in the merger or liquidation of hundreds of weak financial institutions. It was never seriously considered to compel those institutions to raise their mortgage rates above competitive levels. Such a strategy would have been folly.

The Farm Credit System is making every effort to avoid the need for federal financial assistance. However, without the ability to charge competitive rates, the System has virtually no chance of recovery.

As the enclosed Press Release dated April 9, 1986, indicates, "The Farm Credit System must have the flexibility to change its prices in response to daily changes in the marketplace in order to serve its borrowers and manage its business as a successful institution."

On behalf of the Farm Credit System, I urge you and your colleagues to pass legislation which removes FCA from the business of approving interest rates. This will help the American farmer and improve the ability of the Farm Credit System to maintain its market share and to manage its assets and liabilities.

Sincerely,

H. BRENT BEESLEY,
President and Chief Executive Officer.

Mr. Speaker, I am the first person to insist that Farm Credit System institutions have made management mistakes and public relations blunders in the past and they probably will make others in the future. I've probably had more blunt, heart-to-heart discussions with the System's leadership about the mistakes they have made than anyone else in this country, including the regulatory officials of the Farm Credit Administration. However, punishing the farmers and ranchers of the country by forcing PCA's and FLB's to charge unreasonable interest rates is not an appropriate solution.

We have a clear choice. If we choose to take the positive action to give the System the opportunity to set rates competitively, there is good reason to believe that farmers and ranchers who have supported the Farm Credit System in the past will return and support it again. If we choose to turn our backs on this opportunity to be constructive, borrower flight will continue and it is reasonable to believe that the Farm Credit System's financial base will continue to be weakened.

The result of such a weakening of the System will be that any future financial assistance necessary to aid the System will only be greater if we allow good customers to be driven away by excessive interest rates.

TRIBUTE TO BEN LEAL

HON. BARBARA BOXER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 10, 1986

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call attention to the impressive contributions to the American labor movement of a San Francisco Bay Area labor leader, Ben Leal.

Mr. Leal, who has been a Teamster for more than 40 years, will be recognized later this month at a dinner in his honor where he will receive the prestigious Menorah Award, presented by Histradrut, the State of Israel's General Federation of Labor. This honor is well deserved.

Ben Leal, a Navy veteran of World War II, began his union service in 1946 in Seattle, WA. While on the executive board of Seattle local 117 he earned a degree in industrial relations from Seattle University. He moved to the San Francisco area in 1950 and became president of Teamsters Local 241 4 years later. In 1956 he joined Teamsters Local 856 of San Francisco where he now serves as the chief executive officer.

This dedicated man today serves in a variety of capacities in the Western Conference of Teamsters, as an international trustee, and as president of the Northern California United Food and Drug Council which is comprised of 70 unions involved in the food industry. Ben Leal is a model citizen and deserves our warm congratulations on the significant occasion of his receiving this major award. His contributions to labor and his brothers and sisters in the labor movement are indeed immense.

TRIBUTE TO JOEL SCOTT

HON. GEORGE (BUDDY) DARDEN

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 10, 1986

Mr. DARDEN. Mr. Speaker, earlier this summer, the veterans of Georgia and our Nation lost a man who had worked tirelessly to secure their well-deserved benefits. I would like to call the attention of my colleagues to the accomplishments of Joel E. Scott of Cartersville, GA.

Joel Scott, who died July 14, was manager of the Cartersville office of the Georgia Department of Veterans Services. He also was extensively involved in the activities of the American Legion and the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

Mr. Scott was a World War II Navy veteran. He had served on the Veterans' Administration Rehab Committee since 1970, and at one time was vice president of that committee. He was the veterans representative on the deans committee at Emory University Hospital in Atlanta.

In the American Legion, Mr. Scott was adjutant and service officer of Cartersville Post 42. He had served as service officer and past commander of the seventh district American Legion.

Mr. Scott served the National American Legion, including work on the Economic Commission of the Veterans Preference Committee.

In addition, Mr. Scott was an active Mason and Shriner, and served in many capacities at Cartersville Tabernacle Baptist Church.

Joel Scott will be long remembered for his contributions to the well-being of our veterans. I ask that my colleagues join me in expressing our sympathy to Mr. Scott's wife, Eulin, to his son, Ricky, and his grandchildren, Brian and Jo El, and to his mother, Mrs. Lois Scott.

SUPPORTING FEDERAL EMPLOYEES AND THE 3-YEAR RECOVERY RULE

HON. BARBARA A. MIKULSKI

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 10, 1986

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. Speaker, this House will soon be considering the conference committee's tax reform bill. I strongly support fair and equitable tax reform. And the conference committee's tax bill will be a step in that direction. But Mr. Speaker, as presently proposed the conference agreement has at least one very serious flaw.

This conference committee bill repeals the 3-year recovery rule. That rule provided that Federal employees who contributed to their retirement plans could, within the first 3 years after they retire, recover up front their contribution to that plan. Since they had paid tax on the money for that contribution when it first was earned, they would not be taxed again on their recovered contribution.

Many, many Federal employees planned their retirement believing that for the first 3 years, they could live on their recovered contribution without once again paying taxes on that money.

Time after time, this Government has attacked our hard working Federal employees. These employees are the government. They are the people who have helped to make America the great country it is today. This Government has asked them to make great sacrifices, and they have. In return, this administration has RIF'd them, cut their benefits, wreaked havoc with their retirement plans, replaced them with more expensive contract workers, and kept their salaries and their pay increases well below the salaries of workers in the private sector. Mr. Speaker, this Government has done just about everything possible to tarnish the prestige and honor that once went with dedicating one's life to public service, working for our Federal Government. And yet these dedicated and skilled Americans have persisted in their civic-minded commitment to America and its Government.

Mr. Speaker, here we go again.

When the repeal of the 3-year recovery first was proposed in the House, I opposed it. I spoke to the members of the Ways and Means Committee and told them how unfair I felt repeal would be. I worked with other Members of the House to try to protect the Federal employee and to keep the 3-year recovery rule.

When that effort failed in the House, I wrote to Senator PACKWOOD. I said,

It is not fair to penalize—through new tax rules—the pension plans of police officers, teachers, FBI agents, Social Security workers and others who are already making tremendous contributions to our society through the work they do every day.

Mr. Speaker, fairness and equity must be the guiding principles behind our tax reform efforts. But in Congress' rush to pass tax reform legislation, it has lost its way, it has failed to follow its guiding principles.

It is unfair for Congress to make retroactive changes in the tax law. Mr. Speaker, when we pass tax laws, the rules of the game, the American people rely on the laws to plan their retirement. It is unfair for us to tell the American people that they can rely on these rules and to now change the rules of the game after the American people have begun to play.

And it is inequitable for us to ask, in the name of revenue neutrality, that loyal Federal employees shoulder an unfair tax burden so that other groups can keep their special tax breaks.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I come before the House today not to oppose fair and equitable tax reform, but to oppose the unfair and inequitable repeal of the 3-year recovery rule.

STOP TRADE PREFERENCES FOR CHILE

HON. FORTNEY H. (PETE) STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 10, 1986

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, as the 13th anniversary of General Pinochet's takeover of the Government of Chile approaches tomorrow, the level of repression and violence is once again escalating.

A member of the political opposition, José Carrasco, was dragged from his home in the middle of Sunday night. When his body was found, there were so many bullet holes in his head that he was almost unrecognizable. Two other similar killings were reported and the state security forces are the prime suspects in all three brutal murders.

A state of siege has been imposed by General Pinochet. Nationwide, people are being detained. Opposition press is being shut down.

We need to protest these actions by the Chilean Government. We need to take action against the continued outrages of General Pinochet.

At a minimum, Mr. Speaker, we need to enact legislation I have introduced to deny Chile preferential trade tariff treatment under the generalized system of preferences. There must be no reward for the murder, torture, and political repression of the totalitarian rule of the Pinochet regime in Chile.

THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF PURCHASING MANAGEMENT

HON. JOHN McCAIN

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 10, 1986

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to recognize and congratulate the National Association of Purchasing Management, and its 28,000 members located across the United States, for their foresight and effort in establishing the Center for Advanced Purchasing Studies [CAPS]. This center is the first privately funded purchasing/materials management research center in the country. It has two major goals: to improve purchasing effectiveness, and to improve the overall state of purchasing readiness.

These goals will be met by completing research in specific areas deemed having the greatest research payoff by purchasing executives across the country. The research results will help private industry become more effective, efficient, and competitive in the U.S. world marketplaces; as well as pointing the way to improved governmental purchasing practices, thus saving the taxpayer money.

The Center for Advanced Purchasing Studies is managed by the College of Business at Arizona State University, and is located at the Arizona State University Research Park in the 1985 all-American city of Tempe, about 5 miles south of the main Arizona State University campus.

The location of the Center for Advanced Purchasing Studies within the research park reflects the close cooperation that is emerging between industry, the university, and the professional purchasing association. This union serves as a bridge between the academic and business communities, to the long-term benefit of both.

SOCIAL SECURITY "NOTCH"

HON. RAYMOND J. McGRATH

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 10, 1986

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring the very important remarks of my good friend and constituent, Dr. Albert De Vito, on the subject of the inequities of the Social Security "notch" to the attention of my colleagues.

As the local leader of a grassroots movement, I believe Dr. De Vito's reasoning on this subject is germane to us all:

We of the Notch Generation, born 1917-21, have been hurt deeply by those of the past whom we elected to public office; hurt by those whom we recently elected and trusted to take care of our needs, which they negated. But yet, when it comes to handing out our money, taxpayers' money, it is given freely to other countries without a question of doubt. Need I go further on this subject? Those responsible only have to go into the depths of their conscious minds to understand this statement.

Let us look further. Our Nation today is No. 1 because of those who lived throughout the Great Depression, lived at the birth of our Social Security law founded by the late and great Franklin Delano Roosevelt, and those who served on land, across all corners of the world, air and sea during World War II.

As we meet in D.C. today to state our case for H.R. 1917, let us look at the future positive results throughout the Nation. First of all, it will not rob the Social Security Trust Fund. It will appease the Notch Generation and those who come after.

Whenever a person receives money or assets, it always goes back into the Nation's economy. Industry will sell more products, build more structures to manufacture and house these products, and hire more people. More money will be paid into our tax structure. In fact, the money that will be taken out of the Social Security Trust Fund to pay us will be going back into that fund through FICA taxes. However in this, I would like to see the notch group receive credits beyond the age of 61.

It simply means that our Nation will be better off financially and the Notch Babies will be in a better state of mind being able to cope better with the High-Rise-Standard of living today.

Above all, my love, devotion and admiration go out to Mr. Roybal, all the congressmen who cosponsored his H.R. 1917 Bill, Mr. James Roosevelt and his "National Committee to Preserve Social Security and Medicare," and the devoted Notch Leaders throughout the country I have had the honor of working with.

I say unto you, Blessed be with universal love.—Albert De Vito, GrassRoot Notch Leader, Westbury, NY.

TRIBUTE TO MARY JANE POWELL

HON. CHESTER G. ATKINS

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 10, 1986

Mr. ATKINS. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to recognize the achievements of a constituent of mine, Mary Jane Powell. At their Dahlia Ball on Friday, September 12, the Merrimac Valley Democrats will honor Mary Jane by naming her "Democrat of the Year."

Mary Jane lives in Andover, MA, with her four children, Maren, Jenna, Jason, and Andrew, and her husband, Hank, with whom she cofounded and directs the Powell Corp., a small manufacturing company. The town of Andover and the surrounding community have benefited greatly from the activities of this diligent and selfless citizen.

A graduate of Merrimack College, Mary Jane has displayed a strong commitment to education. She expresses this commitment in a variety of ways: she holds a position on the board of trustees at the University of Lowell, and works as a learning disabilities tutor for the Reading Department of the Andover Public Schools. Mary Jane incorporates her dedication to education with that to womens' issues by arranging speeches by career women for the students at St. Mary's High School in Lawrence. A former member of the Governor's Advisory Committee on Womens' Issues, Mary Jane is particularly interested in womens' economic issues.

Active in party politics, Mary Jane is an elected member of the Democratic State Committee in the Second Essex and Middlesex District. She has also done valuable work for several State officials.

Mary Jane has distinguished herself as a leader in her community through her work for a great number of public service organizations and programs. She is currently a member of the Andover Housing Authority and formerly served on the board of directors of the Bay State Skills Corp. Mary Jane Powell has made a substantial mark on her community through her tireless dedication to these and other such worthy organizations.

Through her selfless dedication to her party and her community, Mary Jane Powell has earned the respect and admiration of those fortunate enough to know her. It is my distinct pleasure to join my colleagues and the Merrimac Valley Democrats in honoring this active and productive citizen.

HONORING JOHN C. CHAVEZ

HON. ESTEBAN EDWARD TORRES

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 10, 1986

Mr. TORRES. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to ask my colleagues in the House of Representatives to honor a beloved citizen, a devoted father, a hard worker, and a leader in his community: John C. Chavez of Pico Rivera, CA.

John is retiring from the City of Los Angeles Fire Department after 30 years of dedicated service. A dinner in his honor is planned for Friday, September 12, 1986.

John may be retiring from the fire department, I know from personal experience he will not be retiring from much else. He will continue to serve admirably on the Pico Rivera City Council, where he has been a member since 1978. He will continue to help with the Pico Boys' Baseball League. He will continue his extensive envolvement in social services delivery, cities planning and State government affairs.

I have known John for many years now, and I have never known him to turn down someone who needed help. In Pico Rivera he is everywhere, making sure city services are delivered effectively and efficiently. He has served two terms as mayor. He understands that elected officials hold unique positions in the community: getting elected is a special honor that must be earned everyday through dedicated and responsible service.

John and I were students together at Stevenson Junior High School. I remember him during those times, which seems not so long ago, as a studious young man. Looking back I can see that John developed then the strong moral character that has been an inspiration to all of us who have lived and worked with John Chavez throughout these many years.

For John and Belen and their children, I know I have the support of my colleagues in the House of Representatives when I wish them all the very best in the coming years.

POLISH FALCONS OF AMERICA, GROUP 276, POLISH FALCONETTES AUXILIARY GROUP 883

HON. GUY VANDER JAGT

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 10, 1986

Mr. VANDER JAGT. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to bring to your attention and that of our colleagues in the U.S. Congress, the 75th anniversary of the Polish Falcons of America, Group 276 and the 55th anniversary of the Women's Polish Falconettes Auxiliary Group 883 from Muskegon in our Ninth Congressional District of Michigan.

These organizations were originally established to promote the Polish culture, retain the Polish heritage and ease the transition of new immigrants to this country. Nest No. 276 was organized on March 13, 1911 in Muskegon. On June 11, 1911, the organization was admitted to the Polish Falcon Alliance. During World War I and II, many of the members of Group 276 joined the ranks of the Polish and American Armies in the United States, Canada and Europe.

The group has sponsored athletic teams, expanded greatly over the years, and throughout its history has been the leading organization in Muskegon's Polish community. The aim of Nest 276 continues to be a dedication to the physical, cultural, patriotic and moral advancement of its members.

The Falconettes Nest 883 of Muskegon was organized on April 17, 1931. Throughout its history, Nest No. 883 has participated in substantial fund raisings for the St. Michael's School, Catholic Central High School, and the Falcon Building. They continue to uphold the Falcon tradition and the high ideals of their organization.

This is just a brief look at the remarkable history of these outstanding organizations. There are many other achievements worthy of mention, but they all result in the same conclusion: these two nests continue to cherish their past culture while looking forward to the future of their country, America. They represent the best in what truly characterizes our Nation—hardworking, intelligent, God fearing and patriotic citizens.

DULUTH MIDDLE SCHOOL, A SCHOOL OF EXCELLENCE

HON. ED JENKINS

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 10, 1986

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, Friday, representatives from 272 schools from across the Nation will participate in a White House Schools of Excellence ceremony. One of those Schools of Excellence awards will go to Duluth Middle School in Gwinnett County, GA, located in my congressional district.

In a time when critics are looking for some particular group to blame for failures of the education system, I enjoy this privilege of pointing to a success. Since the criteria for judging a school of excellence are the same for all, I am assuming you will find similarities among the schools. The selections are based on how well the schools used available resources; how well students' needs were met; school organization and goals; instructional programs; student achievement; school-community relations; and efforts at improvement.

Those who want to single out teachers or one other single group or factor to blame for failure of an education system should look at that selection criteria again and look specifically at those singled out as schools of excellence.

Let's look at Duluth Middle School. Let's start with the principal, Valerie Clark. That's where the parents and teachers were pointing when the award was announced. But Principal Clark quickly pointed her fingers back to the teachers, parents, students and other administrators in her school system.

She describes the teachers as "very dedicated and very enthusiastic," the students "as very special young people. They like the teachers. They're willing to do that little bit extra." She praises the community for its general support, pointing to a very active PTA. "The community just goes above and beyond to give us what we need."

She also spreads the credit to the school system's administration and her predecessor who planted the seeds for success. The fact that another Gwinnett County School was on last year's list of schools of excellence backs up her claim of the entire system being of good stock. Parkview High School in Lilburn was selected last year as one of the 260 Schools of Excellence.

I suspect you will find the cooperation evident at Duluth Middle School at all of the 272 educational institutions receiving this year's School of Excellence award. Let's all point our fingers of praise at them.

Duluth Middle School, I salute you. I salute your principal, your teachers, your students, your parents, and your community.

SENATE COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Title IV of Senate Resolution 4, agreed to by the Senate on February 4, 1977, calls for establishment of a system for a computerized schedule of all meetings and hearings of Senate committees, subcommittees, joint committees, and committees of conference. This title requires all such committees to notify the Office of the Senate Daily Digest—designated by the Rules Committee—of the time, place, and purpose of the meetings, when scheduled, and any cancellations or changes in the meetings as they occur.

As an additional procedure along with the computerization of this information, the Office of the Senate Daily Digest will prepare this information for printing in the Extensions of Remarks section of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on Monday and Wednesday of each week.

Any changes in committee scheduling will be indicated by placement of an asterisk to the left of the name of the unit conducting such meetings.

Meetings scheduled for Thursday, September 11, 1986, may be found in the Daily Digest of today's RECORD.

SENATE—Thursday, September 11, 1986

(Legislative day of Monday, September 8, 1986)

The Senate met at 10:30 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the President pro tempore [Mr. THURMOND].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Our prayer will be offered by the Reverend Father Lawrence Martin Jenco, Middle East director of Catholic Relief Services. Father Jenco is sponsored by Senator PAUL SIMON.

PRAYER

The Reverend Father Lawrence Martin Jenco, Middle East director of Catholic Relief Services, Joliet, IL, offered the following prayer:

Let us pray:

We thank You God, our Father for Your loving trust in man, woman, child.

In creation You first clothed us with dignity—called us not things, but sons and daughters and saw that we were very good.

You did not hesitate, even then, to offer what was most intimate to Yourself, a share in Your creative power.

Thus, from the beginning, it has ever been our calling to fashion this world and ourselves in the image of Your love.

Creation still groans in sorrow and anguish. We are aware of being bearers of those forces which free creation from the slavery of corruption and brings it into the freedom of the sons and daughters of God.

In our commitment of servanthood to our Nation and to the world—we shall have only relationships of peace, mercy, justice, and constructive love toward all men, women, and children.

Give us the courage to be what we truly are—the work of Your loving hand, God touched and frail—yet possessing a dignity beautiful beyond belief.

Give us the courage to speak when we must speak. To act when we must act that we may be true stewards—giving life to the word You have spoken to humankind.

I thank You for the precious gift of my freedom. Please, dear God grant freedom to all of Your sons and daughters, our brothers and sisters who are held captive, by whatever bondage around the world. We ask especially that You grant freedom to Tom Sutherland, David Jacobsen, Terry Anderson, and Frank Herbert Reed. Amen.

RECOGNITION OF THE ACTING MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The distinguished acting majority leader is recognized.

FATHER JENCO'S RETURN

Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, I want to comment for a moment on Father Jenco's prayer this morning when he spoke about his own freedom. It was particularly meaningful, having been incarcerated over such a long period of time in Lebanon. Father Jenco is from Jackson, MN, originally, so we have a little bit of a claim on him. We are very proud that he has been the author and deliverer of this morning's prayer.

IMPEACHMENT OF JUDGE HARRY E. CLAIBORNE

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Pursuant to Senate Resolution 480, 99th Congress, the Chair submits to the Senate for printing in the Senate Journal and in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the answer of Harry E. Claiborne, judge of the U.S. District Court for the District of Nevada, to the articles of impeachment, as received by the Secretary of the Senate on September 8, 1986.

[In the Senate of the United States Sitting as a Court of Impeachment]

IMPEACHMENT OF JUDGE HARRY E. CLAIBORNE

NOTICE OF FILING

To: Jo-Anne L. Coe, Secretary of the United States Senate, S-221 The Capitol, Washington, D.C. 20510

Please take notice that on this 5th day of September, 1986, the Honorable Harry E. Claiborne, has posted to the Secretary of the United States Senate, an original and thirty copies of his Answer to Articles of Impeachment.

Simultaneous with the posting of the Answer to Articles of Impeachment, the same was served upon the United States House of Representatives through its Special Counsel, Nicholas D. Chabraja, by Federal Express delivery.

Respectfully submitted:

HARRY E. CLAIBORNE,
(By) Oscar B. Goodman, Esq., and Honorable Howard W. Cannon, Attorneys for Respondent.

[In the Senate of the United States Sitting as a Court of Impeachment]

IMPEACHMENT OF JUDGE HARRY E. CLAIBORNE

ANSWER TO ARTICLES OF IMPEACHMENT

Judge Harry E. Claiborne, by and through his counsel, Oscar B. Goodman, Esq. and the Honorable Howard W. Cannon, Answers The Articles of Impeachment preferred by the House of Representatives:

ARTICLE I

Article I alleges that Judge Harry E. Claiborne willfully and knowingly made a false statement on his 1979 tax return in violation of Section 7206(1) of Title 26, United States Code.

Judge Harry E. Claiborne states that he believed the return to be true and correct as to every material matter.

Judge Harry E. Claiborne states that he had no specific intent to violate the law and that errors contained in his 1979 return were the result of accident, mistake or negligence. Judge Harry E. Claiborne subscribed such return in reliance on Joseph Wright, whom he reasonably believed to be a competent public accountant. Judge Harry E. Claiborne made a full disclosure to such accountant.

First Affirmative Defense

Judge Harry E. Claiborne was deprived of fundamental Due Process of Law in litigating such defenses by the judges specially appointed to hear his case.

Second Affirmative Defense

Judge Harry E. Claiborne was deprived of Due Process of Law by outrageous prosecutorial conduct by members of the Executive Branch who wrongfully procured his indictment and conviction through perjured testimony, intimidation of witnesses and unlawful covert surveillance including a mail cover and at least one burglary of Judge Claiborne's residence.

ARTICLE II

Article II alleges that Judge Harry E. Claiborne willfully and knowingly made a false statement on his 1980 tax return in violation of section 7206(1) of Title 26, United States Code.

Judge Harry E. Claiborne states that he believed the return to be true and correct as to every material matter.

Judge Harry E. Claiborne states that he had no specific intent to violate the law and that errors contained in his 1980 return were the result of accident, mistake or negligence. Judge Harry E. Claiborne subscribed such return in reliance on Jerry D. Watson, whom he reasonably believed to be a competent public accountant. Judge Harry E. Claiborne made a full disclosure to such person.

First Affirmative Defense

Judge Harry E. Claiborne was deprived of fundamental Due Process of Law in litigating such defenses by the judges specially appointed to hear his case.

Second Affirmative Defense

Judge Harry E. Claiborne was deprived of Due Process of Law by outrageous prosecutorial conduct by members of the Executive Branch who wrongfully procured his indictment and conviction through perjured testimony, intimidation of witnesses and unlawful covert surveillance including a mail cover and at least one burglary of Judge Claiborne's residence.

ARTICLE III

Article III alleges that Judge Harry E. Claiborne was convicted of two felony offenses.

First Affirmative Defense

Judge Harry E. Claiborne states that such convictions were wrongfully obtained by the failure and refusal of the Judicial Branch, through the judges specially appointed to preside over his case, to provide fundamental Due Process of Law.

1. Of the three judges specially appointed to review Judge Claiborne's convictions, all judges, including the Honorable Wilbur F. Pell, Senior Circuit Judge for the Seventh Circuit, the Honorable J. Edward Lumbard, Senior Circuit Judge for the Second Circuit and the Honorable Robert H. McWilliams, Senior Circuit Judge for the Tenth Circuit, failed and refused to conduct an independent examination of the material on which the trial court based its rulings, such materials having been sealed by the trial judge and not unsealed or read by anyone from that time through at least the entry of the Honorable Warren Ferguson's, Circuit Judge for the Ninth Circuit, dissenting opinion on December 30, 1985, from the Order of the Ninth Circuit denying a hearing en banc.

2. The failure and refusal of said judges to conduct a proper independent review of the materials on which the trial court based its rulings or to read the briefs on appeal prejudiced Judge Harry E. Claiborne and deprived him of fundamental Due Process of Law. The specially appointed judges set forth critical factual errors in their analysis of the case in their decision reported at 765 F.2d 784 (1985).

3. The trial judge, the Honorable Walter E. Hoffman, failed and refused to provide to Judge Harry E. Claiborne, or his counsel at any meaningful time, critical exculpatory evidence necessary to impeach the false testimony of the prosecution's witness, Joseph Wright; and Judge Hoffman also failed to provide critical evidence which would corroborate the exculpatory testimony of Jerry Watson and Judge Claiborne. Two items of such exculpatory evidence, the existence of which is now known to Judge Claiborne, are:

A. An interview by FBI Special Agent Richard T. Jessinger of Charlotte Travaglia, an employee of Jerry Watson, conducted on or about June 17, 1983. Travaglia's statement corroborates Judge Claiborne's contention at trial that he made full disclosure of this 1980 income to Jerry D. Watson. Travaglia's statement confirms and corroborates that Jerry D. Watson and his office were confused about the proper treatment of that income. Subsequent to such interview, on or about June 17, 1983, Travaglia, who was seriously ill, was frightened or induced by wrongful governmental actions to withhold such exculpatory information from Judge Claiborne and his attorneys.

Travaglia's exculpatory statement was disclosed in May, 1986, after the conclusion of both trials and the direct appeal in this matter.

B. A Memorandum of Interview of government witness Joseph Wright conducted on or about February 16, 1983, was wrongfully withheld from Judge Claiborne and his attorneys by the prosecutors and Judge Walter E. Hoffman until after Judge Claiborne was safely convicted. The Memorandum of Interview disclosed that in August of 1981, Joseph Wright threw away some documents relating to Judge Harry E. Claiborne's file. The Memorandum also disclosed that questions about Judge Claiborne's file were resolved by contacts between Connie Wright, the witness' spouse, and Ginny McElwain, Judge Claiborne's former secretary, in contradiction to the testimony of Joseph Wright at trial. Cross examination of Joseph Wright about the disposal of records in or about August of 1981 would have been crucial in establishing Judge Claiborne's contention that a critical letter of April 11, 1980, to Joseph Wright had most likely been lost, misplaced, misfiled or otherwise erroneously disposed. The prosecutors, who had full knowledge of this Memorandum, argued wrongfully and prejudicially that the absence of the letter in Wright's file could only be explained by a recent fabrication.

Second Affirmative Defense

The convictions upon which Article III of the Articles of Impeachment are based are presently the subject of a Motion to Vacate Judgment and Sentence. The convictions are therefore only technically "final" and may be vacated as the result of evidence of prosecutorial misconduct and judicial misconduct and result of newly discovered and wrongfully withheld exculpatory evidence.

ARTICLE IV

Article IV alleges that Judge Harry E. Claiborne "willfully" and "knowingly" falsified his income on his Federal tax returns for 1979 and 1980.

Judge Harry E. Claiborne has never been afforded an opportunity to fully and fairly litigate those false allegations in a fair and impartial forum. Judge Harry E. Claiborne denies that he willfully and knowingly falsified his income on his Federal tax returns for 1979 and 1980.

Judge Harry E. Claiborne denies that he has betrayed the trust of the people of the United States and reduced confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary thereby bringing disrepute on the Federal Courts and the Administration of Justice.

First Affirmative Defense

As an affirmative defense, Judge Harry E. Claiborne states that certain present and former individual members of the Executive Branch cooperated and collaborated to produce perjured testimony and suppress exculpatory material and have wrongfully betrayed the trust of the American people.

Second Affirmative Defense

As an affirmative defense, Judge Harry E. Claiborne states that members of the Judicial Branch, by failing and refusing to accord to Judge Harry E. Claiborne fundamental Due Process, and to independently review his indictment, trials and convictions, have wrongfully betrayed the trust of the American people.

Respectfully submitted:

Esq., and Honorable
Howard W. Cannon,

SCHEDULE

Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, following a number of special orders, it is the intention of the majority leader to go into executive session at 11 o'clock to begin consideration of the nomination of William Rehnquist to be Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, and votes could occur during today's session. The Senate, the majority leader notes, could be asked to remain in session late into the evening.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of the majority leader's time.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD. I ask unamimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECOGNITION OF THE MINORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The distinguished and able Democratic leader, Senator BYRD of West Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the Chair.

TRADE DEFICIT SETS NEW RECORD

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, American workers had a record Labor Day. The record was an $18 billion trade deficit announced for the month of July. This is the largest 1-month trade deficit in history, exceeding the previous record of $16.4 billion set in January of this year, and $4 billion higher than the average monthly total so far this year.

Putting that number in perspective, the entire trade deficit for 1980 was $36.4 billion. So far this year, the trade deficit is $102 billion.

These totals are stunning. When we break them down, we get a closer look at the trade crisis and that is precisely what it is—a trade crisis. For the third month in a row, agricultural trade was in a deficit. This is no longer a fluke. We cannot tell American farmers that this is just an accident of statistics. For 3 months now we have been a net food importer. The breadbasket of the world is losing out as a great food exporter and, in a shocking reversal, is buying more food than it sells.

In fact, overall imports in July were twice the level of exports. The United States—the world's largest exporter—is buying twice as much from abroad as it is selling. This is devastating news. It gives additional weight to Federal Reserve Chairman Paul Volcker's warning about the destructive impact of the trade deficit. If the American economy is to be strong and vital, we must have growth in exports. No great commercial nation can for very long import twice as much as it exports and survive without serious damage to its standard of living and its economic wellbeing, as well as damage to its national security.

eral groups of workers—already suffering from the indifference of this administration. Textile and show workers—still smarting from the President's veto of legislation to restrict imports of those products—saw imports in July jump to $2.7 billion.

In addition, steel workers saw steel imports increase in July to a level that gives foreign producers control of over 27 percent of the American market. The President had promised—after refusing to accept the International Trade Commission's recommendation for steel quotas—that he would hold imports to 20.2 percent of the U.S. market. Trade Representative Yeutter said on Thursday, September 4, 1 week ago today, that the administration will respond to this increase with a call for consultations with Canada, Sweden, and Taiwan to limit their steel shipments to the United States. That is all very laudable. That news would have been more welcome if action had been taken before the imports had risen.

All of this news is hard on the people of West Virginia and workers and industries throughout the country. Exports are a vital part of my State's economy. Chemicals, coal, manufactured goods, and a host of other products from the State have an important place in the international market. Likewise, steel and other sectors are sensitive to import increases that threaten jobs in the State. The record July trade shortfall is the worst kind of news for exporters and for import-sensitive industries.

The administration had said that its efforts to achieve cooperation on currency values—efforts last September that were undertaken after congressional urgings—would result in improvement in our trade balance. If this is the administration's idea of improvement, American workers and industries cannot stand much more of it. The dollar has been rising—not falling—against the currencies of some of our largest trading partners, including Canada and several Pacific rim nations. Morever, 6 years of neglect and indifference toward America's competitive posture are now taking their toll.

We now face a crisis—a genuine crisis—in America's international economic health. The administration must respond with a new realism, and a new activism. It must develop a serious trade policy—not just a press release.

Senate Democrats are serious about contributing to this debate, and you had better believe that we are serious about taking strong and effective action—action that will address the long-term problems that created this crisis.

Yesterday, Senator JEFF BINGAMAN announced the report of his working group on competitiveness. This is an important document that looks beyond the immediate problems and examines what America must do to address the challenge of a changing world economy. I appointed this working group of Senate Democrats at Senator BINGAMAN's suggestion last fall, and I made him chairman of the group. I am very pleased at the thoughtful, scholarly results of their investigation. Their report is an important step toward responding to the basic causes behind the competitiveness and trade problems.

I commend Senator BINGAMAN and the members of the group for an excellent report. I urge all my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to read it.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a summary of the report, entitled "Promoting America's Living Standard," be printed in the RECORD at the close of my remarks.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ECONOMIC COMPETITIVENESS—PROMOTING AMERICA'S LIVING STANDARD

(The Senate Democratic Working Group on Economic Competitiveness)

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

The Challenge of Competitiveness

Being competitive for a nation in today's world means being able to earn—not borrow—a rising standard of living for its citizens. It means maintaining the productive ability to assure sustained economic growth and security into the future. New technologies and successful economic development strategies abroad have created a fundamentally new and highly competitive challenge for the U.S. The President's Commission on Industrial Competitiveness found that "our ability to compete is eroding," threatening our world leadership and our standard of living. It said that this "New Reality" requires that competitiveness become the economic agenda for America for the next decade. Unfortunately, this and many other calls for urgent action have been ignored. Therefore, U.S. living standards continue to decline. We continue to accumulate massive debt and our productive capacity continues to erode.

Ten Major Aspects of U.S. Competitive Decline:

1. Weekly Earnings: On average, in real terms, are now below 1963 levels;

2. Unemployment Rates: Are trending upward;

3. GNP Growth: Is decelerating from 4 percent in 1950-1960s, to 2.8 percent in 1970s and only 2 percent in 1980s;

4. Federal Debt: Is growing six times faster than GNP and now equals more than 50% of GNP;

5. Total Debt: Business, consumer and government debt are at post 1920s highs—the total now equals almost twice GNP;

6. International Debt: The U.S. became a debtor nation in 1985, is now the world's largest debtor, could owe more than all of Latin America combined by 1988;

7. Merchandise Trade Deficit: Is larger than the GNP of 169 of the 179 countries with which we trade;

8. Service Trade Deficit: Traded services deficits will soon be joined by enormous outflows to service U.S. foreign debt;

9. Investment and Productivity: Are decelerating and are only a fraction of foreign growth rates;

10. Educational Excellence: In competition with students from other developed nations, Americans score near the bottom.

AN ACTION AGENDA

Making Competitiveness the National Priority

By far, the action most urgently needed is for the U.S. to acknowledge the competitiveness challenge and to make competitiveness the national priority. While most Americans are uneasy about their jobs, the economy and their children's future, they have been confused by the constant barrage of confident, complacement rhetoric by the Republican Administration. Firms are being forced to export jobs abroad, the middle class standard of living is declining, and Americans are not learning the new skills they need to compete. Opportunities are being lost; debts are accumulating. But the Republican message is more of the same, business as usual.

Democrats have always been the party of economic growth. And the key to economic growth and prosperity in today's international economy is to be competitive. As long as the nation remains confused about whether or not a competitiveness challenge exists, Democrats must keep the nation's attention focused on that challenge. We must also present a vision of what is required to meet the challenge.

Trade and Exchange Rates

For too long competitiveness has been discussed strictly in terms of trade and exchange rates. Certainly it is important that the U.S. and our trading partners play by the same rules. American workers and firms cannot be expected to suffer indefinitely at the hands of a naive Republican policy that pretends foreign governments and firms are always free traders or will become so if we ask them politely. In fact very little world trade is free, and foreign interests are reluctant to change their self-serving behavior unless we are willing to act to bring about change.

Senate Democrats have long sought a comprehensive trade policy to avoid the ad-hoc protectionism of the Administration. We have introduced numerous such bills, and a year ago several Democrats and Republicans drafted bi-partisan omnibus legislation. The House of Representatives has recently passed such a bill. Yet the Republican majority in the Senate refuses to act. We urge Senate Republicans to join us to send a comprehensive, fair trade reform bill to the President this year.

Our declining ability to compete has also been blamed on the strong dollar. Certainly, at some extremely weak exchange rate, the U.S. trade deficit would be eliminated. Three years of Democratic initiative to persuade the Administration to act on the exchange rate was finally rewarded this past year by the efforts of Treasury Secretary Jim Baker. We urge continued such efforts from the Administration. Unfortunately, a weak dollar drastically undercuts the U.S. living standard and our ability to exercise economic leadership. A more realistic and stable exchange rate, while necessary, will not make us more competitive—in many ways it will only make the challenge more immediate.

Productivity Growth: The Central Challenge of Competitiveness

Our central competitive challenge is to strengthen our economy to the point where we can sustain a strong dollar and raise living standards. This calls for a renewed national focus and a commitment to productivity growth.

Much of the innovation America needs will come from the unmatched, diverse ingenuity, talents and muscle of each individual citizen and firm. Public policy's role is to support private initiatives. The federal government can provide information about technological developments of foreign competitors. It can support excellence in U.S. technology and education. And it can encourage a more mobile workforce. We must also create a single independent body that can cut through the governmental bureaucracy and can help bring those traditional adversaries—management and labor—together to address the competitiveness challenge.

Democrats believe that valuable time and opportunities have been wasted in fruitless searches for a single, sweeping solution to the competitiveness challenge. The time has come for do-able action. Most of the legislation we are introducing has been recommended time and again by panels of leaders from business, labor, academia and government. But it has been ignored.

There is much to be done. The legislation we recommend will help cast the competitiveness challenge in the proper perspective. It will take us through the first essential steps toward meeting that challenge and assuring our future economic growth.

ESSENTIAL FIRST STEPS

I. Information on Foreign Technologies

We must provide better and much more broadly disseminated information on the rapid changes in technologies occuring abroad:

A. Establish within the Department of Commerce a new on-site function for monitoring developments in foreign science and technology.

B. Establish within the U.S. Patent Office a new Office of Technology Assessment, Forecast and Outreach.

II. Technological Excellence

We must support excellence in the development of U.S. technology:

A. Expand and diversify the engineering research centers of the National Science Foundation.

B. Establish an economic competitiveness program to grant 500 graduate fellowships in science and engineering.

C. Establish a fund to assist America's colleges and universities rebuild their R&D infrastructures.

III. Educational improvement

We must strive for excellence in education and training:

A. Establish a graduate fellowship program for teacher training.

B. Expand Federal funding to develop and disseminate quality instructional software and video technologies, and train teachers to use them.

IV. Work Force Mobility

We must encourage participation and mobility of the workforce:

A. Provide the States with additional resources to help the unemployed to become fully productive members of society.

B. Provide the Department of Labor with sufficient funding to fully implement a nationwide computerized job bank.

C. Examine the merits and the costs of initiating a personal portable pension for all Americans.

V. Forum for National Consensus Building

We must create a single independent body to provide an on-going forum for national leadership and cooperation to address the competitiveness challenge:

Establish a National Council on Industrial Competitiveness to:

A. Collect and analyze data about current and future economic trends and market opportunities.

B. Monitor the changing nature of the United States economy and its international competitive capacity.

C. Create a forum where national leaders in business, labor, academia, public interest groups, and government will identify national economic problems, develop recommendations to address such problems, and create a broad public consensus to support the recommendations.

D. Develop and promote a national vision and specific polices which enhance U.S. productivity.

E. Assess private sector requests for governmental assistance or relief and to recommend any reciprocal actions or conditions of such assistance or relief.

F. Establish industry subcouncils of public and private leaders to develop similar long-term forecasts and visions for sectors of the economy.

G. Review legislative and executive policies which affect national economic competitiveness.

H. Report annually to the President and Congress on ways to increase American competitiveness in world markets.

I. Examine all international agreements on foreign trade agreed to by the U.S. monitoring the effect of imports on U.S. industries.

These initiatives will arm Americans with the tools they need to keep the country competitive. But they do have a cost—about $450 million per year. The return on the investment, however, will pay for itself many times over. It will increase economic growth, save jobs and help to maintain and improve American living standards.

Our economic future is at risk. We cannot afford the continuing decline in our living standard, the massive accumulation of debt, and the further erosion of our competitive vitality. Americans must unite to meet the new realities of international competitiveness. Our future economic well-being demands it.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, do I have any time remaining under the order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MATHIAS). The Senator from West Virginia, the distinguished minority leader, has 2 minutes and 50 seconds.

Mr. BYRD. I yield that time to Mr. BINGAMAN, who is the chairman of the working group.

Mr. BINGAMAN. I thank the Senator.

□ 1040

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR BINGAMAN

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BINGAMAN] is recognized.

AMERICA'S LIVING STANDARD ACT OF 1986

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I appreciate very much the kind words of the minority leader, and I appreciate his appointing the working group on economic competitiveness, which has just issued its report, and which I was pleased to chair.

At this point, I send to the desk a bill entitled America's Living Standard Act of 1986, on behalf of myself, Mr. BYRD, Mr. BAUCUS, Mr. KERRY, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. MATSUNAGA, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. RIEGLE, Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Mr. BIDEN, Mr. BURDICK, Mr. CHILES, Mr. DECONCINI, Mr. EAGLETON, Mr. GORE, Mr. HARKIN, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. LAUTENBERG, Mr. MITCHELL, Mr. SARBANES, Mr. SASSER, and Mr. STENNIS.

Mr. President, I ask that the bill be referred to the appropriate committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill will be received and appropriately referred.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the name of Senator METZENBAUM be added as a cosponsor of this measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, first, I wish to comment on some of the points that were made in this report. I understand that the comments will have to be interrupted, as we go on to other activities, and then we can come back to this matter later in the day.

Mr. President, what we first did was try to examine the breadth and the depth of the competitiveness challenge being faced by this country, and we looked at various economic indicators over a long period of time.

We looked at the real average weekly earnings which American workers have enjoyed during the period from 1960 to 1985. During that period we showed that the real average weekly earnings of the American worker have declined from 1962 to 1985—a problem and a concern for all of us in this body.

We looked at the problem of productivity growth and the fact that the U.S. rate of growth of productivity has been less than that of any of the other major industrialized nations in the world during the last 30 to 35 years.

We looked at the U.S. merchandise trade balance and saw, of course, that that trade balance has become a major problem and is expected to approach $180 billion this year.

We looked at the U.S. net international investment position, and again saw that just in the last 2 or 3 years, the United States has fallen into a deficit position with regard to investment, and that situation is worsening every month.

We looked at the amount invested in plants and equipment by American businesses, and again saw a decline in the 1980's from the level of investment in plant and equipment that we have enjoyed in either the 1960's or the 1970's.

Those were some of the economic indicators we looked at.

Mr. President, based on these trends—I believe they are irrefutable trends—we then went on to try to fashion a list of concrete recommendations that we could make to try to come to grips with some of the underlying problems causing these adverse economic trends. We came up with 11 specific, concrete legislative recommendations which are contained in the measure I introduced a few moments ago.

Those proposals include efforts to improve our ability to monitor information on foreign technological developments. We suggest that an office be established in the U.S. Patent Office which would do technology assessment forecast and outreach.

We also suggest that in the Department of Commerce, a new onsite function be established in foreign embassies—five foreign embassies, in particular—for the establishment of an Office of Technology Assessment, for the new technological developments occurring in foreign nations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time yielded to the Senator from New Mexico has expired.

Mr. BINGAMAN. I thank the Chair. We will return to this subject later.

□ 1050

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I apologize to my colleagues. We were attending the joint meeting with the Brazilian President. I would just take a couple minutes of the leader's time and reserve the remainder of my time.

REHNQUIST AND SCALIA

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, this morning the Senate begins final deliberations on the President's Supreme Court nominations. He has chosen two men of unimpeachable character and credentials to shoulder the tremendous responsibilities of our Nation's highest court.

They have endured microscopic inspection in the Judiciary Committee. And they have seen and heard more than their fair share of political rhetoric. But as far as this Senator is concerned, William Rehnquist and Antonin Scalia have passed inspection with flying colors.

So, in case there is any doubt at all—or if the critics harbor any hopes at all—let me indicate again that Justice Rehnquist and Judge Scalia in my opinion will be confirmed by the Senate and they will be confirmed by overwhelming numbers.

GRAFFITI SMEAR

I am aware of the last ditch attempt by some to derail William Rehnquist's confirmation to be the new Chief Justice.

In truth, however, it is just another attempt to deface a brilliant career, and I do not believe it will succeed.

Ever since the President nominated these two dedicated jurists, the newspapers, the radio and TV and the Halls of Congress have been filled with all kinds of technical legal talk. It can be confusing and arcane for any of us; and certainly, it may not be clear to many Americans who are following this story. But if you cut through all the legalese, the case boils down to one simple fact: Those who would torpedo these nominations are liberal, and the President's nominees are conservative.

CARRYING OUT THE REAGAN MANDATE

But it just seems to me that the people voted for Ronald Reagan by landslide proportions in 1980 and 1984. And they expect the President to carry their mandate all the way to the Supreme Court. That means the Court will be a people's court, not a court for special interests.

SALUTE TO THE CHAIRMAN

Mr. President, I salute the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, the distinguished senior Senator from South Carolina, Senator THURMOND, for his superb handling of the President's Supreme Court nominations. His work in the committee was exemplary: The deliberations moved quickly, but not so fast as to deny any Member—or any point of view—their fair chance and their fair hearing, and that is important in the process in the Senate.

We do have a tremendous amount of work to do before we adjourn. These are important nominations. They deserve full and complete debate.

And having said that, I would hope that we could move as quickly as possible on both these nominations.

The issue has been more than explored by the committee. It is time to wrap up the Supreme Court nominations and move on to the business that awaits us.

I am reminded again by the Attorney General that we are getting into the fall term and it is very important that these two justices, Judge Scalia be confirmed as a Justice and Justice Rehnquist be confirmed as the Chief Justice, so they will be prepared to participate in the fall term.

CONTRA AID

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, let me also just indicate very quickly that I have received a letter from the President this morning. The President, recognizes our heavy work schedule prior to sine die adjournment which I still believe should come on October 3. It is going to require working on Mondays and Fridays in both the House and Senate and there may be a Saturday session or two, but I believe we can complete our work.

But the President is very concerned as he has a right to be about our failure to act on the $100 million for Nicaraguan freedom fighters. The President indicates:

> The Nicaraguan freedom fighters cling to our promise of assistance. The affirmative votes of the House and Senate have confirmed congressional commitment to that goal. However, months have passed since House action and weeks have passed since the Senate reaffirmed its position. In the intervening time, supplies of food and medicine have been drained and the ability of the democratic resistance to defend itself has been significantly reduced. There has been no lack of resolve on the part of the Soviets or their proxies in arming and sustaining a regime that clearly seeks to destroy the hope of freedom for millions in Central America.

The President is right. We have been starving the freedom fighters around here for the past several months. It is by design. It is deliberate. We understand there will now be an effort by the Democratic leadership in the House to further delay coming to grips with this issue by somehow attaching the Contra aid provision to the so-called continuing resolution.

Now, in my view, that is not what the majority of Americans and I think the majority of Congress had in mind.

This is a very sensitive issue. It is a very controversial issue, but it has been decided. It has been decided twice in the U.S. Senate with a bipartisan vote. If we want the Russians, the Cubans, and the Communists to strengthen their beachhead in that part of the world while we sit back and do nothing, in fact, do less than nothing, refusing to help those who want freedom and liberty, then I believe we have made a grave mistake.

I would also suggest that this is a concern of the distinguished subcommittee chairman, Senator MATTINGLY. On his behalf I submit the following statement.

MILITARY CONSTRUCTION CONFERENCE STALLED

Mr. President, on behalf of Mr. MATTINGLY, I wish to state that 1 month ago today, on August 11, the Senate began consideration of H.R. 5052, the fiscal year 1987 military construction appropriation bill. Three days later, after much debate, the Senate passed that legislation. That bill contained the funding for critically needed improvements to the airfields, the ports, and the training grounds used by the United States and its allies. It contained funding for family housing units that are in such short supply, and that are so important to our service men and women and their families. In addition, Mr. President, the legislation contained funding for the Nicaraguan freedom fighters. This provision, Mr. President, had been included by the House in the military construction bill. It was not the Senate's idea to incorporate aid to the freedom fighters with the military construction bill. In fact, the Senate had earlier this year approved freestanding legislation providing such assistance. But the House leadership did not see fit to act on that freestanding resolution.

HOUSE REFUSES TO ACT

And now, Mr. President, 1 month after the Senate approved the military construction bill, and the assistance to the Nicaraguan democratic resistance forces, there has been no action taken to begin the conference negotiations that would enable the legislation to be sent to the President for his signature. This is particularly disturbing, Mr. President, because there are no differences in the packages of assistance that were approved by both bodies. Most of the items in dispute are the usual differences that occur in funding particular military construction projects. These differences should be resolved in short order once the conference begins. But Mr. President, the House continues to hold this legislation, and the important military construction funds that it contains, hostage because of the Central American assistance package. A package, Mr. President, that the House itself decided to include in the legislation and which has now been approved in the same form by both bodies.

ACTION IS NEEDED NOW

The President has called upon the Congress to expedite action on the military construction conference and send him a bill. I endorse his request and stand ready to assist in whatever manner I can. The issue is too important, and the stakes in Central America are too great, to allow our policy to become one of delay and obstruction. I urge our House colleagues to agree immediately to a conference on this bill, resolve those issues that are in dispute, and send the measure to the President for his signature.

Mr. President, I remind my colleagues, regardless of their views on that issue, we have settled it. We have had two votes in the Senate. They have had a couple or three votes in the House. There has been bipartisan support. I ask unanimous consent that the President's letter be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
September 10, 1986, Washington, DC.

Hon. BOB DOLE,
Majority Leader,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR BOB: As the Congress returns to an exceedingly heavy work schedule prior to sine die adjournment, I wanted to once again convey to you my grave concern about the situation in Central America and the urgency of completing final action on a compromise plan to provide assistance to the Nicaraguan freedom fighters. This bipartisan proposition has passed the House and Senate and now awaits final conference action on the Military Construction Appropriations bill.

The Nicaraguan freedom fighters cling to our promise of assistance. The affirmative votes of the House and Senate have confirmed congressional commitment to that goal. However, months have passed since House action and weeks have passed since the Senate reaffirmed its position. In the intervening time, supplies of food and medicine have been drained and the ability of the democratic resistance to defend itself has been significantly reduced. There has been no lack of resolve on the part of the Soviets or their proxies in arming and sustaining a regime that clearly seeks to destroy the hope of freedom for millions in Central America.

Bob, it is my hope that you will assist in expediting conference action on the Military Construction Appropriations bill in order that it might reach my desk for signature as quickly as possible. Time is short, and we must avoid further delay in order to sustain those in Central America who have committed themselves to democracy and freedom.

Sincerely,

RONALD REAGAN.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I indicate to the President on the floor of the Senate that we are going to do the best we can to sustain his view and that is to act expeditiously on this aid.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the majority leader yield?

Mr. DOLE. I yield.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, Mr. ROCKEFELLER is in need of some time to speak on the subject matter of competitiveness. It is my understanding that Mr. TRIBLE is not going to need his time. Will the majority leader enter an order transferring that time?

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the time of Mr. TRIBLE be given to the distinguished Senator from West Virginia, Senator ROCKEFELLER.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the distinguished Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, will the distinguished minority leader yield?

Mr. BYRD. I am pleased to yield.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I ask the distinguished majority leader if there is any other time. I also expected to speak as did the Senator from West Virginia. On the other hand, if there is not I can wait until tomorrow.

Mr. DOLE. I will be happy to yield the Senator the remainder of my time. I have 4 or 5 minutes remaining.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, will the majority leader yield for a question on procedure of special orders this morning?

Mr. DOLE. I yield.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Does this circumvent the procedure that has been established. Or, is this in lieu of additional time given from the leadership?

Mr. DOLE. I understand it will still be in the order given of Senators HAWKINS, PROXMIRE, MURKOWSKI, and I will be happy to yield the time to the Senator from Massachusetts any time I have remaining.

Mr. KERRY. I appreciate that.

I do not want to disrupt the process. Will that time come immediately?

Mr. DOLE. I think it will follow the Senator from Alaska, Senator MURKOWSKI.

Mr. BYRD. So it does not interrupt the sequence of the orders already presented.

I ask unanimous consent that the time for this interruption not come out of the distinguished majority leader's order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that up to 5 minutes of my time or if additional time is needed be yielded to the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts following the Senator from Alaska.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR PROXMIRE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Wisconsin is recognized for not to exceed 5 minutes.

THE CONGRESS MAKES THE BIG MOVE FOR ARMS CONTROL

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, what, if any, limits should the Congress impose on itself in setting that most critical modern element of foreign policy—arms control? Throughout most of American history the President—not the Congress—has served as the prime force for our country in the conduit of foreign policy. Only the President or people acting on the authority of the President and at the direction of the President can negotiate with foreign countries. Throughout American history the President has been firmly in command of foreign policy negotiations, particularly with respect to treaty negotiations. Now the country is undergoing a formidable challenge to the President's rarely questioned foreign policy domination.

The House of Representatives has moved into arms control with a roar. There has been no occasion since the establishment of the Constitution in 1789 when the Congress has so boldly and emphatically threatened the President's foreign policy domination as it is at this moment. If the arms control initiative taken by the House in the Defense authorizations bill is sustained in any significant way in conference and by the Congress as a whole it will constitute a radical shift in Federal power. It will also dramatically change U.S. arms control policy. It will do so by establishing the basis for far and away the most significant slow down in the nuclear arms race since the dawn of the nuclear age.

Until this moment arms control has been strictly the President's property. Congress has been irrelevant. Oh, sure sometimes Members of Congress have been critical. Sometimes they have been supportive. And the Senate has a specific constitutional power in its responsibility to ratify or refuse to ratify arms control agreements. With the conspicuous exception of the Senate's denial of U.S. membership in the League of Nations some 65 years ago the ratification power has been virtually meaningless.

If a President disapproved a treaty, he would simply refuse to send it up to the Senate for ratification. The President would prevail. The treaty would die. If the President approved of a treaty and the Senate refused to ratify it, the President would put it into effect and keep it in effect by Executive order. Again the President would prevail. The treaty would continue in effect in spite of Senatorial disapproval even if the disapproval were overwhelming.

But now the action of the House changes all that dramatically. By a decisive 60-vote margin the House has voted to withhold funding for nuclear weapons tests that exceed 1 kiloton for 1 year beginning January 1, 1987, provided the Soviet Union does the same. The Soviets must also agree to station seismic monitoring stations throughout the U.S.S.R. to assure verification of compliance. If the Congress sustains this House action even in part it would mark heartening progress in bringing the nuclear weapons arms race under control. It would also mark an astonishing successful entry into foreign policy by the Congress.

Could a Presidential veto kill this congressional coup? No way. The President cannot secure the funds for testing unless the Congress affirms the funding: Presidential vetoes can stop funding. They cannot create it. So if the Congress persists it can win at least some significant limit on nuclear weapons testing.

That is not all. In the same Defense authorization bill the House withheld funding for 1 year on tests of anti-satellite weapons in space. It stopped funding of chemical weapons for a year. It reduced the funding proposed by the President for star wars by $2.2 billion. It denied funds the President announced he intended to spend to deliberately violate limitations imposed by the SALT II treaty.

Sure, the House bill goes further than the Congress as a whole will eventually enact into law. But the Congress will go a significant way down the path blazed by the House. So it is now clear that the Congress of the United States will very likely take the most profound foreign policy step it has taken, at least since the Senate killed American participation in the League of Nations. In doing so, the Congress will significantly advance arms control.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR HAWKINS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. PRESSLER). Under the previous order, the Senator from Florida [Mrs. HAWKINS] is recognized for not to exceed 5 minutes.

DRUG EDUCATION

Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, we all seem to be running over each other lately to appear to be tough on drugs. As the election nears, and as poll after poll tells us that drugs are on the people's minds, we race off in a hundred different directions trying to cope with this problem.

Included in that "hundred different" areas is drug education. We now hear that "we must fight drugs on the high seas. We must blockade our borders and when we get around to it, we must educate our children about drugs."

All I can say is, it is about time!

I will not spell out for you the horrifying statistics. We all know that drugs have invaded our schools. That an entire generation of future leaders is at risk. That millions of American children are so strung out they cannot even see, let alone do their homework.

How have we allowed this to happen? A drug educator said it best when she testified before my Drug Abuse Subcommittee I chaired last month. She said:

> We all know what drug education is. It's what the kids get when there's no gym class because its raining out. Drug education, ranks somewhere behind drivers ed, as far as priorities of education.

So now we are saying we want to do something to end this situation. Bills have been introduced to do something about drug education. But it is not enough to just do something. You must be specific. Have you seen the House bill? I have. It is completely nonspecific. It says they are going to spend $350 million to do something about drug education. What are we going to do? It does not say.

Are we going to specifically demand that all drug education curricula teach children to say "no" to drugs? Or are we going to teach that it is OK to use drugs as long as you do not drive while you are doing it? It does not say.

Are we going to followup? Are we going to evaluate drug education curricula to find out if they are working? It does not say.

Are we going to insist that drug education materials be up to date—that they tell children what medical science knows now about the harmful effects of drugs? Or are we simply going to let schools brush the dust off the same old drug books and movies they have been using since 1974? It does not say.

The House says, "We will blindly spend money to do something about drugs in our schools." I would suggest, Mr. President, that this is an invitation to disaster.

There is a saying that is 19 centuries old, but it still applies, and it apples to this argument—nothing can be done hastily and prudently.

We are considering legislation which would provide hundreds of millions of Federal dollars for drug education. Yet we have no firm agreement about the proper way to teach children on this subject.

We continue to hear horror stories about classes in "responsible use" of illegal drugs. This will continue if we are not careful. If we do not realize that there is a right way to teach about drugs and that there is a wrong way. We must promote positive, value-laden drug education. Children must be taught to avoid peer pressure. To say "no" to drugs and when they are approached to be able to come out with their heads held high.

Proper and appropriate drug education is essential to our future. It is too important to be promoted blindly and without thought. Before we write a blank check, we should closely examine what we will be getting for our money.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR MURKOWSKI

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Alaska [Mr. MURKOWSKI] is recognized for not to exceed 5 minutes.

DESIGNATING APRIL 9, 1987, AS "NATIONAL FORMER PRISONER OF WAR DAY"

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, I rise to introduce a joint resolution which would designate April 9, 1987, as "National Former Prisoner of War Recognition Day."

For several years now the Congress has recognized the importance of setting aside a special day to honor those Americans, who, in the course of the various conflicts in which this Nation has been called to participate, were interned as prisoners of war. At the same time the Congress has also recognized the plight of the families of servicemen listed as missing in action and the possibility that some of those men may still be alive.

Though there are similarities which exist between the concerns of those who have returned home from a POW status and those who are still missing, the POW/MIA recognition day has become primarily a reminder to all Americans that we have not forogtten our missing servicemen, the possibility that some of them may be held captive today, and that we are dedicated to the fullest possible accounting of those who have failed to return home.

Mr. President, I have a very strong interest in and commitment to working for a full accounting of those still missing in action. I have traveled to Southeast Asia to meet with Vietnamese and Lao officials, have chaired seven hearings recently on the issue of live sighting reports of American servicemen missing in Southeast Asia, and will continue to actively work toward a more acceptable resolution of these issues.

Today, I am introducing a resolution at the request of the national commander of the American Ex-POW's to recognize those who were fortunate enough to be returned home. I agree with him that both organizations are worthy of special recognition. At the request of the American Ex-POW's I am introducing this special day for former POW's because it is important to recognize those veterans who have returned after experiencing untold suffering. They were tortured, starved, and forced to witness or even participate in the execution of their buddies, and suffered many other forms of inhumane and brutal treatment. Upon repatriation, medical examinations were often inadequate and the former POW—so glad to be home—did not wish to complain, or remain in a hospital after the months or years of being in captivity. Unfortunately, this procedure resulted in inadequate medical records which have made it very difficult in many cases for these partriotic veterans to prove service connection.

The Veterans' Affairs Committee, which I chair, has been and continues to be very responsive to these concerns expressed by former prisoners of war. This year the committee has approved legislation that would add residuals of frostbite to the list of presumptive diseases for which an ex-POW can be service connected if the veteran had been held in circumstances in which frostbite could have occurred.

This proposed day of recognition would be the anniversary of the day in 1942 on which 10,000 Americans became prisoners of war, April 9—the day Bataan fell to the Japanese.

The American Ex-POW's serve as fine representatives of those Americans who suffered and sacrificed greatly as POW's in the cause of freedom. I ask my colleagues' support and favorable consideration of this resolution which would recognize the contributions and sacrifices of every American prisoner of war who has returned home, and to their families who waited, and prayed, so faithfully for their return.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the letter of request from W. Curtis Musten, the national commander of the American Ex-POW's and the text of the joint resolution be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMERICAN EX-PRISONERS OF WAR,
Arlington, TX, July 29, 1986.

Hon. FRANK H. MURKOWSKI,
Chairman, Committee on Veterans' Affairs, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN MURKOWSKI: The American Ex-Prisoners of War would appreciate Committee consideration of es; blishing POW Recognition Day on April 9 of each year, separate from MIA day.

We have attempted with partial success to have one day serve both purposes. In fact, it was the American Ex-Prisoners of War who suggested that MIA's be included. But there has been constant confusion over the exact date to be used, the League of Families often preferring a date in conflict with our National Convention. The two groups have slightly overlapping but separate interests. Ex-POWs were definitely in the hands of an enemy, remained loyal to the U.S., and were glad to get back home. There is a question about how many MIA's have remained in Southeast Asia of their own free will, and indeed how many MIA's still remain in Southeast Asia at all.

The merger of the two groups in a joint Recognition Day leads to a degree of confusion in the minds of the Congress and the public. Ex-POWs are all home, and interested in national defense and a strong economy as well as some measure of health and related benefits for ex-POWs. Families of MIA's have entirely different interests, related to accounting for the dead and missing Americans in Southeast Asia.

Like all Americans, we share compassionate feelings toward families of MIA's. But a joint Recognition Day does not seem to contribute toward the interests of either group.

May I respectfully request that this issue be reviewed by the Committee. We will, of course, be amenable to whatever decision is finally made.

Sincerely yours,

W. CURTIS MUSTEN,
National Commander.

S.J. RES. 411

Whereas the United States has fought in many wars;

Whereas thousands of Americans who served in such wars were captured by the enemy;

Whereas many Americans, while held captive as prisoners of war, were subjected to brutal and inhuman treatment by their enemy captors in violation of international codes and customs for the treatment of prisoners of war, and many of such Americans died from such treatment;

Whereas the sacrifices of Americans who were prisoners of war are deserving of national recognition: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That April 9, 1987, shall be designated as "National Former Prisoner of War Recognition Day" and the President of the United States is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to commemorate such day with appropriate programs, ceremonies, and activities.

KANSAI AIRPORT

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, I bring to the floor today a very important matter involving trade and market accessibility. Over the next decade, over $61 billion worth of major public works projects will be built in our friendly neigboring country of Japan. The first project, the new Kansai International Airport, an $8 billion project to be constructed on a manmade island in Osaka Bay, is already in the preliminary stages.

United States firms have expressed considerable interest in participating in the construction of Kansai Airport and future projects, and rightly so, they are among the most competitive in the world. For the past 2 years, the administration has been knocking at Japan's door to gain meaningful access for United States firms to participate in these projects. However, despite these efforts, the Japanese Government and private sector have continued to follow a practice of closed designated bidding which has effectively precluded foreign participation in this lucrative market. At the same time, in 1985 alone, Japanese construction firms won contracts in the United States worth over $1.8 billion.

On June 24, the Senate Republican Conference Task Force on International Trade Policy, which I chair, sent an inquiry to the U.S. Trade Representative under section 305 of the Trade Act of 1974 to request that an investigation be launched into Japan's unwillingness to allow United States firms to compete for equipment and service sales on the Kansai project.

The response which we received from USTR confirmed our belief that the practices surrounding construction of Kansai Airport constitute unfair trade practices as outlined in section 301 of the Trade Act of 1974.

Our inquiry was followed by letters from USTR Clayton Yeutter and Secretary of Commerce Malcolm Baldrige to the Japanese Government, stating that only immediate introduction of an open, transparent and nondiscriminatory procurement system would forstall formal trade action on our part.

In mid-August, Prime Minister Nakasone gave his assurance to Secretary Baldrige that foreign firms would be allowed to participate in the Kansai project on a fair and equal basis. At the end of the month, a trade delegation led by Under Secretary Smart of Commerce went to Tokyo to press Japan to translate Prime Minister Nakasone's commitment into a written understanding spelling out the principles of a nondiscriminatory system to be immediately applied to Kansai and other major public works contracting. The result was a very weak letter from the Minister of Transportation covering only the Kansai Airport project, and in essence only the second and third phases of the project, not the initial phases of design and engineering in which United States firms are extremely competitive.

Mr. President, we are approaching a crossroad and the question is whether the United States Government will deal with the Japanese construction firms in the same manner as the Government of Japan has dealt with United States construction firms.

We await the results of talks to occur within the next few weeks. However, what we must expect out of the Government of Japan is the guarantee that United States firms will have a defined responsibility for Kansai and other major projects coming out of Japan.

While there has been much public discussion about providing the opportunity to compete, we must understand that in Japan, the opportunity to compete is different from the actual engagement of competition itself.

This is particularly true in the area of construction where ancient procedures and relations currently preclude foreign firms from participation in these projects.

Given the clearly established strength of the U.S. industry in this particular area, there is no question as to our competitive strength and capability.

The Japanese Government must demonstrate that there is the political will in Japan to deliver with specific contractual opportunities in that growing market and allow United States firms to participate just as we have allowed Japan to participate in our country.

The Reagan administration must be prepared to take all legal action should these ancient traditions prevail again in building Kansai and other major projects.

If we don't get results, then the Congress must be prepared to legislate a remedy. If necessary, I will offer an amendment granting Japanese construction firms access to the United States construction market only if Japan grants meaningful access to United States firms.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KERRY] is recognized for not to exceed 5 minutes.

Mr. KERRY. Thank you, Mr. President.

REPORT OF THE ECONOMIC COMPETITIVENESS WORKING GROUP

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I would like to begin by commending my colleague, the distinguished Senator from New Mexico, for his leadership on the Economic Competitiveness Working Group of the Democratic Caucus.

Over the past year our working group has closely examined the health of the economy in this country, particularly the manufacturing sector. Like so many others who approach this issue, Mr. President—and unfortunately there have been too many others who have approached it in recent years whose findings have been ignored—we have concluded that the ability of this country to remain No. 1 is quickly slipping away. The preeminent position which we have held in the world economy cannot be taken for granted any longer. America's trade deficit, as we know, is huge. It is a matter of record. Savings and investment are also in decline. Unfortunately, each of these aggregate figures seem to slide off the consciousness of most decisionmakers like water off a duck's back. Unfortunately, we cannot afford that luxury anymore.

Productivity of this country is lower than that of our trading partners. Between 1950 and 1985, annual productivity growth was 5.93 percent in Japan, 4.23 percent in West Germany, and only 1.15 percent in the United States.

For the last 3 years during which other countries have had anywhere from 3.05 percent in Japan, to 2.1 percent in West Germany, we have been outdistanced by Great Britain, with productivity growth of 2.8, which traditionally has had significant problems. During that period of time, the United States of America, the so-called engine or locomotive of the world, had an increase of only 0.86 percent.

We have seen the doubling of our Government's debt from $1 trillion to $2 trillion. We have seen a trade balance continuing to grow where now the United States is the greatest debtor nation in the world. And in the next few years, if we continue at this rate, our own debt will far exceed that of Latin American countries combined.

So, Mr. President, we are in a state where we have to make a new set of decisions. In the course of our deliberations, our group surveyed the findings and recommendations of more than 21 blue ribbon panels and commissions. We looked at the Young Commission, and others, and we found the remarkable degree of consensus on the need for a national strategy for recapturing our lead and for ensuring a prosperous and competitive American future.

The consistent theme throughout all of these reports was that we need effective leadership at the national level to provide us with a national strategy. And we heard this from the public sector, from labor unions, from the private sector, from universities, from business schools, corporations, and consultants.

Unfortunately, there seems to be a dominant theme within the current administration that says, no, we are bouncing back; no, we do not have to pay attention to these economic aggregate indexes; and somehow things will take care of themselves.

The only problem is, Mr. President, they are not taking care of themselves. These indicators are growing worse and it is clear that other nations are out-competing us in the marketplace, and are taking our jobs away. Everyone knows that every $1 billion of shift in the international trade deficit represents the loss of some 25,000 American jobs. The greatest export of the United States today are the jobs of American citizens.

So we are proposing a whole set of efforts that we must undertake from improved training and work force improvements to strengthening our math and science education. How many times have we heard that, Mr. President? I can remember hearings the President of the United States, in his State of the Union Message a few years ago, signaling to America the need for improvements in math and science education, and yet every year, the same President and that administration come up here and cut our efforts to do so. In so doing, I think they are cutting away at the very future of the United States.

This is not partisan politics. It is not just rhetoric anymore. These figures are real. We are losing our competitive edge. Our companies cannot make up for wage differentials, unless we have a new generation that is prepared to become the entrepreneurs and technicians of the future with the scientific and technological know-how, with the ability to have a marketplace and compete in that marketplace, our standard of living will continue to go down.

Mr. President, Americans today are earning real wages that are at the equivalent of 1963 real wages, and the only thing that is hiding that fact is a large number of American families now depend on two wage earners instead of one. But Americans have undergone a pay cut involuntarily over the course of the last 15 years. Unless we harness our energy, our creatitivity, our resources, and increase the ability of our universities and our laboratories to function, to teach state of the art, unless we have the kind of venture capital incentives that are targeted toward the growth opportunities of the future, we are simply not going to remain preeminent. We will not be No. 1.

I am confident that this country has that ability, obviously. It is a matter of making up our minds to do it, and tragically, here in Washington, we have the tendency to push off important issues for immediate crises decisions. Though much of this is just nitty-gritty problem-solving which will not capture the headlines on a day-to-day basis, the fact is that nothing could be more important or more real to the American people.

I hope that the competitiveness working group's recommendations will not be taken and shunted off in a partisan fashion, but that they will be examined, and that with the leadership of Senator BINGAMAN and others who care about this issue, we will build a consensus that will permit us to indeed remain No. 1.

I yield whatever remaining time I have.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR LEVIN

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Michigan, Mr. LEVIN, is recognized for not to exceed 5 minutes.

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. I thank the Chair.

THE MYTH OF FAIRNESS FOR ALL

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, today I would like to continue my discussion of the conference report on the tax reform bill. I have already looked at how this bill will increase taxes on over 15 million middle-and low-income taxpayers; how it will make it harder to deal with the budget deficit; and how it contains many hidden costs. Today, I would like to focus on some of the new unfairness which it creates. Shortly after the conference concluded, one of the bill's supporters said, "I go away not completely happy, but I believe the results are good. Most of all we sought improved fairness." Mr. President, if that was the goal, then there are too many instances in which the conference report falls far short of the mark. Let me give a few examples.

First, and possibly foremost, are the repeated instances of retroactivity in this bill where changes in the tax law are applied to actions which people have already taken in reliance on the current law. This was also a problem with the Senate version of the bill, and many, many Senators made speeches on how it should be remedied—at least in part—in the conference. Unfortunately, after the conference was finished, the problem of retroactivity remained.

The investment tax credit is still repealed, retroactive to January 1986. The deductions of the losses on certain investments which were made years ago are still eliminated. The deduction of the interest on education and car loans which have already been taken out is still ended. This tax reform bill, which its sponsors hope will form a new bond of trust between the public and the Government is thus, instead, rooted in a fundamental breach of faith. It may claim to seek fairness, but for millions of taxpayers it will be seen as an arbitrary changing of the rules in the middle of the game by a distant government in Washington.

The retroactivity of certain provisions of this bill has given rise to another unfairness. Tens of millions of Americans will be affected by these retroactive changes. But hundreds of them will not be because they had access to the conference committee which enabled them to obtain a transition rule so that their activity could continue to be taxed under the old law. Now, let me make clear that as a matter of substance I am willing to acknowledge that many—maybe most—of these transition rules are justified on equity grounds in that they prevent the rules being changed in the middle of the game for certain specific businesses and individuals. The problem is that for every one of these businesses and individuals for whom there is a special rule, there could be thousands similarly situated for whom there is only the cold glare of retroactivity. It is the highly selective process behind this remedy and not the remedy itself which is unfair—and make no mistake about it, it is unfair.

Second, this bill is unfair because it gives huge tax cuts to some very wealthy individuals and tax increases to others of very modest means. How is it fair to be giving a $30,000 tax cut to a taxpayer—who happens to be President of the United States—making almost $400,000 a year at the same time we are increasing taxes on an elderly couple with high medical expenses making $15,000 a year? How does it improve the confidence that people have in the fairness of their Government if that Government passes a tax bill which increases taxes on 5.8 million taxpayers making less than $20,000 a year at the same time that it is giving tens of thousands of dollars in tax cuts to more than half of the taxpayers making over $200,000 a year? It does not. It simply does not.

Third, this bill makes an unfair and illogical distinction between those taxpayers with significant equity in their homes and those taxpayers who have little or no equity in their homes or who are renters. This bill would allow homeowners seeking a way around the repeal of the consumer interest deduction to take out a second mortgage on the equity in their home. Those with enough equity in their home could use that money to pay for consumer items and deduct the interest on the second mortgage. But renters and those with little or no equity would not be in a position to take out a second mortgage and to deduct that interest even if they were trying to meet major expenses such as medical bills and tuition costs. So, under this bill you could have a taxpayer making $30,000 a year with a home in which he has built up a lot of equity and a taxpayer with the same income who rents. The first taxpayer can, in effect, deduct some consumer interest; the second cannot. So much for achieving the goal of fairness by taxing equal incomes equally.

It is unfortunate, truly unfortunate, that a bill like this one which in some respects does a lot to improve the fairness in the Tax Code—such as with the toughened minimum tax on profitable corporations and wealthy individuals—is marked and marred by these examples of unfairness.

This new unfairness cannot be solved through a minor fine-tuning of this bill, either now or later. It can only be solved by defeating this conference report and reorienting tax reform so that it "most of all" will seek improved fairness and not take two steps backward as it takes one step forward in the process.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. LEVIN. I am happy to yield.

Mr. LONG. The Senator from Michigan is making some good points, Mr. President, but I am sure he realizes that there are counter arguments that can be made for the other side on some of these points.

Is not quite a bit of the argument he is making directed against the things that he would say were wrong to begin with when we passed the bill? In other words, the Senator from Louisiana was one of the conferees. While the Senator would like to accommodate the Senator's views with regard to the difference between the House and the Senate, as one who spoke for the Senate at the conference it seemed to this Senator that it was my duty to support the Senate language even though in some cases I did not necessarily agree with that language, that that was the best way. There are several things that I did not agree with. Is it not true that quite a few of the things the Senator is criticizing here are things that he found wrong with the bill as it passed the Senate?

Mr. LEVIN. Some of the things are, and some are new unfairnesses added in conference.

It is true that some of the things I mentioned were in the Senate bill and not recommended in conference. Let me also add for my friend that when this bill came through the Senate, Senator after Senator said, "This retroactivity is bad. We expect the conferees to correct it."

Well, what I am pointing out is that the retroactivity which is so unfair in our bill was not corrected in conference. I am also pointing out that there were some additional unfairnesses which we believe were added by the conference.

Mr. LONG. But is it not true that everything that was in the House bill as it passed the House, which did not find its way into the Senate bill, was presumably something we Senators did not think very much of because we knew about it and if we thought it was good legislation we would probably have included it? We needed the revenue to help pay for the things we are doing. If we had thought it important, that the part not in the Senate bill was good, we would have put it in. The Senator is criticizing things in the House bill which found their way back into the conference. I hope he lets the listening audience know that there were things that we did not like to begin with, never did like and do not like now. But when you go to conference, in order to get the part that you think is good, you have to accept some things that you do not think are very good and some that you think are lousy. Your cannot have it all your way in conference. You have to give something in order to get something.

The Senator has been a very faithful conferee and he knows that.

Mr. LEVIN. Absolutely. We are looking at this bill as it comes back from the conference and we are asking, "Now, on these retroactive features that so many of us spoke against, were they corrected in conference as the hope was expressed they would be?"

The answer is no, they were not. The retroactivity is still in this bill. My point is there are some added features which are also in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR ROCKEFELLER

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ROCKEFELLER] is recognized for not to exceed 5 minutes.

AMERICA'S LIVING STANDARD ACT OF 1986

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I am pleased to join Senator BINGAMAN and 20 of my colleagues in introducing this important legislation. The legislation, like the task force which recommended it, addresses the central economic issue facing our country: meeting the competitive challenge and building our economic future in a rapidly changing world economy.

President Reagan points with pride to the economic recovery, 9 million new jobs, and the low inflation rates. The administration speaks of our massive trade deficit as if it were a minor cloud in an otherwise sunny sky.

It doesn't work that way. In a world economy, a nation's trade picture is probably the fairest and most fundamental measure of its economic condition—not some peripheral concern. Our trade deficit reached $148 billion last year, and it is still rising. A nation that buys $3 billion more from abroad every week than it sells is draining its economic strength.

The Reagan administration has given us a hollow recovery, in which the foundation of our economic strength has been crumbling—not fortified. For the last 2 years, the recovery has limped along, fueled by massive debt at all levels: consumer borrowing; corporate debt; the Federal budget deficit. The sickness affecting our basic industries has also infected our high-technology sectors, all of which have lost ground to imports. We sometimes talk of our trade problems as if they were limited to Japan, or Japan and the other Asian nations. But, in fact, we are running an enormous trade deficit with Canada, our leading trading partner, and with the European Community, where our trade has been in surplus until very recently. Too often, the economic recovery seems to come down to this: we buy imported products, and we borrow the money abroad to pay for it. That is not the formula for economic prosperity; it is the formula for an economic disaster.

What is important about the work of the task force, it seems to this Senator, is that we have tried to consider the full scope of the country's competitive challenge. There is no question that arguments could be made about the fallacy of certain economic policies or the fallacy of certain trade policies. And we must correct those policies. But we are not going to restore America's competitive position fully even if we address both of those areas completely.

There is another missing part to this question of competitiveness and that is the range of things that we have to do to make this Nation more productive.

We need a first-class education system. We need a commitment to technology, research, and development which is not now present in our country.

We need a flexible and well-trained work force, and we need a sense, Mr. President, of urgency about the problem which we simply do not have.

The legislation we offer today addresses these issues with a series of proposals that are simultaneously farsighted, yet practical and cost effective.

Let me give a few examples.

□ 1130

American businessmen, American scientists, and American engineers, simply do not have critical information which they need about technological trends or manufacturing advances in some of our neighboring countries. That would apply particularly to the lack of knowledge we have about Japan and their manufacturing, and the technology growth in a number of Asian countries.

There are in Japan each year approximately 10,000 technological and science journals which are published. American businessmen, scientists, and engineers do not tend to read Japanese so we do not tend to notice what is in those journals. Because those journals are not translated, all of that information goes right past our people. There are only several hundred of them, in fact, out of the 10,000 which are translated and made available to the American business community and the American academic community.

On the other hand, the Japanese have, for 25 years, been reading our literature, benefiting from our accomplishments, learning from our mistakes. They have been reading what our scientists have been doing, and as they launch into advancement of technology and the manufacturing process, they simply can build on our accomplishments and around any mistakes we have made.

There is, in fact, in the office of the Prime Minister of Japan, a special section which deals with the problem of translating foreign technical journals into the Japanese languages where necessary so the people there can take advantage of it. We are operating in all respects at a competitive disadvantage with respect to technology information.

The task force believes that the Federal Government has an obligation to provide our private sector with the kind of information that is essential for it to compete. Our legislation proposes that the Department of Commerce establish an Office of Technology Assessment within the U.S. embassies in five countries which are judged to be technological leaders. Personnel of the offices will participate in the host country's scientific and technological community; issue a monthly catalog of activities; and help abstract and translate important articles from the host country's scientific and technical journals. This proposal builds upon the concept of legislation offered by Senator BAUCUS and me, recently signed into law by the President, the Japan Technical Literature Act.

The pricetag on this proposal is $5 million, and yet, the competitive benefits would be far reaching. It will pay for itself many times over. I believe that this kind of proposal will receive universal support, particularly from those in the business community who know how tough the competition is and sense—quite correctly—that they are operating at a disadvantage.

Similar benefits will result from our proposal to double the funding provided for the National Science Foundation's new engineering research centers. The President's Commission on Industrial Competitiveness, better known as the Young Commission, concluded that "perhaps the most glaring deficiency in America's technological capabilities has been our failure to devote enough attention to manufacturing or 'process' technology." That deficiency has been fundamental to our loss of leadership in manufacturing to Japan.

The engineering research centers have begun to remedy that critical deficiency. Based on 11 university campuses, the ERC's are designed to promote collaborative efforts between industry and academia on research which will support our industrial competitiveness. Funded programs include research topics ranging from robotics and manufacturing automation to biotechnology.

The program is currently funded far below potential. For that reason, our legislation proposes to double the funding from $23 million to $46 million, which would allow for a doubling of the ERC's from 11 to 22. That is a very small amount of money to double the number of university-based catalysts around this country doing important work on industrial innovation. We must invest more in this area of research and development which is essential to our manufacturing prowess. Our competitors have demonstrated the benefits that flow from improving "process" technology, and they will not be reducing their efforts in the coming years.

Our legislation also proposes the creation of a Council on Industrial Competitiveness, made up of distinguished leaders from government, business, labor, academia, and the public. The Council would provide a forum for debating our competitive future, and a mechanism for recommending policies which will enhance our competitiveness.

This proposal has been offered before. It has sometimes been criticized as too much of an effort to copy Japan or too much centralizing of power. The task force debated it and included it, and I believe that it is an important idea. It could help our country in two areas where we tend to be weak: thinking long term, and building consensus about needed policies.

We all recognize the pressures in our political system that force us to deal with the crisis of the moment, rather than more deep-rooted, long-term problems. And we recognize the pressures in the business world to focus on the immediate bottom line, and the quarterly returns, too often at the expense of long-range planning.

Maybe it is wishful thinking, but I believe that the Council we are recommending could provide a partial antidote to these pressures. If we had had a Council charged with thinking about our competitive future 10 or 15 years ago, we might have recognized the problems that would face our steel industry—and brought management, workers, and Government together to respond in a timely way. We might have focused earlier on the failings of our education system, recognized that it was slipping in comparison to that of other countries—and rallied public support accordingly. The hard truth is that as a country, we do not seem to be able to face our problems until they are upon us in the form of a crisis. But I think that it is well worth trying to create something of an institutional early warning system, and this Council could serve such a function.

Moreover, every democratic country needs to build consensus behind policies that it undertakes. We have a diverse population; a system of separation of power and checks and balances; and a tradition of adversarial relations between the Government and the private sector. Given those tendencies toward fragmentation and stalemate, our country, more than most nations, needs institutions which give us the chance to build consensus.

It is instructive that Japan—even with its homogeneous population, close government-business ties, a parliamentary system, and a tradition of consensus—still goes to great lengths to make sure they have institutions which allow for consensus building. MITI puts forth its visions of the future; industrial strategies are debated in many agencies and organizations, public and private. Good policies—and consensus support for them do not happen automatically. Institutions are needed to help them emerge. Our proposal for a council reflects that fact.

The Council would not have executive or legislative authority; it would be advisory in nature, making recommendations to the President and Congress for policies and strategies that would help our country compete. And it would have a positive impact if its recommendations were sound and reflected a wise consensus about policies that were necessary for the country.

Mr. President, I think that the American people understand the competitiveness challenge far better than the administration does. If you travel in my State—or in any of ours—you will find parents working to improve their schools; corporations radically restructuring to meet the competition; labor and management working together to improve productivity.

But the people cannot do it alone. Only Government can provide the range of policies and tools which give the private sector a real chance to compete in this world economy. When the public recognizes the crucial role that Government must play in meeting the competitive challenge, they will demand action. And meaningful action on the competitiveness agenda will include the proposals that we are making today.

I thank the Chair.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR HARKIN

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HARKIN] is recognized for not to exceed 5 minutes.

13TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE CHILEAN COUP

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, today marks the 13th anniversary of the coup that brought Gen. Augusto Pinochet to power in Chile.

From the day he seized power on September 11, 1973, and murdered in the process the democratically elected President, Salvador Allende, Pinochet has ruled Chile with terror and violence. The coup unleashed a wave of repression unprecedented in Chile's 168-year history of democratic rule.

The new junta, as soon as it came in, dissolved the National Congress and discharged elected officials from their posts. It disbanded the constitutional court and suspended political party and labor union activities.

In the regime's first 18 months, 1 in every 10 Chilean families was affected by arrest, detention, or exile. Since the coup, hundreds of thousands of suspected opponents have been jailed and tortured, and an estimated 35,000 have "disappeared" since that fateful day of September 11, 1973.

The press has been censored, political opponents exiled or imprisoned, and political parties have been outlawed.

Under Pinochet, Chile has become a coercive State, where legalism fronts for official violence and where violence gives laws their legitimacy.

The state of seige imposed Sunday is a tragic reminder of the system of repression institutionalized in Chile since Pinochet came to power 13 years ago.

The recent attack against General Pinochet, which prompted the Government's imposition of a state of siege, warrants the strongest condemnation of all those opposed to terrorist violence and committed to Chile's peaceful return to democracy. I join our Government and my colleagues in this body in supporting efforts by the Chilean Government to find and prosecute those responsible for this terrorist act.

The response of the Pinochet regime, however, extends far beyond legitimate efforts to identify those connected with Sunday's brutal attack. Under the current state of siege, two American and three French priests and democratic opposition and human rights leaders have been detained by Chilean authorities.

Six opposition magazines have been shut down, and the Reuters news agency was ordered to close its Santiago office.

Events took a tragic turn yesterday, when the body of Jose Carrasco, an editor of an opposition magazine, Analisis, was found outside a Santiago cemetery. He was found with nearly a dozen bullet holes in his head.

Shortly before 5 a.m. Monday morning, Carrasco was dragged out of his apartment and shoved into a white van by two armed men. The Government denies responsibility for the incident. However, at that hour—before the end of curfew—it is unlikely that any vehicles other than those of Government security forces would have been allowed on the streets of Santiago.

I sincerely hope that the extraordinary powers of censorship and arbitrary detention granted Pinochet under the state of siege will be soon lifted. Yet, so long as Pinochet remains in power, there is little hope that human rights, political freedoms, and democracy will be restored to the Chilean people.

Since 1973, one or more sets of emergency laws—which delegate to the military wide powers over individual liberties—have been in effect. A "state of emergency" has been in force for all but 7 months of the 13 years since the military coup.

A "state of siege" was simultaneously in force from 1973 to 1977, again from November 1984 to June 1985, and now since this past Sunday.

Pinochet shows no signs of loosening his grip over Chilean society. On July 11, the general declared that his Government will continue beyond 1989.

Living under a dictatorship now for 13 years, the Chilean people face the prospect of 11 more years of military rule.

□ 1140

Pinochet's continued rule will not solve Chile's problems—because Pinochet himself is at the root of Chile's problems.

Thirteen years ago, he promised to wipe out Marxism and terrorism. Yet he has only driven a Communist Party which did not originally believe in violence to become a vast network for armed resistance and terrorism.

He has transformed a country that for most of its history was fundamentally harmonious and democratic into a place where the young learn violence every day—in the streets that are patrolled by marauding soldiers, in the schools where they are expelled and beaten up, in the lack of employment and abundance of hunger.

More State-sponsored violence and terrorism will beget more leftist violence and terrorism. The violence of General Pinochet and his thugs has led and will continue to lead to more reactive violence.

One step we can take to help restore democracy to Chile is to stop approving loans that support the regime of General Pinochet. Loans to Chile are expected to be voted on by the World Bank and Inter-American Development Bank in November.

By stopping the flow of these funds, the United States could put pressure on Pinochet to agree to step down and arrange for truly democratic elections.

We should employ this economic leverage to persuade Chile's military rulers to restore democracy.

Before it is too late, we must act now and send an unequivocal signal to Pinochet and his cronies that it is no longer business as usual so long as repressive rule continues in Chile.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's 5 minutes have expired.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR BINGAMAN

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BINGAMAN] is recognized for not to exceed 5 minutes.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Thank you, Mr. President.

AMERICA'S LIVING STANDARD ACT OF 1986

Mr. BINGAMAN. Let me just make a few additional comments about the report that our working group on economic competitiveness issued yesterday and on the subject of the legislation that we have introduced today on behalf of 22 Democratic Senators.

Our purpose in the working group was very simple. We were to investigate the seriousness of the competitive challenge that this country faces and, second, we were to identify areas most in need of attention and craft some concrete proposals to give those areas attention

I believe we were successful in making an initial thrust at the problem. I do not begin to suggest that what we have proposed is going to solve the problem. I do not begin to suggest that the problem we identified is one that can be solved in a short period of time or can be solved by merely the passage of a particular piece of legislation.

Mr. President, what we found was that over a period of several decades there has been a deterioration in the ability of this country to compete in international markets. We have seen the infrastructure, we have seen the underpinnings of a prosperous economy eroded over the last several decades, and the erosion of those underpinnings of our prosperous economy has become a major, major problem in the last several years.

The statistics that I referred to earlier this morning are depicted on the graphs that we have made part of our report, and I will not go into those in great detail at this time.

Let me just identify the five areas that we felt were most in need of concern in order to come to grips with this competitiveness challenge.

The first was, as Senator ROCKEFELLER pointed out, the need to have a better understanding of technologies and changes in technologies that are developed by our trading partners. Today we have a very inadequate ability to understand what changes are taking place abroad. We have always had the luxury of essentially ignoring technological advance elsewhere and assumed that we were at the cutting edge of all technological developments. That luxury is no longer with us, and we need to put increased emphasis on learning how to understand and monitor what is going on in the technologies in Japan, in South Korea, in Germany, and some of the countries which are able to compete very effectively with us in these international markets.

Second, we need to do much more to support excellence in the development of U.S. technology. A tremendous amount of the Federal dollar goes into research and development of technology. Mr. President, unfortunately, the bulk of that goes to the military research and development activities. When you look at how much we are putting into commercially relevant research and development as a percentage of our gross national product, we rank substantially lower than several of our trading partners. That has to be a concern for us. We have to find some specific ways to deal with it, and we have recommended several specific ways to deal with it.

As Senator ROCKEFELLER pointed out, we propose an expansion of the engineering research center idea that the National Science Foundation has been pursuing for the last several years. They have received many more meritorious proposals for the establishment of those centers than they have been able to fund.

Our proposal is that we increase funding so that the universities in this country which do have good proposals can get the necessary funding to go forward with the development of those centers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's 5 minutes have expired.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the text of the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "America's Living Standard Act of 1986".

FINDINGS

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(1) competitiveness refers to a nation's ability to earn—not borrow—a rising standard of living for its citizens with sufficient productive investment to assure sustained growth and security in the future;

(2) new technologies and successful economic development strategies abroad have created a fundamentally new and highly competitive challenge to American economic growth and prosperity;

(3) the President's Commission on Industrial Competitiveness found that "our ability to compete is eroding" threatening our world leadership and our standard of living;

(4) the President's Commission on Industrial Competitiveness urged that this "New Reality" requires that competitiveness become the economic agenda for the next decade; and

(5) United States living standards continue to decline despite massive accumulation of debt and further decline in the growth of productive investment for the future.

(b) The Congress further finds that—

(1) weekly earnings, in the United States, are, on the average, now below 1963 levels;

(2) unemployment rates are trending upward;

(3) the gross national product is decelerating from 4 percent in the 1950-1960's, to 2.8 percent in the 1970's and only 2 percent in the 1980's;

(4) the Federal debt is growing 6 times faster than the gross national product and now equals more than 50 percent of the gross national product;

(5) business, consumer, and government debt are at post-1920's highs and the total now equals almost twice the gross national product;

(6) the United States became a debtor Nation in 1985, is now the world's largest debtor, and could owe more than all of Latin America combined by 1988;

(7) the merchandise trade deficit is larger than the gross national product of 169 of the 179 countries with which we trade;

(8) traded services deficits will soon be joined by enormous outflows to service United States foreign debt;

(9) investment and productivity are decelerating and are only a fraction of foreign growth rates; and

(10) in the area of educational excellence, in competition with students from other developed nations, Americans score near the bottom.

TITLE I—ESTABLISHMENT OF AN OFFICE OF TECHNOLOGY ASSESSMENT IN CERTAIN FOREIGN NATIONS TO CATALOGUE, ABSTRACT, TRANSLATE, AND REPORT ON SCIENTIFIC AND TECHNOLOGICAL DEVELOPMENTS

AMENDMENTS TO STEVENSON-WYDLER TECHNOLOGY INNOVATION ACT OF 1980

SEC. 101. Section 5 of the Stevenson-Wydler Technology Innovation Act of 1980 (15 U.S.C. 3704) is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsection (d) as subsection (e); and

(2) by inserting after subsection (c) the following new subsection:

"(d) FOREIGN SCIENTIFIC AND TECHNOLOGICAL LITERATURE.—(1) The Secretary, in consultation with the Secretary of State, shall establish an Office of Technology Assessment within the United States Embassy in five foreign nations identified by the Secretary as—

"(A) maintaining a high level of scientific and technological development; and

"(B) potentially contributing the most to such development in the United States pursuant to the provisions of this section.

"(2) The Secretary, in consultation with the Secretary of State, shall direct the Office of Technology Assessment to—

"(A) participate in the scientific and technical community of the host nation and issue a monthly catalogue of activities;

"(B) monitor, select, abstract, and translate important articles from scientific and technical journals of the host nation, in coordination with the National Technical Information Service and other relevant agencies; and

"(C) prepare an annual analysis of technological trends and a directory listing government and private sources of information about scientific and engineering developments of the host nation.".

ADDITIONAL AUTHORIZATION

SEC. 102. Section 14 of the Stevenson-Wydler Technology Innovation Act of 1980 (15 U.S.C. 3713) is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsection (d) a subsection (e);

(2) by amending subsection (c) to read as follows:

"(d) Such sums as may be appropriated under subsections (a), (b), and (c) of this section shall remain available until expended."; and

(3) by inserting after subsection (b) the following new subsection:

"(c) In addition to authorization of appropriations under subsections (a) and (b) of this section, there is authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary for purposes of carrying out the provisions of section 5(d) of this Act, not to exceed $5,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986.".

TITLE II—OFFICE OF TECHNOLOGY ASSESSMENT, FORECAST AND OUTREACH

ESTABLISHMENT OF OFFICE

SEC. 201. (a) There is established within the Department of Commerce the Office of Technology Assessment, Forecast and Outreach (hereinafter referred to as "Office").

(b) The Office shall be headed by a Director of the Office of Technology Assessment, Forecast and Outreach (hereinafter referred to as "Director"), who shall be appointed by the Secretary of Commerce. The Director shall be under the direction and supervision of the Commissioner of Patents and Trademarks.

(c) Section 5316 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"Director of the Office of Technology Assessment, Forecast and Outreach.".

FUNCTIONS OF OFFICE

SEC. 202. It shall be the function of the Office to—

(1) identify emerging areas of technology throughout the world;

(2) analyze the sources of new technology;

(3) develop and administer a program involving the identification of the ownership of United States patents, including by country and firm;

(4) determine trends in patent behavior throughout the world;

(5) assure regular reviews by relevant industry sector advisory committees;

(6) assure broad private sector knowledge of, and access to, findings, data, and other information made or acquired by the Office in carrying out its functions under this title; and

(7) carry out such other duties and functions as may be imposed by the Secretary of Commerce.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATION

SEC. 203. For carrying out the provisions of this title, there is authorized to be appropriated, for the fiscal year 1987, the sum of $2,000,000, and for each fiscal year thereafter, such sum as may be necessary.

TITLE III—NATIONAL SCIENCE FOUNDATION ENGINEERING RESEARCH ASSISTANCE

SHORT TITLE

SEC. 301. This title may be cited as the "National Science Foundation Engineering Research Assistance Act".

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATION

SEC. 302. There are authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 1987 to the National Science Foundation $12,000,000 for engineering research centers in addition to amounts otherwise authorized for such centers.

AMENDMENT TO NATIONAL SCIENCE FOUNDATION ACT OF 1950

SEC. 303. Section 14 of the National Science Foundation Act of 1950 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(j) The Foundation shall, in cooperation with participating institutions of higher education, seek methods of excluding from participation in engineering research activities any corporate entity which is primarily based, or whose parent is primarily based, in a foreign country and which does not allow reciprocal participation by United States corporate entities in similar research activities.".

TITLE IV—SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH FELLOWS PROGRAM

FELLOWSHIPS

SEC. 401. This title may be cited as the "Scientific Research Fellows Program Act".

AMENDMENT TO NATIONAL SCIENCE FOUNDATION ACT OF 1950

SEC. 402. Section 10 of the National Science Foundation Act of 1950 is amended—

(1) by inserting "(a)" after the section designation;

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(b)(1) The National Science Foundation shall award, within the limits of funds made available specifically for such purpose pursuant to paragraph (5), not to exceed 500 fellowships in each fiscal year to outstanding graduate students who pursue studies which give promise to contribute significantly to the efficiency, economic productivity, and international competitiveness of the United States.

"(2)(A) In carrying out the provisions of this subsection, the National Science Foundation shall identify specific business industries, technologies and foreign countries in which American leadership in efficiency, productivity, or international competitiveness is being most effectively challenged.

"(B) In awarding fellowships under this subsection, the National Science Foundation shall give preference to fellowship applicants whose qualifications and intended course of study give promise to meet the needs identified pursuant to this paragraph. In carrying out the provisions of this subsection, the National Science Foundation shall give special consideration to applicants who demonstrate competence in the foreign language in one of the foreign countries identified pursuant to this paragraph and who intend to perform a minimum of two years of research in the foreign country.

"(3)(A) The National Science Foundation shall apply the same terms and conditions (not inconsistent with this subsection) to the fellows appointed under this subsection as to fellowship awards made under subsection (a) of this section.

"(B) In addition, the National Science Foundation shall provide fellows performing research pursuant to this subsection in a foreign country identified pursuant to paragraph (2) allowances for two round-trip visits per year from the foreign country in which the research is being performed to the institution of higher education or other location at which the individual pursued professional activity prior to the award of the fellowship. The National Science Foundation may grant assistance to fellows for foreign language instruction and tutorials.

"(4) Individuals awarded fellowships under this subsection shall be known as 'scientific leadership fellows'.

"(5) There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary for the fiscal year 1987 and for each of the four succeeding fiscal years to carry out the provisions of this subsection.".

TITLE V—UNIVERSITY RESEARCH FACILITIES FUND

SHORT TITLE

SEC. 501. This title may be cited as the "University Research Facilities Act of 1986".

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 502. For the purpose of this title—

(1) the term "Director" means the Director of the National Science Foundation;

(2) the term "Fund" means the University Research Facilities Fund established pursuant to section 504;

(3) the term "institution of higher education" has the same meaning as such term has pursuant to section 1201(a) of the Higher Education Act of 1965; and

(4) the term "Secretary" means the Secretary of the Treasury.

ESTABLISHMENT OF UNIVERSITY FACILITIES DIVISION

SEC. 503. The Director shall establish a University Facilities Division pursuant to section 8 of the National Science Foundation Act of 1950, within the Directorate for Science and Engineering Education of the National Science Foundation.

ESTABLISHMENT OF FUND

SEC. 504. (a) There is established, within the United States Treasury, a University Research Facilities Fund.

(b) The Secretary shall act as trustee of the Fund, and shall make such payments from the Fund upon certification by the Director.

(c) The Secretary shall invest such portion of the Fund as is not, in the judgment of the Secretary, required to meet current withdrawals. Such investments may be made only in interest-bearing obligations of the United States. For such purpose, such obligations may be acquired—

(1) on original issue at the issue price; or

(2) by purchase of outstanding obligations at the market price.

(d) Amounts in the Fund may be used only for awards made in accordance with the provisions of this title.

USES OF AWARDS

SEC. 505. (a) Awards made under this title shall be used by institutions of higher education for the Federal share of the cost of acquiring, replacing, renovating, upgrading, or constructing facilities and equipment to be principally used for scientific research or laboratory instruction.

(b)(1) Not more than 50 percent of the amount of each award approved under section 507 may be used for permanently installed experimental equipment.

(2) Not more than 25 percent of any such award may be used for the purchase of stand-alone equipment.

APPLICATION FOR AWARD

SEC. 506. Any institution of higher education desiring an award under this title shall submit to the Director an application at such time, in such manner, and containing or accompanied by such information as the Director may reasonably require. Each such application shall—

(1) describe the facilities or equipment to be constructed or acquired;

(2) describe the type of research to be performed using such facilities or equipment;

(3) describe the contribution such research will make in meeting national, regional, and State research and related training needs; and

(4) identify the source of the matching non-Federal funds for such facilities or equipment as required by section 508.

REVIEW OF APPLICATION AND AWARD OF FUNDS; CERTIFICATION

SEC. 507. (a) Subject to the provisions of subsection (b), the Director shall approve applications submitted pursuant to section 506, and grant awards from the Fund to carry out the provisions of this title.

(b) The University Facilities Division established pursuant to section 503 shall establish peer review panels composed of members of the relevant scientific and technological community with substantial representation from smaller institutions, to review applications and recommend awards to be granted by the Director. The evaluation by such panels shall be based on—

(1) the quality of the research and training to be carried out in the facility; and

(2) the contribution which the project will make toward meeting national, regional, and State research and related training needs.

(c) The Director shall certify to the Secretary the amount of each award approved under this section.

MATCHING REQUIREMENT

SEC. 508. Any institution of higher education receiving an award under this title shall provide a matching amount for any project. Such amount shall derive from a non-Federal source and may be in cash or in kind, fairly evaluated, including but not limited to plant, equipment, or services.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 509. There are authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987, and each fiscal year thereafter ending prior to October 1, 1997, $250,000,000 to be deposited in the Fund established pursuant to section 504 of this title and to remain available until expended.

TITLE VI—FUTURE TEACHER TRAINING CORPS

SHORT TITLE

SEC. 601. This title may be cited as the "Future Teacher Training Corps Act".

AMENDMENT TO HIGHER EDUCATION ACT OF 1965

SEC. 602. Title V of the Higher Education Act of 1965 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new part:

"PART G—FUTURE TEACHER TRAINING CORPS FELLOWSHIPS

"FINDINGS AND STATEMENT OF PURPOSE

"SEC. 581. (a) The Congress finds that—

"(1) excellence in and access to education is a national priority to improve human resources of the Nation, particularly to maintain economic competitiveness of the Nation;

"(2) although the States and localities bear primary responsibility for elementary and secondary education, educational achievement is a national concern;

"(3) demographic trends show a serious teacher shortage with some estimates projecting by 1990 1 million new teachers will be needed in the United States;

"(4) shortages of teachers exist in certain geographic areas of each State and in certain subject matter areas;

"(5) while there is a dramatic increase in minority student population, the proportion of minority teachers is declining, so that by 1990 minorities will constitute 30 percent of the total school population and comprise less than 5 percent of the elementary and secondary teaching force; and

"(6) it is appropriate to provide fellowship funds for outstanding students and experienced individuals to encourage them to pursue careers in teaching and to help address the serious teacher shortage.

"(b) The purpose of this part is to make available, through grants to the States, fellowships to individuals—

"(1) who are outstanding postsecondary students or experienced individuals, and

"(2) who demonstrate an interest in a teaching career and a desire to teach in areas of the State in which there is a shortage of elementary or secondary school teachers or in fields of study in which there is a shortage of elementary or secondary school teachers in the State, or both.

"ALLOTMENT OF FUNDS

"SEC. 582. (a) GENERAL ALLOTMENT.—From the sums available pursuant to section 590(a) to carry out this part in any fiscal year, the Secretary shall allot to each State an amount which bears the same ratio to such remainder as the school-age population of the State bears to the school-age population of all States, except that no State shall receive less than one-half of 1 percent of such remainder.

"(b) MOST RECENT DATA.—For the purpose of this section, the population of a State and of all States shall be determined by the most recently available data from the United States Census Bureau.

"(c) REALLOTMENT.—If any State elects not to receive its allotment under this part, the Secretary shall reallot, among the remaining States, amounts from such State in accordance with subsection (a) of this section.

"(d) DEFINITION.—For the purpose of this section, the term 'school-age population' means the population 5 years of age through 17 years of age.

"SELECTION OF FELLOWSHIP RECIPIENTS

"SEC. 583. (a) SELECTION REVIEW PANEL.—The Governor shall appoint a Selection Review Panel for the purpose of selecting individuals who will be awarded fellowships under this part who are interested in careers in teaching and who agree to teach in areas of the State in which there is a shortage of elementary or secondary school teachers or in fields of study in which there is a shortage of elementary or secondary school teachers in the State, or both.

"(b) SELECTION PROCEDURE.—(1) The Governor shall establish selection procedures to be applied by the Selection Review Panel appointed pursuant to subsection (a), together with such application procedures as may be necessary.

"(2) The application procedures established under paragraph (1) shall include—

"(A) rank in the graduating class at an institution of higher education,

"(B) grade point average in the institution of higher education,

"(C) leadership activities in the institution of higher education,

"(D) scores on recognized admission examinations for institutions of higher education and for graduate education, if applicable,

"(E) recommendations of faculty at an institution of higher education,

"(F) submission of evidence of scholarship, including a writing sample or a completed project, and

"(G) a description of previous work experience.

"GRANT APPLICATIONS

"SEC. 584. (a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary is authorized to make grants to States in accordance with the provisions of this part. In order to receive a grant under this part, a State shall submit an application at such time, in such manner, and containing or accompanying such information as the Secretary may prescribe. Each application shall set forth a program of activities for carrying out the purpose set forth in section 581 in such detail as will enable the Secretary to determine the degree to which such program will accomplish such purpose.

"(b) TERMS OF APPLICATIONS.—The Secretary shall approve an application only if the application—

"(1) describes the selection criteria and procedures to be used by the State in the selection of fellowships under this part which meet the requirements of section 583 and the other provisions of this part;

"(2) provides that the Governor of the State will administer the program;

"(3)(A) describes the outreach effort the Governor intends to use to publicize the availability of the fellowships authorized by this part to postsecondary students in the State and to potential midcareer applicants in the State;

"(B) provides assurances that the State will recruit among underrepresented groups for the program authorized by this part, particularly Black Americans, Hispanics, Asian Americans, and American Indians;

"(4) provides assurances that each recipient eligible under section 586(c) who receives a fellowship shall enter into an agreement with the Governor under which the recipient shall—

"(A) within the 3-year period after completing the postsecondary education for which the fellowship was awarded—

"(i) teach in areas of the State in which there is a shortage of elementary or secondary school teachers or in fields of study in which there is a shortage of elementary or secondary school teachers in the State for a period of not less than 3 years for the first year for which assistance was received and 4 years if the recipient receives assistance for 2 years; and

"(ii) teach in areas of the State in which there is a shortage of elementary or secondary school teachers in a field of study in which there is a shortage of elementary or secondary school teachers in the State for a period of not less than 2 years for the first year for which assistance was received, and 3 years if the recipient receives assistance for 2 years, in an elementary or secondary school of a local educational agency of such State, a public elementary or secondary school of such State, an Indian school funded by the Bureau of Indian Affairs, or a public educational program in such State, any of which may be determined by such State, but in no event shall any recipient be required to teach for less than 2 years or more than 4 years;

"(B) provide the Governor with evidence of compliance with section 586 as required by such agency; and

"(C) repay all or part of a fellowship received under section 585 plus interest and, if applicable, reasonable collection fees, in compliance with section 587 and regulations issued by the Secretary under section 588, in the event that the conditions of clause (A) are not complied with, except as provided for in section 589;

"(5) provides (A) that the agreement entered into with recipients shall fully disclose the terms and conditions under which assistance under this part is provided and under which repayment may be required, and (B) a description of the manner in which the Governor will collect amounts owed under the program authorized by this part;

"(6) provides assurances that fellowship recipients may only attend institutions of higher education that have a clinical internship or experience program approved by the State;

"(7) provides that the State has a continuing education requirement for practicing teachers within the State;

"(8) provides assurances that a precertification teachers examination program will be in effect not later than 2 years after the first fellowships are awarded in the State under this part;

"(9) provides assurances that fellowships authorized by this part will be awarded without regard to sex, race, handicapping condition, or creed;

"(10) provides assurances that, with respect to the awarding of fellowships under this part, equal opportunity will be given to all postsecondary students in the State; and

"(11) provides that not more than 3 per centum of the grant shall be used for the administrative costs of the State in carrying out the provisions of this part.

"(c) CONSULTATION.—In developing the selection criteria and procedures to be used by the State, the State shall solicit the views of local educational agencies and other interested parties as the State deems appropriate, including classroom teachers, representatives of institutions of higher education, and representatives of the general public.

"AMOUNT AND DURATION OF ASSISTANCE

"SEC. 585. (a) IN GENERAL.—Each recipient shall receive a fellowship not to exceed $5,000 for each academic year of graduate education in preparation to become an elementary or secondary school teacher. No individual shall receive fellowship assistance for more than 2 years of graduate education, as determined by the Governor.

"(b) INTERNSHIP ASSISTANCE.—Each institution of higher education, at which fellows receiving assistance under this part are enrolled in a post-baccalaureate program, is encouraged to insure that each such fellow will participate in an internship program at an elementary or secondary school of a local educational agency under which the local educational agency will provide assistance to the participating fellow.

"FELLOWSHIP CONDITIONS

"SEC. 586. (a) Recipients of fellowship assistance under this part shall continue to receive such fellowship payments only during such periods that the Governor finds that the recipient is—

"(1) enrolled in a post baccalaureate program in an institution of higher education;

"(2) pursuing such a program for teacher certification, and, if necessary, together with courses in an academic field in which the student intends to teach;

"(3) participate in a clinical internship experience program approved by the State; and

"(4) maintaining satisfactory progress as determined by such institution of higher education.

"(b) At the time a recipient of a fellowship is chosen, the recipient may not meet the teacher certification standards of the State.

"FELLOWSHIP REPAYMENT PROVISIONS

"SEC. 587. Recipients found by the Governor to be in noncompliance with the agreement entered into under section 584(b)(4) shall be required to repay a pro rata amount of the fellowship awards received, plus interest, a penalty equal to 100 percent of such pro rata amount of such fellowship awards (without regard to interest thereon), and, where applicable, reasonable collection fees, on a schedule and at a rate of interest to be prescribed by the Secretary by regulations issued pursuant to this part.

"EXCEPTIONS TO REPAYMENT PROVISIONS

"SEC. 588. (a) IN GENERAL.—A recipient shall not be considered in violation of the agreement entered into pursuant to section 584(b)(4)(C) if the recipient—

"(1) is serving, not in excess of 3 years, as a member of the armed services of the United States;

"(2) is temporarily totally disabled for a period of time not to exceed 3 years as established by sworn affidavit of a qualified physician;

"(3) is unable to secure employment for a period not to exceed 12 months by reason of the care required by a spouse who is disabled;

"(4) is seeking and unable to find full-time employment for a single period not to exceed 12 months; or

"(5) satisfies the provisions of additional repayment exceptions that may be prescribed by the Secretary in regulations issued pursuant to this part.

"(b) TOTAL DISABILITY.—A recipient shall be excused from repayment of any fellowship assistance received under this part if the recipient becomes permanently and totally disabled as established by sworn affidavit of a qualified physician.

"AUTHORIZATION

"SEC. 589. (a) AUTHORIZATION AND NUMBER OF FELLOWSHIPS AUTHORIZED.—(1) There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this part for the fiscal year 1987 and for each of the succeeding fiscal years ending prior to October 1, 1990.

"(2) The Secretary is authorized during the fiscal year 1987 and for each of the succeeding fiscal years ending prior to October 1, 1990, to award not to exceed 5,000 fellowships under this part.

"(b) AVAILABILITY OF FUNDS.—Sums appropriated pursuant to this section for any fiscal year shall be available until the end of the second fiscal year succeeding the fiscal year for which they were appropriated.

"DEFINITIONS

"SEC. 590. As used in this part—

"(1) 'clinical internship or experience program' means a program that provides the student with a progressive series of preprofessional field experiences in a regular school classroom setting on a regular basis throughout the student's graduate education, including classroom observation, tutorial roles with students, teacher helper roles, teacher aide roles, and internships or periods of student teaching;

"(2) 'continuing education' means a program of education that takes into account developments in theories of learning and content areas, and may include locally based in-service instruction;

"(3) 'fields of study in which there is a shortage of elementary or secondary school teachers' means mathematics, the sciences, and any 3 other fields of study designated by the Governor;

"(4) 'Governor' means the chief executive of a State; and

"(5) 'State' means the several States of the Union, the District of Columbia, and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico.".

TITLE VII—COMPUTER SOFTWARE AND VIDEOTAPE ASSISTANCE

SHORT TITLE

SEC. 701. This title may be cited as the "Computer Software and Videotape Assistance Act".

NATIONAL INSTITUTE OF EDUCATION PROGRAM AUTHORIZED

SEC. 702. (a) For the purpose of providing advice and technical assistance to State and local educational agencies on the expenditure of funds for the acquisition of suitable computer software and videotapes, the Secretary of Education and the National Science Foundation, in accordance with an interagency agreement between the Secretary and the Foundation, shall—

(1) evaluate available computer hardware and software, in terms of its usefulness in the classroom, particularly in basic skills instruction and instruction in secondary education;

(2) evaluate the use of videotapes on basic skills instruction and secondary education;

(3) disseminate the results of such evaluation; and

(4) develop model computer educational software and educational videotapes, and make such model software (and its design premises) and videotapes available to computer software and videotape producers and distributors, as the case may be, and to teachers and school administrators.

(b) The Secretary of Education shall carry out the functions required by this section through the National Institute of Education.

(c) The Secretary of Education and the Foundation are authorized to make grants and enter into contracts to carry out the functions described in clauses (1), (2), and (3) of subsection (a).

(d) There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section such sums as may be necessary for the fiscal year 1987 and for each succeeding fiscal year ending prior to October 1, 1990.

PRIVATE EVALUATION AND DISSEMINATION CENTERS

SEC. 703. (a) The National Science Foundation shall, through grants to or contracts with professional scientific or engineering organizations, science museums, regional science education centers, public television, consortia of local educational agencies, regional laboratories and university based research centers and institutions of higher education (including community colleges), conduct, assist, and foster research and experimentation on, and dissemination of, models of instruction in the operation and use of computers and videotapes. Such models of instruction may include model training programs for adults. In carrying out the provisions of this section, the Foundation shall give priority to proposals prepared with active and broad community involvement of such groups as parents, teachers, school boards and administrators, and local business.

(b) Funds available under a grant or contract pursuant to this section may be used for the acquisition of computer hardware and software and videotapes.

(c) The Director of the National Science Foundation shall report to the Congress annually on the results of research and experimentation performed with funds made available under this section. The Director, in conjunction with the National Institute of Education, shall take such steps as may be necessary to disseminate information concerning such results to local educational agencies.

(d) There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section such sums as may be necessary for the fiscal year 1987 and for each succeeding fiscal year ending prior to October 1, 1990.

NATIONAL SCIENCE FOUNDATION PROGRAM

SEC. 704. (a)(1) From the amount appropriated pursuant to section 706 for any fiscal year, the National Science Foundation shall arrange for the development and operation by entities described in paragraph (2) of short-term or regular session institutes for study to improve the qualifications of individuals who are engaged in or preparing to engage in the teaching, or supervising or training of teachers, in the use of computers for computer education instruction and other education programs in elementary and secondary schools.

(2) In carrying out paragraph (1), the National Science Foundation shall make grants and enter into contracts with professional scientific or engineering organizations, science museums, regional science education centers, consortia of local educational agencies, intrastate resource and service centers, and institutions of higher education (including community colleges).

(b) In making grants and contracts under subsection (a), the National Science Foundation shall give special consideration to applicants who will train teachers, or supervisors or trainers of teachers, serving or preparing to serve in elementary and secondary schools that enroll substantial numbers of culturally, economically, socially, and educationally disadvantaged youth or in programs for children of limited English language proficiency.

STIPENDS

SEC. 705. Each individual who attends an institute operated under the provisions of section 704 of this title shall be eligible (after application therefor) to receive a stipend at the rate of $275 per week for the period of attendance at such institute.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 706. There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this title $20,000,000 for the fiscal year 1987 and for each succeeding fiscal year ending prior to October 1, 1990.

TITLE VIII—WORK OPPORTUNITIES AND RETRAINING COMPACT

SHORT TITLE

SEC. 801. This title may be cited as the "Work Opportunities and Retraining Compact (WORC) of 1986".

STATEMENT OF PURPOSE

SEC. 802. It is the purpose of this title to establish a comprehensive and flexible work, training, and education opportunities program for AFDC recipients so that they may be prepared for entry into the labor force where they can earn an adequate income and thus no longer be dependent on welfare.

STATE PLAN REQUIREMENTS: REGISTRATION OF AFDC APPLICANTS AND RECIPIENTS FOR WORK-RELATED COUNSELING, ASSESSMENT, AND ASSIGNMENT

SEC. 803. (a) Section 402(a)(19) of the Social Security Act is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (A)—

(A) by striking out "shall register" and all that follows down through "regulations issued by him," in the matter preceding clause (i) and inserting in lieu thereof "shall register with the State agency, in accordance with regulations issued by the Secretary, for work-related counseling, assessment, and assignment to manpower services, training, employment, and other employment-related activities as described in section 416(b),";

(B) by striking out clause (iii) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(iii) a person so remote from any available employment or training project that his or her effective participation in such a project is precluded;";

(C) by inserting ", unless the State otherwise provides" immediately before the semicolon at the end of clause (v);

(D) by striking out "to participate under a work incentive program or accept" in clause (vi) and inserting in lieu thereof "to participate in good faith in counseling and assessment with the State agency under section 416 and in employment, training, or education pursuant to an assignment under that section, or to accept"; and

(E) by striking out "any individual referred to in clause (v)" in the matter following clause (ix) and inserting in lieu thereof "any individual exempt from registration under the preceding provisions of this subparagraph";

(2) in subparagraph (B), by striking out "or the individual's certification" and all that follows and inserting in lieu thereof "or the individual's certification to the State agency under subparagraph (G) of this paragraph, or by reason of an individual's participation in employment, training, or education pursuant to an assignment made by such agency under section 416(b)(6);";

(3) in subparagraph (C), by striking out "a non-Federal contribution to the work incentive programs" and all that follows and inserting in lieu thereof "a non-Federal contribution by appropriate State and local agencies and private organizations to the work incentive programs established by part C, and to any other work-related programs to which individuals are assigned by the State agency under section 416, equal to the portion of the cost of such programs not specifically financed by Federal contributions;";

(4) in subparagraph (D), by striking out "under section 434" and "a program established by section 432(b)(2) or (3)" and inserting in lieu thereof "under a program to which individuals are assigned by the State agency under section 416" and "such a program", respectively;

(5) in subparagraph (F)—

(A) by striking out "that if" and all that follows down through "purposes of part C" (in the matter preceding clause (i)) and inserting in lieu thereof "that if (and for such period as is prescribed under regulations of the Secretary) any child, relative, or individual required to register under subparagraph (A) has been found by the Secretary to have refused without good cause to so register, or has refused without good cause to participate in good faith in counseling and assessment with the State agency under section 416 or in employment, training, or education pursuant to an assignment made by such agency under section 416(b)(6),"; and

(B) by adding after and below clause (v) the following:

"and for purposes of this subparagraph a refusal by an individual to accept employment shall be considered to have been made with good cause if the acceptance of such employment would result in a net loss of income by such individual;";

(6) in subparagraph (G)—

(A) by striking out "for the administration of programs established pursuant to section 432(b)(1), (2), or (3)" and inserting in lieu thereof "by the State agency established or designated under section 416";

(B) by striking out "the order of priority listed in section 433(a)" and inserting in lieu thereof "any order of priority which may apply under the work-related program involved";

(C) by striking out "under section 432(b)(1), (2), or (3)" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "under the work-related program involved";

(D) by striking out "the Secretary of Labor" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "the State agency";

(E) by striking out "accepts employment" and "retain such employment" and inserting in lieu "accepts employment, training, or education" and "retain such employment or continue in such training or education", respectively; and

(F) by striking out clause (iii) and redesignating clause (iv) as clause (iii); and

(7) in subparagraph (H), by striking out "under section 432(b)(1), (2), or (3)" and inserting in lieu thereof "under section 416".

(b) Section 402(a) of such Act is further amended—

(1) by striking out "and" after the semicolon at the end of paragraph (38);

(2) by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (39) and inserting in lieu thereof "; and" ; and

(3) by inserting immediately after paragraph (40) the following new paragraph:

"(40) consolidate the administration of the State's work-related functions under this part, by providing for the assignment of registered individuals by the State agency to employment and training programs as described in section 416 and for the performance by such agency of its other duties under the section and under paragraph (19) of this section.".

CONSOLIDATED ADMINISTRATION OF WORK-RELATED PROGRAMS

SEC. 804. Part A of title IV of the Social Security Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"CONSOLIDATED ADMINISTRATION OF WORK-RELATED PROGRAMS

"SEC. 416. (a)(1) The State agency administering or supervising the administration of the plan approved under this part shall perform the functions specified in this section and in section 402(a)(19).

"(2) It shall be the general purpose of the State agency, in carrying out its duties under this section and section 402(a)(19), to assist applicants for and recipients of aid to families with dependent children in finding gainful employment and in obtaining any training and education which may be necessary to enable them to perform such employment, with the objective of reducing the number of individuals on the welfare rolls by providing such applicants and recipients with a realistic opportunity to become self-sufficient.

"(b) In carrying out the purpose described in subsection (a)(2), the State agency (in addition to performing its other duties under this part) shall—

"(1) establish a single intake and registration process for all applicants for and recipients of aid to families with dependent children, consistent with section 402(a)(19);

"(2) assess the employment capabilities of each registered applicant and recipient in order to determine whether immediate employment is a realistic possibility or whether training or education is needed in order to prepare such applicant or recipient for employment;

"(3) provide in-depth counseling for each such applicant and recipient with respect to his or her potential for such immediate employment or such training or education and with respect to the program or programs (Federal, State, local, or private) which might be available to such applicant or recipient and most appropriately serve his or her interests;

"(4) administer, or enter into arrangements with administering authorities for, the participation of such applicants and recipients in appropriate employment, training, and education activities in furtherance of the objective stated in subsection (a)(2), including activities authorized in—

"(A) the work incentive program under part C of this title,

"(B) the work incentive demonstration program under section 445,

"(C) the State's community work experience program under section 409,

"(D) the State's work supplementation program under section 414,

"(E) a work demonstration program under section 1115;

"(F) any program under the Job Training Partnership Act,

"(G) any program of job search and related services, including services offered by vocational education agencies and the public employment offices of the State, and

"(H) any other program (Federal, State, local, or private) which could be made effectively available to such applicants and recipients and participation in which would further such objective;

"(5) develop an employment plan for each such applicant and recipient, in partnership with the administering authorities of the programs with respect to which arrangements have been entered into under paragraph (4);

"(6) assign each such applicant or recipient to one or more of the programs with respect to which arrangements have been entered into under paragraph (4) and which are determined by the State agency, on the basis of the assessment made under paragraph (2) and the counseling provided under paragraph (3), to be appropriate for such applicant or recipient, and provide all possible assistance to such applicant or recipient in preparing for, enrolling in, and participating in such program or programs; and

"(7) take all other actions, not inconsistent with the provisions of this section or of the law governing the program or programs involved, which may be necessary or appropriate to achieve the objective stated in subsection (a)(2).

"(c)(1) The terms and conditions of participation in employment, training, and education activities as described in subsection (b)(4), and the manner in which the provisions of the programs involved are to apply with respect to applicants and recipients registered under section 402(a)(19), shall be determined (subject to the specific requirements of this title and of such programs) by the State agency in consultation with the administering authorities of such programs.

"(2) To the maximum extent possible, the steps taken in providing for participation in employment, training, and education activities as described in subsection (b)(4) shall include coordination of the services furnished and activities conducted under the various programs involved with respect to registered applicants and recipients in order to avoid inefficiency and duplication of effort and to assure the widest possible availability to such applicants and recipients of services and activities which will further the objective stated in subsection (a)(2).

"(d) The State agency shall provide registered applicants and recipients who are assigned for employment, training, or education under subsection (b)(6) with such child care services and transportation, and such other assistance not inconsistent with law, as may be necessary or appropriate to achieve the objective stated in subsection (a)(2).

"(e)(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Federal contribution to the costs incurred by the State agency in counseling, assessing, and assigning individuals under this section in any fiscal year, and to the costs incurred by any other State agency or entity in carrying out a program referred to in subparagraphs (A) through (G) of subsection (b)(4) with respect to individuals assigned to that program under subsection (b)(6) (other than costs described in paragraph (7)) in any fiscal year, shall be equal to the applicable percentage of such costs as determined under this subsection.

"(2) For purposes of paragraph (1) (but subject to paragraph (3)), the applicable percentage of the costs described in that paragraph which are incurred by any agency or entity in any fiscal year shall be 70 percent.

"(3) In any fiscal year after the fiscal year 1987, the applicable percentage of the costs described in paragraph (1) which are incurred by agencies and entities in any State shall be increased to 75 percent if such State, in carrying out the program or programs involved in such fiscal year with respect to registered individuals assigned under subsection (b)(6), meets or exceeds the performance standards which are developed and prescribed as provided in paragraph (4) and applied in the State in accordance with paragraph (6).

"(4) The performance standards referred to in paragraph (3) shall be developed and prescribed by the Office of Technology Assessment in consultation with the Secretary of Health and Human Services, the Secretary of Labor, appropriate State officials designated for purposes of this paragraph by the Governors of the several States, and other appropriate experts. Such performance standards (which shall be coordinated with the corresponding performance standards under the Job Training Partnership Act)—

"(A) shall be measured by outcomes and not by levels of activity or participation, and shall be based on the degree of success which may reasonably be expected of States (in carrying out their work-related programs with respect to registered individuals assigned under subsection (b)(6)) in helping such individuals to achieve self-sufficiency and reducing welfare costs;

"(B) shall take into account job placement rates, wages, job retention, reduced levels of aid under the State plan, case closures, improvements in registered individuals' educational levels, and the extent to which registered individuals are able to obtain jobs providing health benefits;

"(C) shall encourage States to give appropriate recognition to the greater difficulties in achieving self-sufficiency which face individuals who have greater barriers to employment; and

"(D) shall include guidelines permitting appropriate variations to take account of the differing conditions (including unemployment rates) which may exist in different States.

"(5) Measures for the performance standards referred to in paragraph (3) shall be established within 6 months after the date of the enactment of this section; and the standards themselves shall be established, prescribed, and published no later than 18 months after the establishment of such measures.

"(6) The performance standards developed and prescribed under paragraph (4) shall be varied in any State, to the extent permitted under paragraph (4)(D), to the extent necessary to take account of specific economic, geographic, and demographic factors in the State, the characteristics of the population to be served, and the types of services to be provided.

"(7) The Federal contribution to the administrative costs incurred by any agency or entity of a State in performing its duties under this section and to the costs of providing child care, transportation, and other support services, with respect to individuals for whom work-related services are being provided by the State agency or by an agency or entity administering a program to which such individuals have been assigned pursuant to subsection (b)(6), shall be 50 percent.

"(f) Under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, this section and all functions performed by State agencies and entities under this section shall be coordinated with the work and training requirements which apply to applicants for and recipients of benefits under the Food Stamp Act of 1977.".

A report on the study conducted under this subsection shall be submitted to the Congress not later than 18 months after such date of enactment.

(b) There are authorized to be appropriated $5,000,000 to carry out subsection (a) of this section.

TITLE X—COUNCIL ON INDUSTRIAL COMPETITIVENESS

SHORT TITLE

SEC. 1001. This title may be cited as the "Council on Industrial Competitiveness Act".

FINDINGS AND PURPOSE

SEC. 1002. (a) The Congress hereby finds that—

(1) the preeminence of the United States in international industrial competition is seriously threatened and the insulation of United States domestic markets from international competition is at an end;

(2) the United States has been slow to accept and adapt to the reality of a highly competitive global marketplace and to regard the industrial development of competing countries as a challenge and an opportunity for its own economic growth;

(3) some major consequences of this failure to adapt are unnecessary plant closings, high unemployment, and a deterioration in the quality of jobs available for American workers;

(4) to be successful in the world arena, the United States must address the erosion of comparative advantage of its basic industries in a number of areas, including innovation, investment, and productivity;

(5) efforts to reverse the decline of American industry have been hindered by a number of factors, including—

(A) a long-term decline in relative productivity growth;

(B) insufficient capital investment in the revitalization of basic industries and in the commercialization and diffusion of new technologies;

(C) a lack of adequate patient capital to invest in smaller, innovative firms;

(D) insufficient investment in civilian research and development in comparison with our major competitors;

(E) a series of systemic inefficiencies in the management and organization of business, including adversarial labor-management relations and short-term time horizons; and

(F) a serious erosion in the institutional support for production, including a lack of high quality domestic and international economic data needed to—

(i) reveal sectoral strengths and weaknesses;

(ii) identify potential new markets and future trends; and

(iii) provide necessary information regarding the industrial strategies of our foreign competitors;

(6) helping to support the competitiveness of United States industries is a proper and necessary role for government, working with the private sector;

(7) at present, industrial policy in the United States is composed of a variety of Government programs, subsidies, and regulatory oversight functions which often are not coordinated, cohesive, or consistent;

(8) while our economy benefits when business, labor, government, academia, and public interest groups work together cooperatively, there exists no effective, high-level forum for developing a consensus on economic policies;

(9) the decline in United States industrial competitiveness endangers the economic stability of the Nation;

(10) such decline also endangers the ability of the United States to maintain the defense industrial base which is necessary to the national security of the United States;

(11) progress on the issue of competitiveness requires a recognition that the world is moving rapidly toward the creation of an integrated and interdependent economy, a world economy in which the policies of one nation have a major impact on other nations;

(12) effective management of such an integrated world economy requires a significant increase in multilateral solutions to such issues as trade, tax, investment, and the distribution of world markets and world production;

(13) effective participation by the United States in this process has been inhibited by the lack of specific mechanisms—

(A) to identify the problems of particular industries and sectors; and

(B) to develop specific solutions to those sectoral problems within the broader range of national economic policies;

(14) such lack of specific mechanisms has been particularly harmful to those labor intensive industries which must compete with very low wages paid in foreign countries;

(15) it is now imperative that Government, business, labor, academia, and public interest groups act together to develop and coordinate long-range forecasts and visions for helping to assure the international competitiveness of United States industries; and

(16) such forecasts and visions should be balanced by—

(A) encouraging the development of emerging industries which can provide substantial economic growth and employment; and

(B) directing resources into the revitalization of mature and linkage industries.

(b) It is the purpose of this title—

(1) to develop recommendations for long-range forecasts and visions for promoting the international competitiveness of United States industries; and

(2) to establish the Council on Industrial Competitiveness which will—

(A) gather and analyze information regarding the competitiveness of United States industries;

(B) create an institutional forum where national leaders with experience and background in business, labor, government, academia, and public interest activities will—

(i) identify economic problems inhibiting the competitiveness of United States industries;

(ii) develop long-term forecasts and visions to address such problems; and

(iii) create a broad consensus in support of such forecasts and visions; and

(C) make recommendations on issues crucial to the development of coordinated economic policies.

ESTABLISHMENT

SEC. 1003. There is established in the executive branch of the Government an independent agency to be known as the Council on Industrial Competitiveness.

DUTIES OF THE COUNCIL

SEC. 1004. The duties of the Council are—

(1) to collect and analyze relevant domestic and international data concerning current and future economic trends and market opportunities;

(2) to monitor the changing nature of the United States industrial economy and its capacity—

(A) to provide marketable goods and services in domestic and international markets; and

(B) to respond to international competition;

(3) to create a forum or forums where national leaders with experience and background in business, labor, academia, public interest activities, and Government will—

(A) identify national economic problems;

(B) develop recommendations to address such problems; and

(C) create a broad consensus in support of such recommendations;

(4) to develop and promote a national vision and specific policies which enhance the productivity and international competitiveness of United States industries;

(5) to assess private sector requests for governmental assistance or relief and to recommend, as a condition of such assistance or relief—

(A) those actions of the private sector which will ensure that the applicant involved, by receiving the assistance or relief, will become internationally competitive in the future; and

(B) any adjustment commitments which should be entered into by relevant parties, such as management and employees of the applicant, shareholders, creditors, suppliers and dealers, and financial institutions, to ensure that the applicant will become internationally competitive in the future;

(6) to prepare and publish reports containing the recommendations of the Council with respect to industrial development priorities;

(7) to establish industry subcouncils of public and private leaders to develop similar long-term forecasts and visions for sectors of the economy;

(8) to provide policy recommendations and guidance to the Congress, the President, and the Federal departments and agencies regarding specific issues concerning economic policies;

(9) to annually report to the President and the Congress—

(A) on the state of the national economy;

(B) on the status of major sectors of the national economy; and

(C) on the effect of existing Government policies on industries;

(10) to review and evaluate specific policy recommendations developed by the industry subcouncils and transmit such recommendations to the implementing agencies concerned; and

(11) to evaluate existing Government policies and business practices in terms of the competitive impact of such policies and practices.

MEMBERSHIP

SEC. 1005. (a) The Council shall be composed of sixteen members as follows:

(1) Members appointed by the President, who shall be heads of Federal departments or agencies, Members of Congress, or representatives of State or local governments.

(2) Members appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate—

(A) who shall be national leaders with experience and background in business, including at least one individual selected from the small business community; and

(B) who shall have a broad understanding of the United States economy and the United States position in the world economy.

(3) Members appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate—

(A) who shall be national leaders with experience and background in the labor community; and

(B) who shall have a broad understanding of the United States economy and of the United States position in the world economy.

(4) Members appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, each of whom—

(A) shall be selected from the academic community or have been active in public interest activities; and

(B) shall have a broad understanding of the United States economy and of the United States position in the world economy.

(b) The Council shall not commence its duties until all the members specified in paragraphs (2), (3), and (4) of subsection (a) have been appointed and have qualified.

(c)(1) A vacancy in the Council shall be filled in the same manner in which the original appointment was made.

(2)(A) Any member appointed to fill a vacancy occurring before the expiration of the term for which such member's predecessor was appointed shall be appointed only for the remainder of such term.

(B) A member may serve after the expiration of such member's term until such member's successor has taken office.

(d)(1) No member may serve more than two consecutive terms.

(2) Members of the Council may be removed by the President only for malfeasance in office.

(e) Not more than nine members of the Council shall be of the same political party.

(f)(1) Members appointed under paragraphs (2) through (4) of subsection (a) shall be appointed for terms of six years.

(2) Of the members first appointed under paragraphs (2) through (4) of subsection (a)—

(A) three shall be appointed for a term of two years;

(B) three shall be appointed for a term of three years;

(C) three shall be appointed for a term of four years; and

(D) three shall be appointed for a term of six years; as designated by the President at the time of appointment.

(g)(1) Each member of the Council who is not otherwise in the service of the Government of the United States or any State or local government—

(A) shall receive a sum equivalent to the compensation paid at level II of the Executive Schedule, pursuant to section 5315 of title 5, United States Code, prorated on a daily basis for each day spent in the work of the Council; and0

(B) shall be paid actual travel expenses, and per diem in lieu of subsistence expenses when away from his usual place of residence, in accordance with section 5703 of such title.

(2) Each member of the Council who is otherwise in the service of the Government of the United States or any State or local government shall serve without compensation in addition to that received for such other service, but while engaged in the work of the Council shall be paid actual travel expenses, and per diem in lieu of subsistence expenses when away from his usual place of residence, in accordance with subchapter 1 of chapter 57 of title 5, United States Code.

(h) Nine members of the Council constitute a quorum, except that a lesser number may hold hearings if such action is approved by a two-thirds vote of the entire Council.

(i)(1) The Council shall elect, by a two-thirds vote of the entire Council, a Chairman from among the individuals appointed under paragraphs (2) through (4) of subsection (a).

(2) The Chairman shall serve full time.

(j) The Council shall meet at the call of the Chairman or a majority of its members, except that the Council shall meet not less than six times during each calendar year.

(k)(1) Each member of the Council shall designate one alternate representative to attend any meeting that such member is unable to attend.

(2) In the course of attending any such meeting, an alternate representative shall be considered a member of the Council for all purposes, including voting.

(l)(1) Except as provided in subsection (j), no action whatsoever (whether involving administrative or personnel matters, establishing policy, or any other type of action) shall be taken by the Council unless approved by two-thirds of the entire membership of the Council.

(2)(A) If a two-thirds consensus, as required under paragraph (1), cannot be reached on a matter referred to the Council by the President, or either House of the Congress, the Council shall transmit a report to the President and both Houses of the Congress explaining why a consensus could not be reached on such matter.

(B) Such report shall include all information gathered by the Council on such matter and a list of potential policy options for addressing the concern involved.

(m) The Council may procure temporary and intermittent services under section 3109(b) of title 5, United States Code, but at rates for individuals not to exceed the daily equivalent of the maximum annual rate of basic pay for GS-16 of the General Schedule.

(n) Upon request of the Council, the head of any other Federal agency is authorized to detail, on a reimbursable basis, any of the personnel of such agency to the Council to assist the Council in carrying out its duties under this title.

(o)(1) An individual may not be appointed as a member of the Council if, at any time within the 1-year period ending on the date on which any such appointment would otherwise be effective, such individual has acted as an agent or attorney for, or performed any other professional service for or on behalf of, the government of any foreign country, any agency or instrumentality of the government of a foreign country, or any foreign political party.

(2) If, after an individual is appointed as a member of the Council, such individual acts or performs in any manner or capacity described in paragraph (1), such individual shall cease to be a member of the Council as of the date such individual acts or performs in such manner or capacity.

EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR AND STAFF

SEC. 1006. (a)(1) The principal administrative officer of the Council shall be an Executive Director, who shall be appointed by the Council.

(2) The Council shall consult with the President and leaders of the Congress before appointing an individual to the position of Executive Director.

(3) The Executive Director shall serve full-time.

(b) Within the limitations of the Council's appropriations, the Executive Director may appoint the personnel of the Council in accordance with the civil service and classification laws.

POWERS OF THE COUNCIL

SEC. 1007. (a) The Council may, for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this title, hold such hearings, sit and act at such times and places, take such testimony, and receive such evidence, as the Council considers appropriate. The Council may administer oaths or affirmations to witnesses appearing before the Council.

(b) If so authorized by the Council, any member or agent of the Council may take any action which the Council is authorized to take under this section.

(c)(1)(A) The Council may secure directly from any department or agency of the United States information necessary to enable the Council to carry out the provisions of this title.

(B) Upon request of the Chairman of the Council, the head of such department or agency shall furnish such information to the Council.

(2) In any case in which the Council receives any information from a department or agency of the United States, the Council shall not disclose such information to the public unless such department or agency is authorized to disclose such information pursuant to Federal law.

(d) The Council may accept, use, and dispose of gifts or donations of services or property.

(e) The Council may use the United States mails in the same manner and under the same conditions as other departments and agencies of the United States.

(f) The Administrator of General Services shall provide to the Council, on a reimbursable basis, such administrative support services as the Council may request.

(g)(1) The Council shall establish, when and for such period of time as the Council deems appropriate, industry subcouncils of public and private leaders representing the major economic interests affected by sectoral policies.

(2) Subcouncil members shall serve on a part-time basis.

(3)(A) Such subcouncils shall examine the competitive problems facing individual industries in the economy and develop recommendations regarding long-term projections which could improve the competitiveness of such industries.

(B) In the course of developing recommendations, the industry subcouncils shall hold such hearings, sit and act at such times and places, take such testimony, and receive such evidence as such subcouncils consider appropriate.

(4)(A) The industry subcouncils shall report their findings and recommendations to the Council.

(B) Where appropriate, each of the subcouncil's reports shall assess the effectiveness of employee ownership as one of the tools and long-term needs for improving the competitive problems facing the industry.

(C) The Council shall review the findings and recommendations of the subcouncils in preparing the Council's recommendations.

EFFECTS OF IMPORTS ON DOMESTIC INDUSTRIES

SEC. 1008. (a) The Council shall examine and make available to the public all international agreements on foreign trade that have been agreed to by the United States.

(b) The Council shall continuously monitor, and maintain public records regarding, the effect of imports on all major United States industries and on such other United States industries as may be specified by the Council.

REPORTS

SEC. 1009. (a) Not later than one year after the date of the enactment of this title, the Council shall transmit a report to both Houses of the Congress and the President containing recommendations of the Council for changes in any Federal policy necessary to implement effective, productive economic policies.

(b)(1) The Council shall annually prepare and transmit to the President and to each House of the Congress a report setting forth—

(A) a vision of a competitive United States economy;

(B) the policies needed to meet such priorities; and

(C) a summary of existing Government policies affecting industries.

(2) Such report shall contain a statement of the findings and conclusions of the Council during the previous fiscal year, together with any recommendations of the Council for such legislative or administrative actions as the Council considers appropriate.

(c)(1) Upon receipt by either House of the Congress, the report shall be referred to the appropriate committee or committees of each House.

(2) The Council shall consult with each such committee with respect to such report and, following such consultation, each such committee shall submit to its respective House a report setting forth the views and recommendations of such committee with respect to the report of the Council.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of routine morning business, with statements therein limited to 5 minutes each.

AMERICA'S LIVING STANDARDS ACT OF 1986

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I am pleased today to join as an original cosponsor of America's Living Standards Act of 1986. This legislation is an important step toward restructuring our economic priorities, those economic priorities that are so vital to this country's future.

I wish to commend the distinguished Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BINGAMAN] for his efforts in this regard and also the entire working group of Senators who worked with Senator BINGAMAN in this important study.

The erosion of our competitive posture in the world marketplace is no surprise to tens of thousands of Americans who have lost their jobs to overseas competitors. We have weathered the recession of the early 1980's, the worst recession—or depression—this country has seen since the dark days of the early 1930's, and we have waited for a full recovery, but it has not come. The full economic recovery that was supposed to come after the scourge of high interest rates had dissipated simply has not arrived, and it may never arrive if we do not take corrective steps now.

Growth in our gross national product is at a standstill. The Federal Reserve has recommended discount interest rate cuts exceeding the imagination of most forecasters just a scant 6 months ago. The gross national product has not responded, and last quarter's growth rate was at an agonizing snail's pace of six-tenths of 1 percent. The administration's projections were closer to 4 or 5 percent just 6 months ago, and they now seem wildly optimistic.

A widely accepted estimate is that GNP must grow at an annual rate of at least 3 percent to maintain our economic health, to absorb the expanding work force and put them into productive jobs.

Well, what is the problem? Why is this economy failing to respond? It is certainly not the sole fault of our allies—the Japanese or the West Germans. But the administration continues to insist that if only our economic allies would stimulate domestic demand within their own economies by lowering interest rates or instituting other measures for stimulation, all of our problems would be solved. This is, I submit, a very shortsighted answer to a problem which demands more comprehensive solutions.

The legislation that we are introducing today establishes the framework for such a comprehensive solution. This bill is designed to prepare the people and the institutions of the United States to compete successfully in the world marketplace, and as the bill's name implies, this does not mean reducing our working population to slave-labor conditions or abandoning the quality of life that we have come to enjoy. It means taking advantage of our natural advantages.

Many of the measures in the bill we are introducing today have evolved from recommendations made by the Young Commission, also known as the President's Commission on U.S. Industrial Competitiveness. The Young Commission, comprised of national leaders from industry, labor, Government and academia, conducted an in-depth study of the challenge to U.S. competitiveness in the world marketplace. Their recommendations have been reviewed at length and in detail by the authors of this bill, and I believe the legislation being introduced today can be the foundation of a new era in American economic thinking.

There are a number of essential first steps in this process.

First, the bill would establish the means for assisting our industries in securing the most advanced technical information available in the world. It would establish within the Commerce Department the capability for monitoring developments, onsite, in foreign science and technology. It would establish within the U.S. Patent Office a new Office of Technology Assessment, Forecast and Outreach. The use by foreign industry of U.S. patents has outstripped American use of foreign patents manyfold. Our Government's institutions need to be organized to meet this challenge—not in making decisions about the use of the resources, but in making the resources available for private-sector decisionmaking.

The drive for technological excellence must be accelerated. The bill would expand and diversify the engineering research centers of the National Science Foundation, establish an economic competitiveness program to grant 500 graduate fellowships in science and engineering, and establish a fund to assist America's colleges and universities rebuild their R&D infrastructures.

Another key element in economic competitiveness is dramatic improvement in our education system. This bill would establish a graduate fellowship program for teacher training, and expand Federal funding to enhance the use of quality instructional software and video technologies. The great wealth of intellectual talent in this country deserves the resources to develop to its fullest potential.

Perhaps one of the most experimental portions of the bill is the proposal to expand work force mobility. In addition to providing States with additional resources to help the unemployed to become fully productive members of society, the bill would provide the Department of Labor with sufficient funding to implement a nationwide computerized job bank. It would also examine the merits and the costs of initiating a personal portable pension for all Americans. These are fairly radical concepts in many ways, and I think we're going to have to look further at the potential long-range impact of such proposals. While I would oppose any program that mandated workers to move their families away from home at the drop of a computer chip, I also believe the day is long past where we can tolerate the havoc caused by massive migrations, based frequently on rumor, during boom and bust cycles in particular industries.

Obviously, this is a complex and broad-ranging plan. Implementation of these proposals is going to require a great degree of coordination. The bill would provide the necessary support to meet this challenge.

The bill would establish a national council on industrial competitiveness to perform functions critical to the success of this effort. The council's mission would include targeted monitoring of economic, industrial, and trade developments, providing analytical information to public and private sector groups to ensure that U.S. competitiveness is being enhanced rather than hindered by current trends.

Mr. President, the old way of doing things isn't working. The time has come to realize that we're a player in a world community—not just the multinational corporations that have led the world to unprecedented prosperity, but the working people, the teachers, and students, the real backbone population of this country are ready to take their place as competitors in this new global reality. And I think our institutions should be ready to allow them to go forward. They can make their own living standards the best in the world, as they have in the past

I urge my colleagues to take part in this new endeavor. The "America's Living Standard Act of 1986" is the first step.

AMERICA'S LIVING STANDARDS ACT OF 1986

● Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, Ronald Reagan says, "It's morning in America."

He's right. We're mourning the steel industry. We're mourning the textile industry. We're mourning the lumber industry. We're mourning a host of industries that are losing their competitive edge in world markets.

It's time we stopped mourning. It's time we started doing something about it.

That's exactly what we're doing here today with this legislation, which has been drafted by the Senate Democratic Working Group on Economic Competitiveness led by Senator BINGAMAN.

History has taught us that no country is guaranteed that it will grow and prosper. That's going to take hard work and good tools.

The Democratic legislation provides those tools. It embodies many of the solutions that will reverse America's declining competitiveness.

It helps us gather better information on foreign technologies.

It encourages technological excellence and strives to improve education.

It helps create a more mobile work force capable of fueling the economic restructuring needed for economic competitiveness.

And it creates a forum for building a national consensus on competitiveness policy.

These recommendations are just the first step in making it easier for America to compete with foreign countries.

It's time we recognize that our trade problem is not entirely a result of unfair foreign trade practices and overvalued currencies. Important as these factors are, eliminating them will not solve the U.S. trade crisis.

Over the last 25 years, our productivity went up by only 2.7 percent each year. That's considerably less than Japan's growth of 8 percent and Great Britain's increase of 3.6 percent.

This problem cannot be solved only by eliminating unfair trade barriers and correcting currency misalignments.

The competitiveness gap between the United States and other countries is having a disastrous effect on the American standard of living. Today the median income of the average American family is the same as it was in 1965.

Our failure to compete is not some abstraction. It means real dollars and cents to every American.

In the end, we must compete our way out of the trade crisis. If we don't, we're going to lose the good life as we know it.

I am glad to be a cosponsor of the American Living Standards Act. It's one of the best ways to stop our "mourning in America."●

FEDERAL-AID HIGHWAY PROGRAM

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. President, each October 1, Federal-aid highway funds are apportioned to the 50 States, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico and the territories. Over $13 billion will not be apportioned to the States this October 1 unless the Federal-aid highway program is reauthorized.

The Environment and Public Works Committee ordered reported S. 2405, the Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1986, on July 23. S. 2405 is on the Senate calendar. It is extremely important that the Senate act on this legislation as soon as possible and that Congress complete action on highway reauthorization legislation before they leave in October.

I have received a letter, as have all my colleagues, signed by the Governors of all 50 States and American Samoa. I believe this letter and the 51 signatures illustrates better than anything I can say the importance of completing highway legislation so that the States can go forward with their transportation programs without interruption.

I ask unanimous consent that the letter be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL GOVERNORS' ASSOCIATION,
August 26, 1986.

DEAR MEMBER OF CONGRESS: Through a model intergovernmental partnership, the states and the federal government have constructed a world-class Interstate highway system with major highway routes connecting states and communities and have worked to restore mass transit systems throughout the country. This partnership has been under strain in recent years, however, as Congress has not been able to approve in a timely manner legislation releasing highway and transit funds to the states.

Legislation reauthorizing the federal highway and transit programs must be approved by Congress before October 1 of this year for states to maintain the tremendous investment and the momentum built up under the Surface Transportation Assistance Act of 1982. The Interstate system is not yet completed and the need to repair current highway and transit systems is as great as ever. State programs to improve our transportation infrastructure should not be subject to unnecessary funding delays and disruptions.

The timely enactment of this legislation is crucial to the states, who need predictability and continuity to develop their highway and transit programs and to plan for the future. It is also important to the construction industry which can ill afford uncertainty and disruption. Problems in recent years, such as the delayed enactment of the Interstate cost estimates, have taken their toll on the states and the construction industry.

Congress should also keep in mind that these funds are raised by taxes imposed on users and placed in a Trust Fund for transportation needs. They cannot be used for any other purpose. The truth is, however, these Trust Fund dollars are not being used. The Highway Trust Fund has a cash balance of over $9 billion. The states have more than $6 billion in past highway authorizations they are unable to spend because of the obligation limitations that have been placed on the funds as a fiscal constraint. While lowering the obligation ceiling may, on paper, enhance the financial picture, it is a misleading picture. The federal deficit is still in the $200 billion range, and roads across the Nation are not being built.

While we must deal with other important issues, especially the need to reduce the deficit, the nation's surface transportation infrastructure cannot be placed on hold. We urge you, and the entire Congress, to make passage of the highway and transit reauthorization legislation one of your highest priorities when Congress reconvenes on September 8. We trust that you will do everything possible to enact this important legislation by October 1.

Sincerely,

Robert D. Orr, Governor; William O'Neill, Governor; James R. Thompson, Governor; Dick Thornburgh, Governor; Thomas H. Kean, Governor; Richard W. Riley, Governor; Gerald L. Baliles, Governor; James G. Martin, Governor; Madeleine M. Kuning, Governor; Anthony S. Earl, Governor; John Carlin, Governor; John V. Evans, Governor; William J. Janklow, Governor; Toney Anaya, Governor; Michael S. Dukakis, Governor; A.P. Lutali, Governor; George R. Ariyoshi, Governor; George Sinner, Governor; Norman H. Bangerter, Governor; James J. Blanchard, Governor; John Ashcroft, Governor; Joe Frank Harris, Governor; Bill Clinton, Governor; John H. Sununu, Governor; Michael N. Castle, Governor; Martha Layne Collins, Governor; Edward D. DiPrete, Governor; Rudy Perpich, Governor; William A. Allain, Governor; Mario M. Cuomo, Governor; Richard F. Celeste, Governor; Bob Graham, Governor; Harry Hughes, Governor; Ted Schwinden, Governor; Bill Sheffield, Governor; Robert Kerrey, Governor; Terry Branstad, Governor; Victor G. Atiyeh, Governor; Arch A. Moore, Jr., Governor; Richard D. Lamm, Governor; Bruce Babbitt, Governor; Booth Gardner, Governor; Richard H. Bryan, Governor; George Nigh, Governor; George C. Wallace, Governor; Edwin W. Edwards, Governor; Joseph E. Brennan, Governor; Ed Herschler, Governor; Mark White, Governor; Lamar Alexander, Governor; George Deukmejian, Governor.

THE 13TH ANNIVERSARY OF GENERAL PINOCHET'S MILITARY COUP

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, today marks a sad anniversary for the people of Chile, the passing of yet another year of authoritarian rule by Gen. Augusto Pinochet. This 13th anniversary comes at a time when Chile is near the boiling point; hope of a peaceful return to democracy in Chile is growing more and more distant.

The Government and the people of Chile appear to be locked on a collision course; the ruthless policies of Pinochet have consistently undercut the possibility for compromise, peace, and reconciliation. The outcome of this repression is all too predictable. Unless the Government changes course, the country will be thrown into an unending cycle of increasing violence, death, and repression.

The deplorable assassination attempt against General Pinochet was a serious setback to the prospects for peace and reconciliation. Yet rather than show restraint at a time of crisis, General Pinochet and his henchmen have capitalized on the incident to unleash a relentless and ruthless campaign designed to crush any voice of dissent of criticism in the country. This campaign is a thinly veiled attempt to ensure that General Pinochet is assured of achieving his recently announced desire to remain in power well into the 1990's. Its effect can only be an escalation of violence and instability in the country.

A state of siege has once again been imposed in Chile. Leaders of political parties, student associations, neighborhood organizations, human rights groups, the church, and the press have all become targets for Pinochet's campaign to destroy any challenge to his authority. And now we see death squads at work with the brutal murder of Jose Carrasco Tapia, the editor of the opposition magazine Analisis. He was abducted from his home by armed men in civilian clothes and found dead Tuesday with bullet wounds in his head. A teacher and a machinist have also been abducted from their homes and murdered in similar fashions. Yesterday, riot policemen attacked several hundred people with clubs who had gathered for the funeral of Mr. Carrasco and then fired on the group with tear gas and water cannons.

Three French priests have been threatened with expulsion from the country and two U.S. priests were detained for a brief period. The Government has reported officially the detention of two dozen individuals, most of whom are associated with the political opposition, and has closed six opposition magazines, suspended the right of the Reuter news agency to dispatch from Chile and closed the Italian news agency ANSA.

General Pinochet boldly stated his contempt for advocates of human rights on Monday warning, "Now the war is going to begin on our side, and we are going to be tough, and all those people involved in human rights and the other things are going to be expelled from the country or locked up." Those ominous words do not bode well for the future of Chile. Unless both sides show moderation and a commitment to democracy, the war of which General Pinochet speaks could very well occur. Yet it is not the left or the democratic opposition in Chile which will determine the coming or avoidance of such a war—that determination is in the hands of General Pinochet. If the steps he had taken to date continue—and all indications are that they will—chaos and destruction will inevitably reign in that country.

The United States has an important role to play in urging peace and reconciliation in Chile. Our actions in light of the assassination attempt and renewed round of repression will have a critical impact on the outcome of the current crisis and on whether democracy has a chance of returning peacefully to Chile. A crucial point in United States policy will occur within the next few weeks when a large structural adjustment loan to Chile comes before the World Bank for consideration.

In the wake of the recent events in Chile, all eyes will be on the United States vote. Should the United States vote in favor of that loan, the United States would be aligned irrevocably with the repressive policies of Pinochet; the desperation and despair of those long denied freedom and democracy in Chile would be magnified. But, should the United States vote against that loan, we would be sending a strong signal to General Pinochet that we do not support his undemocratic, brutal policies and as well as to the democratic forces in Chile that the United States is committed to a return to justice, freedom and democracy in that country.

For too long, this administration has kept General Pinochet afloat by voting in support of loans to the Government of Chile. Shortly after Orlando Letelier and Ronni Moffitt were murdered in the streets of Washington in 1976, Congress cut off all economic and military assistance to Chile. Congress also enacted into law section 701 of the International Financial Institutions Act which directs the U.S. executive directors of multilateral financial institutions to oppose loans to countries whose governments engage in a pattern of gross violations of internationally recognized human rights. For 13 years, the Government of Chile has engaged in such a pattern, but the Reagan administration has yet to vote against a single international loan to Chile on the human rights grounds stipulated in section 701.

President Ford voted no; President Carter voted no; but the Reagan administration has voted in favor of $2.2 billion in loans to Chile. That is not only unconscionable; it is illegal.

September 21 will mark another dark episode in the history of Chile—the 10th anniversary of the murder of Orlando Letelier on the streets of Washington. Yet, the Government of Chile has refused to seek justice against his murderers. Nor has the Government taken action against those who murdered Rodrigo Rojas de Negri, a resident of Washington. For 13 years, General Pinochet has demonstrated a consistent, cavalier disregard for the civil, political, and human rights of its citizens while abusing his illegally seized office to maintain his firm grip on power.

In view of Pinochet's crackdown, the imposition of a state of siege and his stated intention to expel or lock up all those concerned with human rights, a failure by the administration to oppose the next round of loans to Chile would be disastrous for United States relations with the people of Chile and would serve only to fuel the radical violence and anti-Americanism voiced in Chile. Last month I introduced, along with Senator HARKIN, a resolution instructing the United States executive directors to vote against loans to Chile until the Government has ended its abhorrent human rights abuses, has agreed to extradite the killers of Orlando Letelier and Ronni Moffit, and has brought to justice those individuals responsible for the brutal murder-by-fire of Rodrigo Rojas.

In light of the recent events in Chile it is all the more important that the United States put itself clearly on the side of decency and democracy in Chile and distance itself from the Pinochet regime. I urge the Senate to adopt this resolution and make it clear that we will not tolerate the new wave of Pinochet's repression. The world will be watching that vote—and I urge the administration to cast its vote in favor of democracy in Chile and against loans to Chile.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that several articles and editorials concerning recent events in Chile may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PINOCHET HAS REAPED WHAT HE HAS SOWN

(By Ariel Dorfman)

DURHAM, N.C.—The failed guerrilla attempt on the life of Gen. Augusto Pinochet on Sunday. Almost 13 years to the day that he seized power in a bloody coup in Chile, marked a turning point in the history of my country.

It is not the violence that is new. We have had more than our fill of that. In fact given the systematic violation of human rights, the murder and exile of thousands of dissidents, the arrest and torture of hundreds of thousands of others, what is puzzling is not that such an attempt should have been made but that it did not come sooner. General Pinochet, after all, is merely reaping the destruction he himself has sown.

What is new is that the hopes for a peaceful transition to democracy seem to have been dashed. Despite the death that had been visited upon us, despite the disastrous economic situation, an overwhelming majority of Chileans stubbornly clung to the expectation—and we continue to do so against all odds today—that we would be able to return our land to civilized rule using nonviolent means.

We kept anticipating that, unless the Government took effective steps to hold elections and give the people back its sovereignty, the country would be inevitably split apart and lapse into a generalized confrontation.

General Pinochet's intransigent decision to remain in power until 1997, his invasion of the slum areas, the impoverishment of vast sectors of a country where unemployment runs at about 30 percent—all created fertile ground for action by those dissidents who were losing patience. Many of them, basically linked to the powerful Communist Party, had gradually come to the conclusion that only armed resistance to an army at war with its own people could bring the dictatorship down.

Most Chileans, including myself, saw this call to arms as suicidal and irresponsible. We argued that this polarization of the country into two military bands could only strengthen the stranglehold that General Pinochet has on his army and allow him to present himself as the only man who could save the country from a Communist takeover.

Things have turned out, unfortunately, just as we predicted. The General is now able to proclaim a state of siege, jailing his main opponents, including many who have resolutely proclaimed nonviolence as the only method of struggle. If knowledge of how he has acted in the past is worth anything, he will probably continue mass arrests until he has wiped out all the organizations that have been peacefully mounting a campaingn of civil disobedience against him during the last month, incuding a successful general strike two months ago.

But these measures will not solve Chile's problems—because it is General Pinochet himself who is at the root of Chile's problems. Thirteen years ago, he promised to wipe out Marxism. He has only driven a Communist Party that did not believe in belligerence to become a vast network for armed resistance. He has turned a country that for most of its history was fundamentally harmonious and participatory into a place where the young learn violence every day—in the streets that are patrolled by marauding soldiers, in the schools where they are expelled and beaten up, in the lack of employment and the abundance of hunger.

More violence will beget more violence.

Is it already too late?

My basic fear is that even before this latest escalation in internal warfare the military had gone beyond the reach of reason.

The night of civil conflagation and death that now threatens us has been announced over and over to every Chilean in the faces of the soldiers who patrol our streets.

Our soldiers have no faces. Their features blackened with combat grease, they invade the city, stamp the hands of male slum dwellers as if they were animals, spread terror everywhere. People know—as I knew with certainty one night when I was beaten up by the military in Santiago—that anything can happen to them, that those men have no other identity than their guns.

Those masks of dark anonymity, which place Chile's soldiers beyond justice and control, also have come to represent the walls that General Pinochet has successfully erected between the armed forces and the unarmed civilian populace.

And yet only the image to come out of Chile is not this image of despair. Whenever dissidents meet in public—at protest marches and at sit-ins, during jail visits and funerals—their automatic reaction, when the police arrive or the troops begin to advance is to join their hands in the air and to sing.

Though the song has not been loud enough and the hands are often fragmented by divisions, we have always believed that somehow our voices would be able to reach the military and convince its members that there can be no security for a country where the army treats its own people as if they were the enemy.

Even now that we are in danger of being swallowed forever by those faces of darkness, I can only hope that our dream will persist and that the pacific men and women of Chile will be able to find a way of ridding ourselves of a tyrant without having to undergo many more years of endless and tragic bloodshed.

By joining hands, we may be able to pull down General Pinochet's walls, even as the walls of Jericho came tumbling down.

FAILED ASSASSINATION

The attempt to assassinate Gen. Augusto Pinochet constitutes a severe setback to any hope for an easy or early return to democracy in Chile. The Manuel Rodriguez Patriotic Front, a guerrila organization on the fringes of the Communist Party, says that it was responsible for the ambush; the general survived, but five of his bodyguards did not. The Front says that it will try again. Meanwhile the general has his troops combing savagely through Santiago for the perpetrators. He has also taken the opportunity to shut down a number of publications, arrest a couple of politicians who appear to have had nothing to do with the affair, and return the country to a state of siege, which legally endows the army with authority to do just about whatever it pleases in the name of rooting out the enemy.

Gen. Pinochet's junta and its most extreme adversaries have much in common. Both relay on violence, Each presents itself as the only means of rescue from the other. Each draws it political strength from the excess of the other. It is an example of political symbiosis of a most unwholesome sort.

Chile is now the most conspicuous laggard in South America's return to democracy. Among the largest countries, and those moving along the road to industrialization, all but Chile are now under elected governments. The United States, among others, has been trying to nudge Gen. Pinochet in the same direction. But the general's most recent response was the declaration, earlier this summer, that he expects to run for another eight-year term when his present one ends in 1989. He claims to be leading the country toward democracy, but he evidently sees no need to hurry.

Going after him with machine guns will not accelerate progress toward a better government. The junta was brought to power by the rising disorder, and widespread fears of worse to come, under Salvador Allende's left-wing government in the early 1970s. By resorting to attempted asassination, the guerrillas of the left only reinforce the claim by which Gen. Pinochet has perpetuated his hold on the country for the past 13 years—that he and the junta are the sole alternative to chaos and destruction. In fact, there are other far more promising possibilities. Chile has had much democratic experience, and successfuly maintained a long constitutional tradition until the military coup. There are many Chileans who know how to make democracy work, and are deeply committed to it. But when the generals and the terrorists begin to go after each other, the democratic center is squeezed so hard that it can barely breathe.

[From the New York Times, Sept. 10, 1986]

GENERAL PINOCHET DECLARES "WAR"

Chile is "in a war," Gen. Augusto Pinochet declared after he survived an assassination attempt Sunday night. Who is the enemy? In his view, it is the vast majority of the Chilean people.

Seizing on the assault that killed five of his guards, the general has declared a new state of siege. Tanks have rolled into residential areas. Moderate leaders of the sizable opposition have been thrown in jail. A well-known journalist has been found murdered after being picked up by men who reportedly identified themselves as police. Even conservative publications have been shut down.

Tomorrow will be the 13th anniversary of Chile's military rule. The crude repression of a people hungering for democracy is by now a familiar story. But an even more depressing stage may be at hand: the confrontation between armed extremes of the left and right.

For months, in the face of a broadly based opposition movement that was firmly committed to non-violent change, the regime had been telling Chileans that their only choice lay between the menacing violence of an armed left and acquiescence in military rule. Such claims met a mostly skeptical response; two magazine editors were recently jailed for a story questioning the regime's account of finding arms caches.

But now, the ambush of the general's motorcade, presumably by leftists, has lent plausibility to his crackdown. "People don't realize the danger we are in," the general insists. However effective in the short run, this willful campaign of polarization invites disaster. Neither the 70-year-old general nor his regime will last forever. Why strengthen the guerrilla left by driving all opposition underground? Chile was a mature democracy for generations before the 1973 coup against the left-leaning Allende government. More wisely led, the country would surely choose a moderate course.

The Reagan Administration perceives the dangers in General Pinochet's course. That is why it resists the agitation on his behalf by Senator Jesse Helms. That is why Ambassador Harry Barnes maintains highly visible contacts with leaders of the nonviolent opposition. And that is why the State Department, in condemning the ambush this week, also expressed proper concern about the state of siege.

The Administration will soon have to decide if the Pinochet regime has sufficiently improved its respect of human rights to warrant a U.S. vote in favor of multinational bank loans to Chile. Far from improving conditions, General Pinochet is turning bad to worse.

CHILE CLOSES A SECOND NEWS AGENCY IN CRACKDOWN

(By Shirley Christian)

SANTIAGO, CHILE, Sept. 10.—The Government continued its crackdown on the press today by closing an Italian news agency.

Human rights officials, meanwhile, defended themselves against what they said were attempts by President Augusto Pinochet to link them to terrorist actions.

Jaime Castillo Valasco, a prominent Christian Democratic politician who is president of the Chilean Human Rights Commission, said General Pinochet's oral attacks on human rights workers the day after he survived an assassination attempt were based on "an erroneous concept of political doctrine."

Under the third military edict issued since a state of siege was imposed late Sunday, the Italian news agency ANSA was ordered to stop sending news reports from Chile or distributing news from abroad here.

Giorgio Bagone, the ANSA bureau chief, said that the agency was accused of "divulging tendentious and false information about the armed forces" but that he had not been able to obtain more specific information.

Earlier this week, the military Government issued a similar order against the British news agency Reuters and close six Chilean magazines considered critical of or in opposition to the Government.

Later today, riot policemen swinging clubs attacked several hundred people, about half of them journalists, who had gathered for the start of the funeral cortege of the slain foreign editor of one of the closed magazines. Then the downtown block was swept by tear gas and water cannon.

The journalist, José Carrasco Tapia, was shot to death after being pulled out of his house by armed men during curfew hours Monday. He worked for the news magazine Análisis and was a member of the executive committee of the Journalists Federation. Two other men were found dead after being taken from their home Monday in similar circumstances.

The state of siege, giving the Government sweeping powers to detain people or banish them to distant parts of the country and to restrict public gatherings and the press, was imposed a few hours after General Pinochet's motorcade was ambushed by guerrillas Sunday night as he returned to the capital from a weekend in the country. Five of the general's bodyguards were killed.

The Government used the state of siege to arrrest 20 people, most of whom are identified with the political opposition.

Mr. Castillo said at his morning news conference that the Pinochet Government "thinks that to defend the fundamental rights of the human being is to favor a particular political band, which is completely absurd."

He was referring to several disparaging comments that General Pinochet made Monday about human rights workers. In one such remark, the President said, "Now the war is going to begin from our side, and we are going to be tough, and all those people involved in human rights and the other things are going to be expelled from the country or locked up.

Mr. Castillo, a lawyer, said he had presented a court petition Tuesday demanding judicial protection against what he said were Government threats against him and other leaders of the commission. He said that men who identified themselves as civilian policemen had been to the homes of two commission members on Tuesday to try to detain them but that the men had not been at home.

He also said that two of the 20 people detained since Monday had a history of collaboration with human rights organizations and pleaded for their release. One of them, Dr. Pedro Castillo, a physician, has been involved in work to halt the torture on detainees.

Mr. Castillo acknowledged that the Chilean Human Rights Commission processed and made complaints about violations of human rights, generally by Government forces. But he said it had tried to maintain correct relations with Government officials.

He repeated a statement issued earlier by the commission condemning the attempt on General Pinochet's life and said, "We are free of any imputation that might be made against us."

GATT TALKS

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I want to commend the administration for its forceful approach to the approaching GATT talks.

A new round of negotiations begins next week in Punta Del Esta, and the administration has announced its willingness to walk away from them if the United States is obstructed in its efforts to negotiate certain fundamental reforms: tougher protections for intellectual property; elimination of agricultural export subsidies; freer trade in services; improvements in the GATT dispute process; and assurances of unimpeded flows of investment.

The global trading system is a delicate arrangement, and it operates largely on the basis of mutual and voluntary cooperation. Abrupt and nationalistic actions on the part of a single country have the potential to produce chain reactions which can threaten not only the harmony of international trade relations but the underlying structure of the world economy.

In short, walking away from the trade talks would not, and should not, be taken lightly.

But I believe it fair to say that the administration would have much congressional support were it to make a carefully considered decision that the potential outcome of trade negotiations was not worth the effort and compromise that our participation may involve.

This would not be a happy event; indeed, it would be a source of great international discomfort. But a new round is not an object intrinsically to be desired; a new round must be a good round.

And so we applaud the administration for its courage in confronting the serious choices that are posed as we consider new negotiations; we urge the administration to weigh such choices carefully and solemnly, recognizing their full implications; and we join the administration in urging our trading partners to appreciate the gravity of these talks and the determination of the United States to pursue true and meaningful reform.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Morning business is closed.

The Senator from South Carolina is recognized.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now go into executive session in order to consider Executive Calendar No. 995, William H. Rehnquist, of Virginia, to be Chief Justice of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

□ 1200

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DENTON). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Is there objection to the Senator's request to go into executive session?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I know of no objection. I want to be sure the colleagues understand what is going on. I do not think there will be objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request to go into executive session to consider the Rehnquist nomination?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nomination will be stated.

NOMINATION OF WILLIAM H. REHNQUIST TO BE CHIEF JUSTICE OF THE UNITED STATES

The assistant legislative clerk read the nomination of William H. Rehnquist, of Virginia, to be Chief Justice of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I rise today to voice my strong support of Justice William H. Rehnquist, President Reagan's nominee to be Chief Justice of the United States.

Justice Rehnquist was born in Milwaukee, WI, and attended elementary and high schools in Shorewood, WI. He attended Kenyon College in Gambier, OH, for a short time and then enlisted in the U.S. Army in 1943. Following military service he attended Stanford University and was elected to the National Scholastic Honor Society, Phi Beta Kappa. He attended Harvard University receiving a master of arts degree in history. Justice Rehnquist then entered Stanford University Law School. He graduated first in his class and was a member of the board of editors of the Stanford Law Review. He was also elected to the order of the COIF, a national honor society. Following his graduation from law school, Justice Rehnquist served as a law clerk to U.S. Supreme Court Justice Robert H. Jackson from February 1952 until June 1953.

From 1953 to 1969 he was in the private practice of law in Phoenix, AZ. He practiced with the firm of Evans, Hull, Kitchel & Jenckes until 1955. He then became a partner in the firm of Ragan & Rehnquist. In 1957 he was a partner in the firm of Cunningham, Carson & Messenger, until joining the firm of Powers & Rehnquist as a partner in 1960. He practiced law in Phoenix until he became the Assistant Attorney General, Office of Legal Counsel, Department of Justice, in 1969. During his years of legal practice Justice Rehnquist served at various times as the president and member of the board of directors of the Maricopa County Bar Association. He was also chairman of the Arizona State Bar continuing legal education committee and a member of the National Conference of Commissioners of Uniform State Laws. He also served on the council of the administrative law section of the American Bar Association.

In 1971 he was nominated to be an Associate Justice of the U.S. Supreme Court and was confirmed by the full Senate in December of that year. Justice Rehnquist has served with distinction as an Associate Justice since that time.

The Judiciary Committee received the President's nomination of Justice William H. Rehnquist for the position of Chief Justice of the United States on June 20, 1986. In accordance with a committee agreement, the hearings on Justice Rehnquist's nomination commenced on July 29, 1986. Also by agreement the committee vote on the nomination took place on August 14, 1986.

The Judiciary Committee carefully and thoroughly scrutinized the nominee's qualifications, credentials and 15 years' experience as an Associate Justice of the U.S. Supreme Court. The hearings on Justice Rehnquist's nomination were held on July 29, 30, 31 and August 1, 1986. The 4 days of hearings lasted approximately 40 hours and during that time, the committee heard from more than 40 witnesses. The Rehnquist nomination is distinctive when comparing the interval between Senate receipt of the nomination and the start of the committee hearings. Thirty-nine days elapsed before the Rehnquist hearing started, which was more than with any other Supreme Court nominee during the period from 1961 until 1986.

THE ABA AND OTHER SUPPORT

The American Bar Association's standing committee on Federal judiciary, found Justice Rehnquist to be well qualified and informed the Judiciary Committee:

> The ABA committee unanimously has found that Justice Rehnquist meets the highest standards of professional competence, judicial temperament and integrity, is among the best available for appointment as Chief Justice of the United States, and is entitled to the committee's highest evaluation of the nominees to the Supreme Court—well qualified.

The extensive investigation by the American Bar Association committee provides a significant basis supporting the association's unanimous findings and its granting of the highest evaluation possible to the nominee. In their investigation, the ABA committee interviewed all of the current Associate Justices of the Supreme Court, and more than 180 Federal and State judges. As reported by the ABA, Justice Rehnquist enjoys the respect and esteem of his colleagues on the Supreme Court.

The ABA committee also interviewed approximately 65 practicing attorneys throughout the United States. These attorneys, including some who disagree with Justice Rehnquist politically and philosophically, spoke of warm admiration for him and described him as "very talented, . . . a bright and able man, . . . always well prepared, . . . one who brings out the best in people, and will facilitate the work of the court." Additionally, the ABA committee interviewed more than 50 deans and faculty members of a number of law schools across the country. The ABA stated that many of these individuals spoke highly of his writing and analytical ability and the vast majority had strong praise for his professional qualifications. Finally, the ABA committee had approximately 200 of Justice Rehnquist's opinions examined and it was concluded that his legal analysis and writing ability were of the "highest quality."

At the Judiciary Committee hearings a number of very prominent individuals testified on behalf of Justice Rehnquist and in addition a number of letters were received supporting Justice Rehnquist's nomination. Among the many individuals supporting Justice Rehnquist were: Judge Griffin Bell, former Attorney General during the Carter administration; Erwin N. Griswold, former Solicitor General under President Johnson; former Attorney General William French Smith; Dean Gerhard Casper of the University of Chicago Law School; and Rex Lee, former Solicitor General under President Reagan.

CONCLUSION

The Judiciary Committee has thoroughly reviewed all allegations, old and new, and has found nothing that would keep Justice Rehnquist from being elevated to the position of Chief Justice. The committee also had the responsibility to determine if Justice Rehnquist possesses the qualities required of a Supreme Court Justice; namely, unquestioned integrity, honesty, incorruptibility, fairness; courage—the strength to render decisions in accordance with the Constitution and the will of the people as expressed in the laws of Congress; compassion—which recognizes both the rights of the individual and the rights of society in the quest for equal justice under the law; proper judicial temperament—an understanding of, and appreciation for, the majesty of our system of government in its separation of powers between the Federal and State governments.

Based upon his responses to questions during the hearing, his outstanding qualifications and intellect, it was determined that Justice Rehnquist does possess these attributes and is overwhelmingly qualified to serve as Chief Justice of the United States.

I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of President Reagan's nomination of Justice Rehnquist to be Chief Justice of the United States.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I thank my colleague, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, Senator THURMOND, for yielding.

Mr. President, the debate that begins today marks the 18th time—only 18 times over the 200-year history of this Nation—that the U.S. Senate has considered the nomination of an individual to be Chief Justice of the United States. Only 15 of those men—and they have all been men—were confirmed and served in the high-ranking position. Today, we began what I hope will be a fruitful, a thorough, and a scholarly debate on the role of the Chief Justice and the fitness of Justice Rehnquist to serve in that role.

This should be a time of serious reflection by the Members of the U.S. Senate about the very nature of our constitutional system and the division of power among our three coequal branches of Government. I think it should be a time to consider the liberties and freedoms which the Constitution guarantees and for us to make clear to the American people who watch this and listen to this that we are cognizant of what the Constitution is about—that we understand fully why these liberties and guarantees are so much in hands of the members of the Supreme Court.

I think it should be a time also, Mr. President, to look a little bit into the future 10 and 20 years hence to contemplate the role of the Supreme Court of the United States of America, not only as it is constituted today but during the tenure of the next Chief Justice of the United States. It is a fact that the man before us and others who might come before us are men who have a good, long time left to serve their country if they are confirmed.

So, if we fail to look down the road the next 10 to 20 years, we will, in my view, be doing a disservice to the country and a disservice to the Court.

To contemplate the role of the Supreme Court in governing this diverse and fragmented society is one of the responsibility that we have.

If my colleagues undertake such a deliberative debate—as I fully expect they will with the leadership of Senator THURMOND and Senator HATCH, very strong and eloquent proponents of the nominee—I believe that if this debate is engaged, if we are able to make the arguments which I fully expect we will be able to, to deliberate on the subject of the role of the Court and the role of this individual within the Court, I believe my colleagues will come to the same conclusion that I have reached—that the nomination of Justice William Rehnquist to be Chief Justice of the United States should not be approved.

The hearings conducted by the Judiciary Committee, to which Senator THURMOND referred, delved into a number of very important issues regarding the personal background and the judicial philosophy of the nominee as well as exploring the significant role the Chief Justice plays in the conduct of justice in America.

Quite frankly, the Chief Justice of the United States of America is a metaphor for justice in America. There are those who will say—and my colleague from South Carolina has already said it and I expect to hear it time and again in the next several days, as we debate this nomination—there are those who will say that the hearings exhausted every possible avenue of objection, but I might suggest it is also possible to assert that the hearings raised more questions than were answered.

In many instances, the record, as we will hopefully demonstrate, remains incomplete or Justice Rehnquist's answers were not sufficiently forthcoming to satisfy the burden—and I emphasize "the burden"—the burden on every nominee to justify his or her confirmation.

We should set that straight. The burden is not on the U.S. Senate to suggest that someone not be the nominee, to prove they should not be the nominee. The burden is upon the nominee and the proponents of the nominee to demonstrate that they should be confirmed. Just as the burden is not upon the people of my district and my State to prove that I should or should not be the Senator; the burden is upon me to convince the people of my State that I should be the Senator.

We are talking about the second-most important person in America, heading one of the three coequal branches of the Government. And the burden is on the nominee to prove that he should be Chief Justice.

At the beginning of the Rehnquist hearings, I commented extensively on the historic role of the U.S. Senate in evaluating Supreme Court nominees. I think it bears repeating.

I am certain it will be argued, and argued repeatedly here today and tomorrow on the floor of the U.S. Senate, that the Senate has traditionally "gone along" with Presidential choices for the Supreme Court and that our advise and consent should be abbreviated.

I have no doubt this argument will be asserted with regard to a sitting Justice being elevated to the position of Chief Justice, as is the case with Justice Rehnquist.

As Prof. Larry Tribe of Harvard University noted in his recent book "God Save This Honorable Court," and as many others have noted—nothing could be further from the truth than to say the Senate has gone along with Presidential nominees to the Court.

Let us look at the record. The Senate has rejected more Presidential nominees for the Supreme Court than nominees to any other Federal office. About one out of every five persons nominated to serve on the Supreme Court of the United States from the beginning of our history as a constitutional nation, one out of five have been rejected by the U.S. Senate, Democrat as well as Republican, federalist, all.

So this notion that the Senate has historically gone along merely because the President has sent up a nominee is not historically accurate. Out of the 18 nominations for Chief Justice of the United States over our 200-year history, the Senate has rejected 4 of those, 4 out of 18. John Rutledge, George Williams, Caleb Cushing, and Abe Fortas all failed to win confirmation before the U.S. Senate.

Throughout our history it has been the Senate's solemn responsibility to assure that men and belatedly women picked by the President to sit on the Supreme Court are up to the task. The duty comes directly from the Constitution. Article II, section 2 requires that the Senate give its "advice and consent" before a Presidential nominee is approved to a position on the Court.

And this Senate prerogative was no constitutional afterthought by the framers. Here again I think a little history might be worthwhile. Initially, and almost to the end of the Constitutional Convention in Philadelphia, over 200 years ago, the framers lodged the power of appointing members of the Federal judiciary, including the Supreme Court, in the Senate alone.

Again, I will ask unanimous consent that at this point in the RECORD I can insert a longer explanation than the one I am about to give about how in fact the Constitutional Convention arrived at the conclusion that the President would be able to nominate.

I ask unanimous consent that be done.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHOOSING JUDGES: THE FRAMER'S INTENT

(By Prof. Walter Dellinger, Duke University School of Law)

President Reagan and Attorney General Meese, echoing a doctrine enunciated by President Nixon, have boldly suggested that the Senate is obliged to consent to the appointment of any judicial nominee who is not shown to be corrupt or professionally unqualified. They suggest that the President and the Attorney General may take a judicial prospect's philosophy into account, but that the Senate may not. Others contest this view and argue that the Senate, when it decides whether to consent to a nomination, is obligated to take into account the same range of considerations open to the President, and make its own independent determination of whether confirmation of a particular nominee is in the best interest of the country.

Hardly anyone has bothered to refer to the original understanding of the framers of the Constitution. This is a significant oversight, because the debates over the drafting of the Constitution tell us a great deal about the proper role of the Senate in the judicial selection process. Although it is difficult to discern the original understanding of a constitutional provision, the records of the Constitutional Convention speak to this particular question with unusual clarity. Both the text of the Appointments Clause of the Constitution and the debates over its adoption strongly suggest that the Senate was expected to play an active and independent role in determining who should sit on the nation's judiciary.

The Constitutional Convention met in Philadelphia from late May until mid-September of the fateful summer of 1787. Throughout its deliberations, the Convention contemplated that the national legislature, in some form or other, would play a very substantial role in the selection of federal judges. On May 29, 1787, the Convention began its work on the Constitution by taking up the Virginia Plan introduced by Governor Randolph. It provided "that a National Judiciary be established . . . to be chosen by the National Legislature." The executive was, under this plan, to have no role at all in the selection of judges.

When this provision came before the Convention on June 5, several members expressed concern that the whole legislature might be too numerous a body to select judges. James Wilson's alternative suggestion that the President be given power to choose judges found almost no support, however. Rutledge of South Carolina stated that he "was by no means disposed to grant so great a power to any single person." James Madison agreed that the legislature was too large a body, but stated that "he was not satisfied with referring the appointment to the Executive." He was "rather inclined to give it to the Senatorial branch" of the legislature, a group "sufficiently stable and independent" to provide "deliberate judgments."

One week later, on June 13, Madison rendered his inclination into a formal motion that the power of appointing judges be given exclusively to the Senate, rather than to the legislature as a whole. This motion was adopted "nem. con."—without any objection. On June 19, the Convention formally adopted, as its working draft, the Virginia Plan which thus provided that a "national Judiciary" be established, the "Judges of which to be appointed by the second Branch of the National Legislature."

July was spent reviewing every position of the draft. On the 18th, the Convention reconsidered and reaffirmed its earlier decision to grant the Senate the exclusive power of appointing Judges. James Wilson again moved "that the Judges be appointed by the Executive." His motion was defeated, six states to two, after delegates offered "solid reasons against leaving the appointment to the Executive" as Bedford of Delaware put it. Luther Martin of Maryland, stating that he "was strenuous for an appointment by the 2nd branch," argued that "being taken from all the States, [the Senate] would be best informed of character and most capable of making a fit choice." Sherman of Connecticut concurred, "adding that the Judges ought to be diffused, which would be more likely to be attended to by the 2d branch [the Senate], than by the Executive." A compromise proposal suggested by Ghorum of Massachusetts to provide for appointment by the executive "by and with the advice and consent" of the Senate failed on a tie vote, apparently without much discussion.

The issue was considered once again on July 21, and Convention once again reaffirmed exclusive Senate appointment of judges, and rejected executive appointment, this time by a vote of six states to three, after a debate in which George Mason attacked the idea of executive appointment as a "dangerous precedent. It might even give him an influence over the Judiciary department itself." As rephrased by the Committee on Detail, the provision in the draft Constitution read, "The Senate of the U.S. shall have power to . . . appoint. . . Judges of the Supreme Court." Thus the matter stood until the closing days of the Convention.

On September 4, less than two weeks before the Convention's work was done, a Committee of Five reported out several provisions on matters that had been postponed, including sections dealing with how the President should be chosen and how various officers should be appointed. The Committee's draft provided for the first time that the President should have any role at all in the selection of judges: "The President shall nominate and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate shall appoint judges of the Supreme Court." Giving the President the power to nominate judges was not seen as ousting the Senate from a central role: Governeur Morris of Pennsylvania paraphrased the new provision as one giving to the Senate the power "to appoint Judges nominated to them by the President." With little discussion, and without dissent, the Convention adopted this reworked provision giving the President the power, with the advice of the Senate, to nominate judges, and the power, with the consent of the Senate, to appoint. The Convention having repeatedly and decisively rejected the idea that the President should have the exclusive power to select judges could not possibly have intended to reduce the Senate to a ministerial role.

President Nixon, in the course of his unsuccessful 1970 effort to persuade the Senate to confirm G. Harrold Carswell, asserted the doctrine that the President is "the one person entrusted by the Constitution with the power of appointment" and that his will should not be "frustrated by those who wish to substitute their own philosophy or subjective judgment. This erroneous notion has now been echoed by President Reagan's assertion that the President has the "right" to "choose Federal judges who share his judicial philosophy" and that the Senate is somehow bound to confirm these choices "so long as they are qualified by character and competence." These statements are simply inconsistent with both the text and the original intent of the Appointments Clause. The reasons given by delegates to the Constitutional Convention for making the selection of judges a joint decision of the President and the Senate are as cogent today as they were in 1787. The framers objected to giving the power of appointment to a "single individual" and understood that the goal of having a diverse judiciary would be advanced by having the Senate, which contains members from every state, play a substantial role in determining who should sit on the bench.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, our Founding Fathers in the beginning said that the only way in which we are going to agree on putting someone on the Federal court or on the Supreme Court is if the Senate picks, names, nominates and votes on the process. The President was not even considered part of the process in the first several plans that were offered.

It was only during the last days of 1787 in the convention, as part of a very complex compromise, was the power to suggest, the power to appoint Supreme Court Justices divided between the President and the U.S. Senate.

Doubts about the capability or character of a nominee in the past have resulted in Senate rejections of the Court nominee sent up by the President. The nominations of Clement Haynsworth and Harold Carswell were rejected for those reasons along with many others, but historically these have not been the sole basis for the Senate's opposition to a Presidential choice. From the fight over the Rutledge nomination, which centered on his speeches against the then controversial Jay Treaty, through the more contemporary struggles over the nominations of Louis Brandeis, Judge John Parker, and Justice Abe Fortas, the Senate often considered the nominees' judicial philosophy and vision of the Constitution as part of what they had the right to consider.

I would like to put another notion to rest. That is the idea that the U.S. Senate constitutionally is precluded from considering anything other than whether the nominee is intellectually capable, competent as a jurist—by the way, you need not be a lawyer or a judge to be on the Supreme Court under the Constitution—and whether or not he or she has committed a crime of moral turpitude. All constitutional scholars agree that the Senate may go beyond this in considing the fitness of a nominee. I might note parenthetically we do not have to get to that in my view on this man to conclude that he should not be Chief Justice. But it is fully within the constitutional authority of the U.S. Senate to do so.

One need not go back to the 1930's to witness Senate leaders scrutinizing the judicial views of a Supreme Court nominee. During hearings on the last Chief Justiceship that was not confirmed—Abe Fortas' nomination—our distinguished Judiciary Committee chairman, Senator STROM THURMOND, stated, and I quote:

It is my contention that the Supreme Court has assumed such a powerful role as a policymaker that the Senate must necessarily be concerned with the views of propsective Justices or Chief Justices as they relate to broad issues confronting the American people, and the role of the Court in dealing with these issues.

As the loyal opposition, the Democrats owe this country no less now than Senator THURMOND and his colleagues from the other side of the aisle offered at that time. And they were right. These hearings should meet the same standard for completeness and hard scrutiny that Senator THURMOND expressed in those words 18 years ago.

Having set forth general parameters of our inquiry, let me turn now to specific topics considered in the conclusions that I have drawn and tried to do them in summary because I will be speaking to each of these at some length before the debate is over.

From my perspective, three areas of questioning directly relate to the ability of Justice Rehnquist to serve as Chief Justice. I should say there is no doubt about the legal ability or professional competence of the nominee, and that is not what these reservations are about. Rather my concerns relate to the unique symbolic role which the Chief Justice plays in our scheme of constitutional government.

The Chief Justice not only serves longer than any President, but he and his colleagues exercise power limited only by their consciences and principles. The Chief stands as a metaphor for justice in our society more than any other individual, including the President of the United States of America, or any U.S. Senator or Congressman. The Chief symbolizes the guarantee of equal protection under law, "equal justice under the law," for all Americans. And that is not just an arcane legalism. It is the embodiment of the fundamental purpose of our entire judicial system.

My first concern is whether Justice Rehnquist can serve effectively as a leader of the Court, and to my mind, this does not mean whether or not he can be an effective administrator, or whether or not he will do that expeditiously.

Two elements comprise the quality of leadership that I think is necessary to be Chief Justice of the United States. One, a Chief Justice must exhibit the capability and willingness to work for and forge a consensus for unanimous opinions in watershed cases, cases where if there is not a unanimous decision there would be serious problems in this Nation. Brown versus The Board of Education, the desegregation case, said separate but equal is no longer equal, no longer constitutional. Had that been a split court does anyone in this chamber doubt it would have been considerably more difficult, and possibly considerable bloodshed in this land, to bring about the change? Does anyone doubt that in the Nixon tapes case had the court not been unanimous the President, Richard M. Nixon, might have considered provoking a constitutional crisis rather than step down in shame as he did?

Second, the Chief Justice must demonstrate the flexibility and openmindedness to put aside his own philosophical or legal views when consensus on the Court is required even if he disagrees with the majority's holding. It is essentially two sides of the same coin requiring sensitivity to the great legal and social issues of our day.

Two of Justice Rehnquist's predecessors exemplify this kind of leadership. In his book, "Simple Justice," Richard Kluger detailed a careful and deliberate process by which Chief Justice Earl Warren sought to forge that unanimous opinion I referred to earlier, Brown versus The Board of Education.

Recognizing that only a unanimous decision would insure compliance with the Court's ruling and public respect for the law, he worked relentlessly to achieve a consensus on the Court. Knowing that Justice Stanley Reed, a southerner, was the last hold-out, Warren met privately with him many times, prevailing upon him—to his great credit, I might add—to make his decision in the best interests of the country. And that is what Reed did.

Similarly, Chief Justice Burger, in the Nixon tapes case, put aside his own views in the interests of a unanimous ruling requiring the President to turn over the Watergate tapes. It was reported in "The Brethern," a widely read book about the workings of the Supreme Court, that Chief Justice Burger originally intended to write an opinion which, although mandating the release of the tapes, would have provided a national security exception which might have allowed the President to withhold significant materials. However, the Chief Justice was convinced by his colleagues that such an approach might obstruct the legal process and he joined in and authored an unqualified unanimous opinion.

Justice Rehnquist's response to questions I asked him about the consensus-building role of the Chief Justice was quite unsettling. With regard to the Brown case, I asked whether he would have done what Chief Justice Warren had done. Let me cite his answer:

Certainly, from the point of view of hindsight, realizing the importance of Brown, the importance of unanimity, one would like to say in answer to the question: "Yes, of course I would." and I think I can probably answer the same way, that if I had seen the thing, seen the case the way the Chief Justice did, and the need for unanimity, I certainly would have tried to persuade a last dissenting colleague that it would be better for the country to make it unanimous. (Emphasis added)

It became clear as I continued questioning that Justice Rehnquist did not then and would not now see the case the way Chief Justice Warren did. To lead the Court in this manner requires a broad vision of the major social and legal issue of the day.

Let me go back to his statement. He points out or states, "From the point of view of hindsight, realizing the importance of Brown, the importance of unanimity."

It was important that someone have the sensitivity to understand the importance of Brown, the importance of unanimity.

It seems to me, based on other answers, Justice Rehnquist is not such a person to recognize the sensitivity of the consequences of the Court's decision. Whether a ruling will provoke resentment and resistance or respect and compliance cannot be disregarded. There is nothing in his record as a sitting Justice, nor does the hearing record, indicate to me that Justice Rehnquist would be willing or capable or exercising this kind of leadership.

Another disappointing answer from my perspective came when I asked Justice Rehnquist about his dissenting opinions. Let me quote the question and the answer:

Q. Do you believe, had you been Chief, would there have been the necessity in any of your 8-1 decisions where you were the dissent that you think you could have changed? I mean, can you imagine having changed? Do any of those decisions rise to that level?

A. I do not have those readily before me. And I am trying to think whether any one of them might. My feeling is no. (Emphasis added)

Justice Rehnquist should perhaps have heeded the advice of his mentor, the late Justice Robert Jackson. From an address written in 1955, it is clear that Justice Jackson might not have approved of his law clerk's proliferation of dissenting opinions. Said Justice Jackson:

The right of dissent is a valuable one. Wisely used on well-chosen occasions, it has been of great service to the profession and to the law. But there is nothing good, for either the court or the dissenter, in dissenting per se. Each dissenting opinion is a confession of failure to convince the writer's colleagues, and the true test of a judge is his influence in leading, not in opposing his court.

I also explored with Justice Rehnquist his views on the 14th amendment, especially the distinction which becomes apparent from a reading of his opinions with regard to his treatment of race and gender cases. It became evident that the nominee regards the 14th amendment, the most basic affirmation of equal treatment under the law, as something different for blacks than for women and other minorities.

That is not my perception. He states it is a different test, as, I might add, others have.

This stems from his rigid view of the "original intent" of the amendment as directed toward the abolition of slavery.

He says "That is why it was written, so when you look at that amendment, you have to look at it in the context of the abolition of slavery." When they wrote it, they wrote it to stop slavery and here we are. "You are coming before the court, plaintiff, and saying women are not being treated well. Obviously, the framers were not thinking of women when they wrote that clause. Therefore, you do not treat the inequality of women in society, even when proven beyond a reasonable doubt, the same way you treat inequality to blacks because, obviously, when they wrote the 14th amendment they were only thinking of blacks in slavery."

That is what he means by original intent.

Since women and other minorities were not considered to be part of the Civil War amendments—the 14th amendment among them—they should not enjoy the same guarantees of equal protection that he would extend to blacks. Apparently, under Justice Rehnquist's view of the Constitution, women and corporations are to be treated similarly—that is, laws are to be challenged under what we call a rational basis test rather than the higher standard of "strict scrutiny," which I will talk some more about as the debate continues. Unfortunately, almost every act of the legislature which discriminates on the basis of sex, whether at the State or Federal level, which Justice Rehnquist has had an occasion to examine, meets his test of a rationality.

Almost every time there is a law on the books that discriminates against women, where clearly if that law were one on the books about blacks, it would be clearly unconstitutional because it would have to meet a test of strict scrutiny. But when the law is about women, he says, "You do not have to meet that test. You just have to find out whether there is a rational basis for it, any at all."

He always finds that there is, I might add, a rational basis for the discrimination. Whereas you cannot say, "By the way, is there a rational basis in the law that says blacks cannot do something that whites can do?" he says, "Oh, no," and he is right. The 14th amendment says you do not have to apply that statute. It does not matter whether it is rational or not. It matters whether it was intended to discriminate against blacks.

That is the view of the 14th amendment that some hold. But I do not. I suggest that Justice Rehnquist, when you look at his decisions—and he is not the only one who has ever ruled this way—he seems always to find that there is a rational basis for discriminating against women where it is challenged.

If the Chief Justice stands as a metaphor for justice in our society, as I suggested earlier, a nominee must, to my mind, exhibit a certain sensitivity to justice in his rulings. He may be technically correct; it may be an intellectually defensible argument; but in fact I think it sends a signal to 51 percent of our population that although, under arcane jurisprudential principles, you can make a distinction. It is very hard to make that decision when you are the person to whom 99 percent of the American people look and say, "This is my recourse to justice, the Chief Justice of the U.S. Supreme Court."

The mere fact that a Justice would be able to make an argument that was legally defensible, it seems to me there is a different standard that we should have—and have had, I might add—for a Chief Justice on account of the symbolic role of the Chief Justice.

Justice Rehnquist's dissent in the Bob Jones University case stands out as a disturbing example of his insensitivity and a startling example of his intellectual creativity. Many of you will recall that that case involved a determination of whether or not the Internal Revenue Service was empowered to promulgate regulations withholding tax exempt status from private schools that discriminated on the basis of race.

To put it in common language, can you say blacks are inferior and treat them differently and still be tax exempt? Can you do that? Well, Justice Rehnquist said you can. He said in an 8-to-1 decision, his being the only dissent—again intellectually defensible but, in fact, symbolically tragic—he said, "Yes, you can." The Court ruled 8 to 1, Justice Rehnquist filing the sole dissent, that the IRS did have the authority to issue the regulations in question. Justice Rehnquist dissented on the grounds that only Congress, not an administrative agency, was constitutionally empowered to pass legislation withholding such tax-exempt status.

Mr. President, it is not the legal grounds of Justice Rehnquist's dissent that bothers me. While I might strongly disagree, the rationale, as I said earlier, is intellectually defensible. But Justice Rehnquist was incapable of joining or in any way associating himself with the findings of Chief Justice Burger, who wrote an impassioned opinion, regarding the importance of a national policy against racial discrimination in education.

He comments that he does not disagree with the Court's finding that there is a strong national policy in this country opposed to racial discrimination, but he did not indicate that he personally agreed with that policy.

Go back to the person he always talks about, Justice Jackson. Let me reread that quote, because I think it is important here, at least to help my colleagues understand why I feel so strongly about this. Justice Jackson speaking:

> The right to dissent is a valuable one. Wisely used on well-chosen occasions—

He is talking about the right to dissent of a Justice—

> it has been of great service to the profession and to the law. But there is nothing good, for either the Court or the dissenter, in dissenting per se. Each dissenting opinion is a confession of the failure to convince the writer's colleagues, and the true test of the judge is his influence and leading, not in opposing, his court.

Let me ask why, on such a fundamental issue as whether or not a university can say blacks are going to be treated at this university different than whites if they are admitted, why could he not say at least, "This is a tragic commentary on American education; it should be stopped and," as they often do, "I urge Congress to remedy it forthwith? But, unfortunately, in my interpretation of the law, I cannot bring myself to join on intellectual grounds, but it grieves me to do so."

He does that in other places.

Look, Mr. President. When we talk about the Chief Justice, again, go back to my concern. The Chief Justice is a metaphor for justice. People look to him. My daughter, your daughter, your wife, your female staff person, your black friend, you, the black American. You say, "I know one thing for sure: the Supreme Court is with me." And the Supreme Court is the Chief Justice. Ninety percent of Americans cannot name one person beyond the Chief Justice. And we have a Chief Justice nominee who does not seem to understand that.

I believe that Justice Rehnquist's incapability of joining or associating himself with any of those findings of Justice Burger is a window into his soul as well as to his mind. It is just this kind of action, both during his tenure on the Court and during his confirmation hearings, that led me to the conclusion that he does not have an open mind with regard to racial and gender discrimination cases. He has an agile mind but not an open mind.

I am disturbed about how he approaches these cases as an Associate Justice, but I am deeply disturbed about how he will approach these cases as Chief Justice of the United States. For, as I indicated, the Chief Justice of the United States reflects more on the office as a symbol of justice than any other person in our society.

As the debate proceeds, I intend to discuss at length, along with many of my other colleagues, the third component of the role of the Chief Justice, that he or she be perceived by the American people as candid and forthright.

For if you cannot point to the Chief Justice, who is in office for life, who is the most important person in our judicial system, as being the epitome of candor and honesty, to whom, in God's name, do you point? What does it say if a significant portion of the American people or a significant number of our colleagues conclude that that cannot be said of a Chief Justice? What does it say for our system? What does it say for a branch of Government whose ability to function depends more upon its moral suasion than anything else, including its intellectual persuasion?

What is it that makes us all go along with a Supreme Court ruling? Is it that you, the American people, say, "Now, I have examined the rationale of that case and I have concluded, notwithstanding the fact that it does not seem right to me, that under legal precedents and English jurisprudential initiatives of the past, this is the right thing to do"?

That is not what we say.

□ 1250

We say, "They are fair women and men. I trust their instincts. They are smart. They are honorable. And although it does not feel good to me, I guess they are right."

That is what we say. We do not get a chance to go throw them out of office and they do not get a chance to send an army or the police to enforce their rulings.

That is why it is so important that when we look at a Chief Justice, we say, "I believe her," or "I believe him."

Ladies and gentlemen, my colleagues, I think our people expect this individual, the Chief Justice, above all others to exemplify the characteristics of candor and forthrightness. Unfortunately, and I will speak at length to this later, as I know my colleagues will, Justice Rehnquist's performance in the confirmation hearing did anything but enforce this perception. Whether it was his election day activities prior to assuming the bench or his clerkship for the late Justice Jackson and his views about the most significant desegregation case in the history of America, Brown versus Board of Education, or his participation in the Laird versus Tatum case—that is the case where he is alleged to have been involved as a member of the administration and then as a number of the Court ruled on a challenge to the policy he developed, whatever it is, any one of those areas, I believe and I hope to demonstrate that his record, his answers to our legitimate questions are at best incomplete, in all cases vague, in some cases misleading, and in some cases very difficult to believe.

For these reasons, I intend to vote against the nomination of William Rehnquist to be the 16th Chief Justice of the U.S. Supreme Court. I am well aware that he will remain on the Court, no matter what the outcome of this debate, but I believe the Nation will be better served and the causes of justice will be better served and the symbol of justice will be better served if he remains one among nine rather than the first among equals, which the Chief Justice of the United States is. I yield to my colleague from Utah. I thank my colleagues.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, at the outset of this debate I would like to note that many of Justice Rehnquist's opponents have left no stone unturned in this particular debate. During the Judiciary Committee hearings we inspected 20-year-old records from the Office of Legal Counsel; we scrutinized memos written 34 years ago by a young law clerk; we read FBI reports, some 20 years old, some 20 minutes old; we received reports from independent medical experts; we heard from over 50 witnesses and questioned them to our hearts' content. And much of that can be summarized as much ado about very little. It shows little more than honest people can disagree with Justice Rehnquist on his reading of the law. I wish that we would say it forthrightly. Instead, we hear personal attacks, misleading criticism, and I think political remonstrations. But personal attacks, threats of filibuster and prolonged debate and unseemly innuendo only demean this proceeding. They are irrelevant to our purpose and I hope we will see none of that. If we do, those who do it are going to be sorry for having done so. I certainly will be sorry that they have done so.

Later in this debate I will comment further on the proper standard for confirmations. At this point, however, I do want to ensure that no misleading impressions are left by my distinguished colleague from Delaware. And what I would like to do is talk about some of the comments he has quoted from Larry Tribe from the Harvard Law School.

The Senate has not ignored the dangers that politicization poses to the integrity of the Court and the public selection processes. Since 1894, it has failed to confirm only four nominees while considering the choices of Presidents as widely divergent in political ideology as Franklin Roosevelt, Dwight Eisenhower, Lyndon Johnson, and Gerald Ford. Although Mr. Tribe's book, "Save This Court," attempts to argue that the Senate has traditionally questioned the nominees on political grounds, it offers no explanation for the modern Senate's consistent approval of 51 Justices on the basis of merit rather than on the basis of politics. Examination of that record discloses some important considerations militating against using political criteria in the confirmation process.

Mr. President, I hope that this debate will be a high-level debate and we can talk about the things that are really involved here and that we not malign a man who has served this country well for 15 years as a Justice on the Supreme Court.

Frankly, it is a great privilege to participate in the confirmation of a Chief Justice of the Supreme Court. This is an event which has occurred only 16 times in 199 years of free government under the Constitution. Moreover, to me—and I think to a majority of Senators—it is a honor to support the President's choice of Mr. William Hubbs Rehnquist, who was confirmed as the 100th Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States more than 15 years ago, to lead the judicial branch into the second century of American freedom.

As the Nation's third Chief Justice declared in Marbury versus Madison, "Ours is a government of laws, and not of men." This is the genius of the Constitution—that Americans do not owe their highest legal allegiance to any person, no matter how trusted and trustworthy, but to the concept of liberty embodied in law. Chief Justice John Marshall, in that same pivotal case, emphasized the vital mission of the Judiciary within this inspired constitutional scheme with the words: "It is emphatically the province and duty of the Judicial Department to say what the law is." For over 15 years, Justice Rehnquist has earned a reputation as a leader amongst leaders on the nine-member Court. He knows better than perhaps anyone in the Nation the responsibility of serving as a "keeper of the contract," a protector of the agreement between the Government and the governed. He, better than perhaps anyone in the Nation, can impart that vision in his fellow Federal judges throughout the Federal Judiciary.

QUALIFICATIONS

He already has the trust and respect of his peers and the rest of the bench and bar. This was the unmistakable message delivered by the American Bar Association which assesses the qualifications of candidates for judicial office. The ABA interviewed 180 Federal and State judges, including all members of the current Supreme Court, 50 law deans and professors, and 65 leading attorneys before giving Justice Rehnquist their highest possible rating. The ABA stated to Chairman THURMOND and the rest of us on the Judiciary Committee:

> The Committee on the Federal Judiciary unanimously has found that Justice Rehnquist meets the highest standards of professional competence, judicial temperament and integrity, is among the best available for appointment as Chief Justice of the United States.

Thus, the Judiciary Committee's approval for this nomination, by the wide margin of 13–5 after enormous efforts to discredit his outstanding reputation, is shared by the largest organization of lawyers and judges in the Nation. The ABA approval, however, was unanimous. It is also significant that the ABA called Justice Rehnquist "among the best available."

Leaving no stone unturned, the ABA Committee also reviewed 200 of Justice Rehnquist's written opinions. This led to their conclusion that his legal analysis and writing skills are of the "highest quality." In other words, after a thorough investigation, the American Bar Association Committee unanimously voiced its high regard for Justice Rehnquist and its approval for his qualifications and ability to serve as Chief Justice.

This nomination is also supported by many important leaders in the legal community who do not always share Justice Rehnquist's conclusions on various questions of law. At the top of this list is Associate Justice William Brennan who feels that Justice Rehnquist will make a "splendid Chief Justice." This candid statement of approval for President Reagan's choice for Chief Justice came in an interview in the Legal Times. It is a high tribute to Justice Rehnquist from a highly respected fellow Justice who is known for a different judicial philosophy.

Many other eminent legal scholars also have come forward to voice their high regard for Justice Rehnquist. This includes many who would not necessarily agree with him on many legal issues. For instance, Griffin Bell, President Carter's Attorney General, testified that Justice Rehnquist "would serve our Supreme Court and our country well" as Chief Justice. Erwin Griswold, President Johnson's Solicitor General, praised Justice Rehnquist for his "important contributions to our constitutional and other law" and endorsed his nomination. These are only a couple examples among many.

Justice Rehnquist is not only remarkably prepared and qualified to assume the leadership of the Federal Judiciary today, but was remarkably prepared and qualified to serve on the Supreme Court in 1971. He had received a M.A. from Harvard, scored a 99.6 out of 100 on the law school aptitude test, and graduated first in his 1952 law school class. A classmate, Sandra Day, now Associate Justice O'Connor, recalls that William Rehnquist was "head and shoulders above all the rest of us in terms of sheer talent and ability." Moreover he won a coveted Supreme Court clerkship and served as an Assistant Attorney General before his appointment to the high Court.

Since that time, Justice Rehnquist has proven a match for the awesome trust placed in him by the Presidency, the Senate, and the people of the United States. A 1985 New York Times article states that "Rehnquist stands out" from amongst his colleagues on the Court. Esteemed University of Virginia law professor, A.E. "Dick" Howard, commented well over a year ago that "Justice Rehnquist has a claim to the leadership role on the Court." Professor Howard also notes in a recent ABA journal that "Perhaps no Justice at the Court generates more genuine warmth and regard among both his colleagues and others who work at the Court."

President Reagan is to be commended for recognizing these marvelous qualities in Justice Rehnquist and appointing him to become the 16th Chief Justice of the United States. Perhaps no other individual today would more closely approximate the character and ability of former Chief Justices like John Marshall, Salmon Chase, William H. Taft, Charles Evans Hughes, and Warren Burger.

CONCLUSION

The importance of this proceeding is illustrated by the observation of Alexis de Tocqueville that "Scarcely any political question arises in the United States that is not resolved, sooner or later, into a judicial question." I would only add that in this era when many Supreme Court pronouncements are debated in Congress that scarcely any legal question arises that is not soon a political question. The legal history of this Nation, the daily lives of its citizens, and the future agenda of both Congress and the Court may well be shaped by today's events.

The Supreme Court will inevitably be ensnarled in the great questions of our generation. Indeed Justice Holmes noted that the only peace found at the Court is the uneasy stillness found at the eye of a hurricane. I am grateful that President Reagan has chosen an individual of the quality of Justice Rehnquist to guide the Court through coming storms.

(Mrs. KASSEBAUM assumed the chair.)

Madam President, I have been interested in some of the comments today—disagreements with this case or that case, or with his view on civil rights or with his view on women's rights, and so forth. We have had, right at the outset, an attempt to label Justice Rehnquist as "extreme."

The hearings showed who the extremists really are, and they certainly do not embrace Justice Rehnquist. As a matter of fact, he has written a majority of the majority opinions on the Court in the last two terms of the Court. That is anything but extreme.

The problem with his opponents is that they have controlled Congress for 51 of the last 53 years, during which time we have run into a lot of difficulties, and they see all of a sudden a man with whom they disagree. They have been used to having this power; they have been used to not sharing it; they have been used to not having people like Justice Rehnquist serve. Frankly, it is hard for them.

With regard to women's issues, let me say that they can try all they want to paint him as an extremist, but I think the tar is blown right back into their faces. They tried to paint him as not being sensitive to women's rights and that is not accurate.

Once again, I found 27 cases in which he had voted for the interests of women and minorities. I have to admit that there will be differences on how far he should have gone, how far he did not go, but there are always certain differences.

This is a particularly erroneous charge in light of the Meritor Bank case, which said that employers can be held for sexual harassment in the workplace. This was the most significant women's rights case in the last term. And who wrote that opinion? None other than Mr. Justice Rehnquist.

In the tarring, I wonder why that case has not been mentioned by the other side. It was the most significant women's rights case in the last term of the Court. Those who make these accusations seem to forget that Justice Rehnquist authored this landmark opinion. This is hardly the record of a judge who ignores the fair assertion of women's rights.

In the most important women's rights case in the 1984 term, the Jaycees case, Justice Rehnquist found that an all-male organization may be compelled to accept women.

□ 1310

That same year in the Hishon case he concluded that cries against women in admission to law firm partnerships justify a claim under title VII, a widely criticized case by certain elements of our society who themselves are sincere, educated, highly intellectual, and who disagreed with Mr. Justice Rehnquist in that landmark decision for women's rights.

In the 1979 Cannon versus University of Chicago case, Justice Rehnquist gave title IX a very broad reading to provide an implied cause of action. Justices White, Powell, and Blackmun dissented and would have denied the implied cause of action in that case.

No one is criticizing them. They were sincere. They knew that they believed in what they were doing. But he happened to be on the side of women's rights in that case, something that his opponents on the Judiciary Committee have continually ignored.

An analysis of the 20 leading civil rights cases of 1986 demonstrates that Mr. Justice Rehnquist is clearly in the mainstream of the Court when it comes to protecting minority interests. In these 20 civil rights cases, Justice Rehnquist voted with the majority 14 times for a 70-percent mainstream rating which is identical to the mainstream ratings of Justice Blackmun and Chief Justice Burger. The highest mainstream rating goes to Mr. Justice Powell who voted with the majority 90 percent of the time in civil rights cases. Several Justices, by the way, have lower mainstream ratings in regard to these issues than Mr. Justice Rehnquist.

What it comes down to is that certain members of the Senate Judiciary Committee cannot stand the fact that President Reagan has appointed Justice Rehnquist to become Chief Justice of the U.S. Supreme Court, why? Because they do differ ideologically with both President Reagan and Mr. Justice Rehnquist. Actually ideology should play a very limited role. However, a judge should be rejected if he believes in blatant segregation. But no one in his right mind, no one who understands, no one who reads these opinions, no one who looked at the 15-year history, no one who is fair will try to make that type of assertion unless they are trying to make political points.

Mr. Justice Rehnquist's nomination is not going to be destroyed by these political points. But I suspect that there is a desire on the part of some to tar his reputation so bad that no matter what opinions he writes in the opinion they will be criticized by certain segments of our society who always criticize those who are not on the left side of the political spectrum.

Mr. President, Justice Rehnquist clearly, like President Reagan, is not on the left side of the political spectrum of our country. He is on the right side. I will say that term "right" means more than just one connotation.

You cannot write the majority of the majority opinions for the last two terms and be outside the mainstream.

I have seen major journalists in this country try to distort his record. That is shocking to me. I have not seen major Supreme Court journalists who really understand what they are doing distort his record. Maybe it can be explained away in the explanation that many of those who have distorted his record just plain do not understand the Supreme Court, do not understand the law, do not understand the widely disparate viewpoints in the law and are just advocating again their own ideological makeup.

But some of it is a little more than vicious. I suspect the purpose now is not to defeat his nomination because that is not going to occur. The purpose now is to try to smear his reputation, at least by some, not by all. There is a sincere belief on the part of a number of our Senators that they would prefer to have someone different than Mr. Justice Rehnquist. There are many who will vote for him, not many, but a number who will vote for him who would prefer probably a Justice from the left to a Justice from the right of center. There are many in this country who might feel otherwise. But there are millions who believe that this President has the right to this nomination. This man has a right to be there. He has been on the Court 15 years. He has the support of all his colleagues. He has an eminent record, is considered the leading intellectual on the U.S. Supreme Court today among a class of intellectuals who are very seldom duplicated and have been very seldom duplicated in the history of our country.

I hope that our colleagues will be fair in this debate because it is really important. It is important that we do not tar the reputation of a man who has had such a public service record. I will be doing my best to make sure that he is not tarred here. If you want to talk cases we will talk about cases. If you want to talk about ideology we will talk about ideology. If you want to talk about the merits of certain things we will talk about that.

In considering this nominee, it is very important that we accord him the respect that his present position deserves.

I have to admit one of the low points to me of the hearings was people being brought in for something that happened 24 years ago and remembering details like none of us would ever remember, and others brought in who disputed those details, and the readiness on the part of some of our Senators to immediately presume the worst rather than giving the benefit of the doubt.

I do not mean to malign any Senators or impugn their motives or find fault with anyone, but I thought there were some pretty low points in the Senate hearings.

I hope that this debate will be an elevated one that befits the U.S. Supreme Court and the nomination of the Chief Justice. I hope that we can talk about the merits and not about just red herrings as were talked about in the committee.

I hope that we will somehow look at that 15-year record of service, the esteem his fellow colleagues have for him, and if there is a question, resolve it by giving the benefit of the doubt to this wonderful man.

We have people accuse him of shoving people in voting lines. There is no one who knows Bill Rehnquist, not anyone, who would ever believe that. He is one of the most quiet, unassuming, unobtrusive people you will ever meet. He has been that way, as far as I can ascertain, all of his life.

We have people arguing about ethics. Again, assuming all the worst and never giving the benefit of the doubt, I wonder if ideology has not played a tremendous role in all of this.

If Justice Rehnquist wrote a memorandum where he pointed out the difficulties of the equal rights amendment, he is joined by literally hundreds of intellectuals who have drafted similar memorandums. It has been one of the most hotly debated issues for the last 14 years.

The fact that we differ sometimes on legal matters is really kind of insignificant and inconsequential. We are going to have a difference. We differ in the Senate. We differ among ourselves. And to impugn a person because he differs with you ideologically is really stooping too low.

It is fair to point out you are different, fair to point out that you believe one way rather than the other, fair to point out that you wish he had a different opinion, but it is really something to make that the sole determining factor as to whether or not you vote for or against a U.S. Supreme Court Chief Justice.

Madam President, I am grateful to have this opportunity to participate in this debate. I look forward to it. It should be a stimulating one.

Thank you.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

□ 1320

Mr. KENNEDY. Madam President, this vote is one of the most important that any of us will ever cast. The Chief Justice of the United States is more than just first among equals on the Supreme Court. He symbolizes the rule of law in our society. He speaks for the aspirations and beliefs of America as a nation.

The Senate is not a rubber stamp for the nomination of any Federal judge, let alone the most important judge of all, the Chief Justice of the Nation. The framers of the Constitution envisioned a major role for the Senate in the selection of judges. The Virginia plan, the original blueprint for the Constitution, gave the legislature sole authority for appointment of members of the judiciary. James Madison favored the selection of judges by the Senate. The provision ultimately adopted in the Constitution was a compromise described as giving the Senate the power "to appoint judges nominated to them by the President."

The Senate, therefore, has its own constitutional responsibility to scrutinize judicial nominees with special care, and the highest scrutiny should be reserved for the person nominated to be Chief Justice of the United States.

It is no accident that the Constitution speaks, not of the "Chief Justice of the Supreme Court," but of the "Chief Justice of the United States." In this sense, the Chief Justice is the ultimate trustee of American liberty; when Congresses and Presidents go wrong under the Constitution, it is the responsibility of the Supreme Court to set them right. Among members of the Court, the Chief Justice is chiefly responsible for ensuring that the Court faithfully meets this fundamental responsibility.

Presidents and Congresses come and go, but Chief Justices are for life. In the 200 years of our history, there have been only 15 Chief Justices. The best of them, the greatest of them, have been those who applied the fundamental values of the Constitution fairly and generously to the changing spirit of their times.

With his famous dictum, "We must never forget that it is a constitution we are expounding," John Marshall shaped the Court in the early years and laid the groundwork for America to become a nation. Roger Taney failed the test and helped put the country on the path to Civil War. Charles Evans Hughes helped guide the country safely through its severest domestic test of modern times—the upheaval of the Great Depression. In recent times, Earl Warren understood the central role of the Bill of Rights and its protections for the individual and helped guarantee that the civil rights revolution would pursue a peaceful path.

Two hundred years of history have assigned the Chief Justice a place in the affairs of our Nation not given to any other judge or justice. His commitment to equal justice under law is particularly important because the Court is the last refuge for racial minorities, those with unpopular views, and others outside the corridors of power who cannot look to the majority in society for protection of their rights.

Justice Rehnquist is not qualified to discharge this preeminent responsibility. His statements and actions throughout his career shed significant doubt on his commitment to equal justice under law, his adherence to ethical standards, and his credibility. His record on the Supreme Court places him outside the mainstream of American jurisprudence.

Near the end of the committee's examination of Mr. Rehnquist in 1971, we received allegations that Mr. Rehnquist had challenged minority voters in Phoenix in the early 1960's. We were unable to investigate those allegations completely in 1971. After the committee had reported Mr. Rehnquist's nomination in 1971, the infamous school segregation memo surfaced. Mr. Rehnquist denied in writing that the memo supporting school segregation stated his views, but was never cross examined on this issue.

We have now had the opportunity to look more thoroughly into these and other matters. Based on the current record, the Senate would probably reject Mr. Rehnquist if he were before us now as a first-time nominee to the Supreme Court. And he certainly does not deserve to be rewarded for concealing those transgressions in the past by elevating him now to be Chief Justice. I have heard the argument that refusing to approve this nomination will reflect adversely on Justice Rehnquist and therefore on the Court. Mr. Rehnquist should have been rejected in 1971. We should not compound that error by promoting him in 1986.

The choice is not whether to make Justice Rehnquist the Chief Justice or impeach him. If rejected by the Senate, Justice Rehnquist will presumably remain on the Court. We are saying simply that he lacks the special qualities we expect of our Nation's chief judicial officer. The Senate did not hesitate to make a similar judgment against Associate Justice Abe Fortas when he was nominated for Chief Justice in 1968, and we should not hesitate to apply the same test to Justice Rehnquist.

There are four basic reasons why I oppose this nomination of Mr. Rehnquist:

Consistent and appalling record of opposition to minorities; his extreme positions against the constitutional minorities; his extreme positions against the constitutional rights of individuals; his refusal to recuse himself in the case of Laird versus Tatum; and his lack of candor in testifying to the Senate Judiciary Committee.

INSENSITIVITY TO MINORITIES

Justice Rehnquist's entire legal career shows a persistent hostility to the rights of minority citizens. In his first job after law school, when Mr. Rehnquist was a law clerk to Justice Jackson, he authored his infamous memo on the school desegregation cases, in which he stated:

I realize that it is an unpopular and unhumanitarian position, for which I have been excoriated by my "liberal" colleagues but I think Plessy v. Ferguson was right and should be affirmed.

In 1971, Mr. Rehnquist stated that the views in the memo were Justice Jackson's, not his own. In the hearings in July, Justice Rehnquist reaffirmed this position. Frankly, his statements are not credible. He has been contradicted by several people, including impartial commentators. His fellow law clerk at the time, Donald Cronson, disputes Rehnquist's explanation and says the memo was more Cronson's than Rehnquist's. Elsie Douglas, who was Justice Jackson's secretary for 9 years, said that Mr. Rehnquist's account was "incredible on its face." Richard Kluger, who wrote the definitive work on the Brown decision concluded that a preponderance of the evidence indicated that the memo was an accurate statement of Mr. Rehnquist's own views on segregation, not Justice Jackson's. We have looked at all of the memos Mr. Rehnquist prepared for Justice Jackson; several of them contain Mr. Rehnquist's personal views, and are written in a style similar to the segregation case memo.

Justice Jackson died in October 1954, a few months after he had voted for desegregation and against the position in the Rehnquist memo, so we don't know what he would say about it. But the record itself casts serious doubt on Justice Rehnquist's explanation.

Mr. Rehnquist's hostility to minorities increased when he entered private practice in Phoenix. In the 1960's he publicly opposed a Phoenix public accommodations ordinance, and he publicly challenged a plan to end school segregation in Phoenix, stating that "we are no more dedicated to an integrated society than a segregated society."

At his confirmation hearings in 1971, he stated that he has come to realize "the strong concern that minorities have for the recognition of these rights." Mr. Rehnquist did not, however, say that he had come to share this concern. In response to my question at the hearings, Justice Rehnquist could not recall a single civil rights statute which he had supported on the public record.

In the early 1960's, he led a Republican Party ballot security program designed to disenfranchise minority voters. Accounts of voter harassment by participants in the program in Phoenix in 1962 are documented by reports in the Arizona Republic of November 7, 1962, that voter-challenging by Republicans in predominately black and Hispanic precincts in South Phoenix obstructed the right to vote of citizens assigned to those precincts.

Similar difficulties characterized election day in Phoenix in 1964. On November 4, 1964, the Arizona Republic reported that:

Substantial harassment of Democratic voters in several Phoenix precincts was reported to State Democratic Party leaders.

Robert H. Allen, State Democratic chairman, said reports reaching his office indicated that the harassment consisted mainly of "indiscriminate mass challenging of voter residency." "Most of the harassment came from precincts with predominantly Negro and Mexican American voter registration," said Allen.

In 1960, Rehnquist was designated cochairman of the ballot security program; he supervised and assisted in the preparation of envelopes mailed to Democrats—largely in black and Mexican-American districts—which were the foundation of residency challenges; he recruited lawyers to serve on a lawyer's committee; he advised challengers on the law; and he supervised in assembling returns of the mailings for challenging purposes.

In 1962, Rehnquist was designated chairman of the lawyer's committee of the county Republican Party, and he again taught challengers the procedures they were to use. And, as in 1960, he served as a troubleshooter—going to precincts at which disputes had arisen in order to help resolve them.

Finally, in 1964 Rehnquist became chairman of the ballot security program, with overall responsibility for mailing out envelopes, recruiting challengers and members of the lawyer's committee, and speaking, or seeing that someone spoke, at a training session of challengers.

Thus while Mr. Rehnquist has sought to disassociate himself from the tactics in 1962 and other years, he held a high and responsible position in the election day apparatus from at least 1960 to 1964, a period that saw very substantial harassment and intimidation of voters in minority group precincts.

The committee has received sworn testimony from numerous credible witnesses that, as part of his involvement in the ballot security program, Mr. Rehnquist personally challenged the eligibility of minority voters. Mr. Rehnquist categorically denied this. In response to repeated questioning during the recent hearings, Justice Rehnquist continued to deny that he had ever challenged voters during the 1958-68 period or intimidated voters at any time. Nevertheless, five witnesses testified that Justice Rehnquist was engaged in challenging or intimidating voters. None of these witnesses had anything to gain by misrepresenting the truth, and, in fact, may feel they are risking adverse consequences.

For example, Mr. James Brosnahan, an assistant U.S. attorney in Arizona in 1962, testified that he visited a minority polling place in South Phoenix on election day 1962, that he saw Rehnquist at the precinct and that others in the polling place pointed out Rehnquist as having engaged in challenging voters. He discussed the matter with Rehnquist, who did not deny the charge. His answers to Mr. Brosnahan's questions acknowledged that he had been engaged in challenging voters.

Dr. Sidney Smith testified that he was in a predominantly minority Phoenix polling place in 1960 or 1962. He saw Mr. Rehnquist drive up with one or two men and get out of the car. Mr. Rehnquist approached two black men in the line of voters and held up a white card for them to read. He said:

You have no business being in this line trying to vote. I would ask you to leave.

Mr. Charles Pine testified that he was working out of Democratic county headquarters and received a complaint about someone intimidating voters at the Bethune polling place in 1962. When he arrived, an attorney identified the man engaged in challenging voters as Rehnquist. Mr. Pine saw the man identified as Rehnquist approaching voters, and asking, "Pardon me, are you a qualified voter?"

These witnesses provide overwhelming evidence that Rehnquist was personally engaged in challenging and harassing voters during the early 1960's.

Minority citizens look to our Federal courts for equal justice. They have reason to be concerned that their rights will not be protected in a court led by Justice Rehnquist.

As a member of the Supreme Court, Justice Rehnquist has been quick to seize on the slightest pretext to justify the denial of claims for racial justice:

His lone dissent in the Bob Jones University case supported tax credits for segregated schools.

In Batson versus Kentucky, his dissent supported the right of a prosecutor to prevent blacks and minorities from serving on a jury.

In Keyes versus School District No. 1, Denver, Colorado, his dissent supported the view that segregation in one part of a school district does not justify a presumption of segregation throughout the district.

In 33 cases during his 15 years on the Court, Rehnquist has voted in favor of a black complainant in a race discrimination case; 31 were unanimous decisions.

In 14 race discrimination cases brought by or on behalf of blacks, Justice Rehnquist cast the deciding vote against the civil rights claimant every time.

RECORD OF EXTREMISM ON THE COURT

In his 15 years on the Supreme Court, Justice Rehnquist has compiled a record of consistent opposition to individual rights in all areas—minority rights, women's rights, religious liberty, rights of the poor, rights of aliens, and rights of children.

In 1974, Harvard Law Professor David Shapiro reviewed Justice Rehnquist's first four terms on the Court and reached the following conclusion:

A review of all the cases in which Justice Rehnquist has taken part indicates that his votes are guided by three basic propositions:

(1) Conflicts between an individual and the Government should, whenever possible, be resolved against the individual.

(2) Conflicts between State and Federal authority, whether on an executive, legislative or judicial level, should, whenever possible, be resolved in favor of the States; and

(3) Questions of the exercise of Federal jurisdiction, whether on the district court, appellate court or Supreme Court level, should, whenever possible, be resolved against such exercise.

Justice Rehnquist's hostile record on individual rights is shocking. During Justice Rehnquist's tenure, the Court has decided 23 cases involving constitutional claims of sex discrimination. The majority of the Court voted with the claimant 14 times. Justice Rehnquist voted to uphold the challenged statute or practice in 20 of the 23 cases effectively against individuals.

In cases involving claims of discrimination against legal aliens, Justice Rehnquist has voted to uphold the discriminatory statute in everyone of the 12 cases in which he participated. The majority of justices found the challenged statute unconstitutional in eight of those cases. Justice Rehnquist would bar legal aliens from holding jobs ranging from architect to notary public.

In cases striking down statutes which provide that illegitimate children do not have the same rights as legitimate children, Justice Rehnquist has consistently voted to uphold the discriminatory statutes. Justice Rehnquist would deny disability insurance payments and worker's compensation benefits to illegitimate children.

Since Justice Rehnquist has been on the Court, it has decided 25 cases involving separation of church and State. In 13 of those cases, a majority of Justices held the challenged statute to be a violation of the first amendment prohibition on Government sponsorship of religion. Justice Rehnquist voted to uphold the statute completely in 23 of the 25 cases, and voted to uphold part of the statute in the remaining two cases.

Of 30 cases involving claims of cruel and unusual punishment, the Court found a constitutional violation in 15. Justice Rehnquist found a constitutional violation in none of those cases.

Justice Rehnquist's pattern of denying individual rights in pervasive and flies in the face of the Court's critical role as protector of such rights. Perhaps the most telling illustration of Justice Rehnquist's unwavering commitment to uphold Government action against challenge by an individual is his record in cases where he cast the deciding vote in a matter involving the constitutionality of Government action. In 120 of 124 cases, Justice Rehnquist cast the deciding vote to reject the constitutional claim.

Imagine what America would be like if Justice Rehnquist had been Chief Justice and his cramped and narrow view of the Constitution had prevailed in the critical years since World War II.

The schools of America would still be segregated. Millions of citizens would be denied the right to vote under scandalous malapportionment laws. Women would be condemned to second-class status as second-class Americans. Courthouses would be closed to individual challenges against police brutality and executive abuse—closed even to the press. Government would embrace religion, and the wall of separation between church and State would be in ruins. State and local majorities would tell us what we can read, how to lead our private lives, whether to bear children, how to bring them up, what kinds of people we may become. Such a result would be a radical and unacceptable retreat from the protections Americans enjoy today, and our Constitution would be a lesser document in a lesser land.

TATUM VERSUS LAIRD

The Chief Justice of the United States must have the highest ethical standards. Shortly after he joined the Court, Justice Rehnquist refused to recuse himself in the important case of Tatum versus Laird, and thereby demonstrated an ethical lapse that, in my view, should by itself disqualify Justice Rehnquist from being Chief Justice.

The plaintiffs in Tatum challenged the Government's policy of surveillance of civilians by the Army. Justice Rehnquist cast the deciding vote to reject the challenge, and denied the plaintiff's request that he recuse himself. The applicable ABA Code of Judicial conduct required disqualification if a judge's impartiality might reasonably be questioned because of the judge's involvement in the matter prior to his coming to the bench.

The public record indicates that Assistant Attorney General Rehnquist was heavily involved in the development of the policy of surveillance of civilians by the Army, the same policy which was challenged by the plaintiffs in Tatum. Further, Assistant Attorney General Rehnquist had some knowledge of disputed evidentiary facts in the Tatum case, and had, while the case was pending in the Federal Court of Appeals, expressed the opinion that the plaintiffs in Tatum versus Laird had a nonjusticiable claim.

I might point out for the RECORD, Mr. President, that I find the statement by the committee members in referencing the Laird versus Tatum issue in question to be in complete in significant respects. In the committee report, the memorandum in which Justice Rehnquist indicated his reasons for not recusing himself is reprinted verbating followed by excerpts from Mr. Rehnquist responses to questions by Senator Ervin when he appeared before the Ervin Committee.

But the most significant comment that Mr. Rehnquist made is not included in the majority views in the committee report. It is included in my comments on page 79 of the committee report. In this key statement, Mr. Rehnquist indicated "My only point of disagreement with you is to say whether in the case of Laird versus Tatum that has been pending in the court appeals here in the District of Columbia that an action would lie by private citizens to enjoin the gathering of information by the executive branch where there has been no threat of compulsory process and no pending action against any of those individuals on the part of the Government."

That is a direct statement about how he would rule if he were deciding the Laird versus Tatum case. But through oversight or whatever, that particular reference was not included in the committee's report to this body. That is one of the most significant points in the Laird case, that Mr. Rehnquist stated his conclusion about the parties rights in that particular case and then ruled on it when he got to the Supreme Court.

Finally, the record of Assistant Attorney General Rehnquist's actual role in the formulation of the policy involved in Tatum is in conflict with his sworn testimony on the subject. In his testimony last month, Justice Rehnquist stated that the only information he had about Army surveillance of civilians was obtained in connection with May Day. May Day was in 1971. In fact, Mr. Rehnquist was involved in the development of the policy of Army surveillance of civilians from the beginning—in 1969.

That was all brought out in the various documents provided by the Justice Department, many of which he authored. In the civil disturbance plan memorandum, Mr. Rehnquist provides a very detailed justification for the use of the Army to spy on American citizens, and the use of the FBI for intelligence gathering on American individuals.

In considering the Tatum versus Laird case, we should not forget the issue in that litigation and the consequences of Justice Rehnquist's vote. If Justice Rehnquist had recused himself, as he should have, the decision of the court of appeals would have been affirmed, and the case would have been sent back to the trial court. Discovery would have gone forward, and in the course of that discovery, the American people would have learned about the Huston plan, about the Army's surveillance of private citizens, and about the CIA's illegal domestic surveillance operations. But because of Justice Rehnquist's vote, that information remained concealed from the American people for several years. His vote prevented the American people from learning about the illegal intelligence activities going on inside the Nixon administration. As an Assistant Attorney General in the Justice Department, Mr. Rehnquist was well aware of these activities and he did not want the American people to know about them.

That is why Prof. Geoffrey Hazard, one of our Nation's foremost judicial ethics experts, who played a key role in formulating the "ABA Canons On Judicial Ethics" has been so critical of Justice Rehnquist's decision to sit on that particular case. We will examine Professor Hazard's opinion in greater detail during the course of this debate.

CREDIBILITY

Throughout all of these issues which raise serious concerns about Justice Rehnquist's fairness and openmindedness and commitment to equal justice runs a thread of evasivenss that casts doubt on his credibility. From the Jackson memo to the voter harassment to the Tatum case, we see a pattern of explanations by Justice Rehnquist that are contradicted by others or are misleading or do not ring true. It is not a pattern worthy of the Chief Justice of the United States.

CONCLUSION

In the past, the Senate has not hesitated to oppose controversial Presidential nominations to the office of Chief Justice. Before Rehnquist, 20 persons have been nominated to that high office, but only 15 have been confirmed. Most recently, in 1968, with the active encouragement of the current chairman of this committee, the Senate refused to invoke cloture on President Lyndon Johnson's nomination of Associate Justice Abe Fortas to be Chief Justice, and the nomination was withdrawn.

The Senate should not hesitate to do the same today. This institution is not a rubberstamp. We have our own independent responsibility to the Constitution, the Supreme Court and the judicial appointment process.

On the merits, Justice Rehnquist is not mainstream but too extreme—he is too extreme on race, too extreme on women's rights, too extreme on freedom of speech, too extreme on separation of church and state, too extreme to be Chief Justice.

Further, Justice Rehnquist did not hesitate to defy the fundamental principles of judicial ethics by participating—and casting the decisive vote—as an Associate Justice in a major Supreme Court case that challenged his own extremist actions as an Assistant Attorney General in fashioning the Nixon policy of military surveillance of civilians. And he engaged in an unusually cruel and unseemly violation of legal ethics by concealing a trust he had drafted for the benefit of the destitute and deperately ill brother of his wife.

Finally, Justice Rehnquist did not come clean with the committee in any area of major controversy; the committee record, including the testimony of numerous witnesses, is replete with serious challenges against his credibility.

In sum, Justice Rehnquist is outside the mainstream of American constitutional law and American values, and he does not deserve to be confirmed as Chief Justice of the United States.

Mr. METZENBAUM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Madam President, I rise to oppose this nomination.

I want to put one point at rest very promptly. That is the point that was made by the majority leader this morning before we got into the Rehnquist nomination. The majority leader this morning said that this is just a question of giving the President the right to name those jurists that he believes should be on the Court, and that it was a question of liberalism versus conservatism.

Let me point out that this statement is just so contradictory to the facts that, before I get into some of the remarks I hope to make in connection with this nomination, I think we ought to look at the reality of the situation on that subject.

I will address myself later to the number of judges that we have confirmed without any question being raised concerning political philosophy. But let us take two outstanding cases.

In connection with the confirmation of Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, who is recognized, respected, and accepted as a conservative jurist, this body voted 99 to 0 for her confirmation. It is a fact that I think very few of us doubt that the vote with respect to the confirmation of Justice Scalia will probably be something in that very area. His nomination came out of the committee unanimously.

So, to suggest that the opposition to Justice Rehnquist is somehow related to his political philosophy or his conservatism just does not accord with reality. Anyone who suggests that that is the case just is not willing to look at the facts.

Madam President, I have been in this body off and on since 1974, and it is my view that there will never be a more important vote that I have cast or will cast than the one having to do with the confirmation of the Chief Justice of the United States.

Although I recognize the value of television in the Senate, I am frank to say that I am somewhat disappointed, that there are not more Members of this body on the floor prepared to debate this issue. We are considering the confirmation of a nominee for Chief Justice who would serve for 10, 15, 20 years, possibly well into the 21st century. Much is at stake for the Nation.

The Chief Justice heads the third branch of our Government. He heads the judicial conference of the United States, composed of all Federal judges. He appoints committees which make policy for our Federal courts. He chairs the board of the Federal Judicial Center, which does research, training, and education for our Federal courts. He literally manages the Supreme Court.

He presides over the Court sessions and decisionmaking meetings of the Court.

When he is in the majority he assigns opinions to the Justice who is to write them.

The Chief Justice serves as a symbolic head of the Federal court system. He holds the highest judicial office in our Nation. This is more than just another judicial appointment.

He occupies the pinnacle of judicial power in our country.

Before confirming a nominee for Chief Justice we must discuss fully the issues and the controversies presented by this nomination.

I accept the challenge of my colleague from Utah, who said "let us be fair." If my colleagues in the U.S. Senate will look at all the evidence concerning Justice Rehnquist and be fair about it, if they will not make a decision purely on a politically partisan basis, they will come to the conclusion that Justice Rehnquist should not be confirmed as Chief Justice. I am willing to be fair. I wonder if my colleagues are willing to be equally fair.

Some say that those of us who desire this debate are wrong to have the debate at all, that we seek a partisan fight over this nomination. Nothing could be further from the truth. I am frank to say that it should be noted that on my side of the aisle, there has been a split. Some of the Democrats have voted for confirmation and some have not. The partisanship comes from across the aisle.

Not one of those who sat on the committee could see fit to vote against the confirmation. That is indeed partisanship. One might say, well, it is not partisanship; they just understand the issues better. But I would say if you understand the issues and really thoroughly look at them, you cannot arrive at the conclusion that every Member on the other side would see fit to vote for confirmation. I hope that will not happen.

The importance of this nomination demands our integrity. It demands that we look at this man's record and put aside all political considerations and decide what is right for America.

Those of us on this side of the aisle have not delayed or thwarted confirmation of President Reagan's judicial nominees. There have been very few that have been opposed in the United States. We have confirmed over 285 Federal judges and only 5 or so of that 285 have excited any real controversy. I am frank to say that overall, there has been bipartisan cooperation.

Some would say we should not oppose or debate this confirmation because it is a reflection upon the Supreme Court of the United States itself, to raise some of the questions that my colleagues have already raised and that I shall elaborate upon in some detail today. But this is not an ordinary confirmation. To fail to raise the issues concerning Justice Rehnquist and his integrity and his candor and his truthfulness would be irresponsible on our part. We are confirming the Chief Justice of the United States, a post filled only 15 times in the history of this great Nation. The Chief Justice will serve longer than most Presidents and longer than most Senators. Therefore, I say to every Member of this body, you owe it to yourselves, but more than that, you owe it to your children and to your grandchildren to decide—do you want to make just a partisan judgment or will you make a judgment based upon all of the evidence? If it is a judgment based on all the evidence, it will be a judgment that Justice Rehnquist should not be the Chief Justice of the United States.

We are considering the confirmation of a Chief Justice who will serve all the people of the United States. Each Senator must decide on his or her own whether Justice Rehnquist is the appropriate person the appropriate choice to serve all the people of this Nation.

The Chief Justice affects future directions of constitutional interpretation. The Chief Justice is the symbol of the Supreme Court. He or she is the final guarantor of individual liberties. The Chief Justice is a symbol of the highest standards of integrity and fidelity to the law.

The most important issue for me is the last one. The Chief Justice of the United States is the embodiment of the ideal of integrity. The unfortunate truth is that the hearings cast great doubt on Justice Rehnquist's credibility. There are four major areas that trouble me in regard to his credibility. The area of voter intimidation, a memo about Brown versus Board of Education, and a restrictive covenant which applies to his property in Vermont, each of which I shall discuss in detail today. His statements regarding the case of Laird versus Tatum also raise certain credibility issues, but I will defer a discussion of those.

I want to talk about the issue of voter intimidation first. Let me make it very clear that the issue is not whether he intimidated voters. That is not the issue. The issue is whether he was truthful when he testified on this issue during his first confirmation hearing in 1971. The issue is not what he did but whether he was truthful when he testified during his confirmation hearing last month.

What did he say in 1971 when he was asked whether he had challenged voters? Justice Rehnquist stated to the Judiciary Committee in 1971 in response to written questions: "In none of these years"—meaning 1958 to 1968—"did I personally engage in challenging the qualifications of any voters." I repeat—

He stated that in none of those years did he personally engage in challenging the qualifications of any voter.

In response to evidence presented at the 1971 hearings that he engaged in harassing and intimidating voters, he submitted an affidavit after the conclusion of the hearing. In that affidavit, he stated under oath: "I have not, either in the general election of 1964 or in any other election, at Bethune precinct or in any other precinct, either myself harassed or intimidated voters, or encouraged or approved the harassment or intimidation of voters by other persons."

That was succinct, it was clear. He had not in any election, either himself harassed or intimidated voters or encouraged or approved the harassment or intimidation of voters by any other person. But the record shows overwhelmingly that that statement is untrue.

We are talking not alone about his statements in 1971. Again, in 1986, he repeated the same position over and over again. Questioned again and again as to whether he challenged voters, each time, he said no. Senator THURMOND said to him: "How do you respond to these allegations?" Justice Rehnquist said: "I have reread very carefully the statement I made to the committee in 1971 and I have absolutely no reason to doubt its correctness now."

□ 1400

Senator KENNEDY said to him, "Do you deny categorically that you were engaged in any of the activities that are identified by any of these individuals in any of the polling places that were mentioned?" Justice Rehnquist: "Yes, I do deny that."

I asked him, "Did you ever ask a voter any questions regarding his or her qualifications to vote?" Justice Rehnquist said, "Not that I can recall."

I asked him, "Did you ever ask a prospective voter to read from any text, whether the Constitution or otherwise? Justice Rehnquist: "Not that I can recall."

I asked him, "Did you ever personally confront voters at Bethune precinct?" Justice Rehnquist: "No, No, I did not."

Each time he was asked, Justice Rehnquist denied the allegation.

Members of the Senate, the evidence is exactly to the contrary. There were five witnesses who appeared before the committee, five witnesses who were totally impartial, objective, they had nothing to gain, and some, I am frank to say, had a lot to lose by being there. Yet each came forward and testified to Mr. Rehnquist's involvement in challenging, intimidating, and harassing voters.

Mr. Brosnahan was the first witness, senior partner in a San Francisco law firm of 235 lawyers, a former U.S. attorney, was the assistant U.S. attorney at that time when he met Mr. Rehnquist—even today represents clients practicing before the Supreme Court. It took a lot of courage for Mr. Brosnahan to appear before us. There is no doubt in my mind that if you had a law firm of 235 members in San Francisco, the overwhelming majority of them are going to be members of the Republican Party. There is no doubt in my mind that they are going to be conservative, that they are going to be supportive of Justice Rehnquist's nomination. But Mr. Brosnahan felt he had to come forward and testify. He was very clear. He personally did not see Justice Rehnquist challenge voters. He did not say that he did. But when he was called to investigate claims of harassment, Justice Rehnquist was there, and he testified. "At that polling place, I saw William Rehnquist, who was known to me as an attorney in the city of Phoenix. He was serving as a challenger of voters; that is to say, the conduct and complaints had to do with his conduct. People told me he was challenging, and he did not deny he was a challenger. At that time in 1962, he did not raise any question about credentials or any of that. He did not deny that."

Now, he further went on to testify that he had talked to Justice Rehnquist about the complaints about his having challenged voters, and Justice Rehnquist's comments to him acknowledged he had been challenging voters. There was no mistake that many people in the room complained about the fact that Justice Rehnquist had been challenging voters and they complained to Mr. Brosnahan, who was the assistant U.S. attorney.

Now, Mr. Brosnahan did not make a mistake about identity. He knew Mr. Rehnquist. He had attended bar association functions with him. He had introduced his wife to him. Mr. Brosnahan said that Justice Rehnquist had been challenging voters. Justice Rehnquist said that he did not, and I quote,

"personally challenge the qualifications of any voter."

Then came another witness, a Dr. Smith, a professor of psychology, former professor at the Arizona State University. He testified that he saw Justice Rehnquist at the minority polling place in Phoenix in 1960. He saw Justice Rehnquist approach two black men in a line of voters, and he heard Mr. Rehnquist—and I use the term Mr. Rehnquist because obviously he was not "Justice" at that time—he heard Mr. Rehnquist say, "You have no business being in this line trying to vote. I would ask you to leave." As a result, Dr. Smith said, the two men left the line. There was no mistake in Dr. Smith's opinion about his identity. He knew who Justice Rehnquist was and could identify him. There was no mistake about what Mr. Rehnquist did. He challenged voters. He intimidated voters. He deprived minority members of their right to vote. Dr. Smith testified that Justice Rehnquist was harassing and intimidating voters. Dr. Smith quoting Justice Potter Steward testified, "I may not be able to define intimidation but I know it when I see it."

Dr. Smith was a very impressive witness. He had absolutely nothing to gain from testifying. And when asked as to why he had come forward, he said, "I am here to keep from being shamed in the eyes of my children." And I might say that his children sat behind him during his testimony.

Yet, in spite of that direct evidence, Justice Rehnquist said he did not personally challenge the qualifications of any voters.

(Mr. COHEN assumed the chair.)

Mr. METZENBAUM. Then there was a third witness, a Mr. Pine, a successful businessman in Phoenix. In the 1960's he was active in the Democratic Party.

On election day, he was assigned to respond to complaints from precincts where harassment of voters had occurred. He testified that he received complaints about harassing voters at the Bethune precinct, and when he arrived, the attorney who accompanied him said, "That is Bill Rehnquist." He saw Mr. Rehnquist approaching voters, challenging their qualifications to vote. Mr. Pine stated that as a result of Mr. Rehnquist's challenge, voters left the line. They were entitled to vote but they left the line because Mr. Rehnquist made them feel that they should have some document, some piece of paper to show they were qualified. It was not the law. It was wrong. It was unfair.

But having said all of that, let me make it clear if Justice Rehnquist had come before the committee and said, "Yes, indeed, I did that; I challenged voters. I may have even gone too far; I'm sorry, I should not have done it. It was a number of years ago and it was a mistake on my part"—that is not what he has done—I think all of us could understand some misconduct on the part of a human being some years past.

The question is his veracity. Did he come forward and admit the conduct? Did he tell the Senate what he had done and say, "I should not have done it?" No. Justice Rehnquist back in 1971 and again in 1986, time and time again said he never personally challenged the qualifications of any voters.

And then there was Senator Pena, a State senator from New Mexico. He testified he saw Mr. Rehnquist challenge voters at a minority precinct. Mr. Rehnquist was holding up the lines. A hundred people were waiting to get in line. Mr. Rehnquist was asking everybody who came in, "Where do you live? How long have you lived there? What is your name?" These were minority voters. They were afraid. It was a way to force people to give up and leave the line, and they did just that. That is wrong. It is unfair. It was not proper conduct on his part.

I repeat: The issue is not what he did. The issue is, Did he tell the U.S. Senate committee considering his nomination in 1971, and again in 1986, the truth? One can only come to the conclusion that the answer is "No."

Justice Rehnquist says that he never personally challenged the qualifications of voters. That just is not the fact.

Then there was another witness, a Mr. Mirkin. Mr. Mirkin is an attorney in Phoenix, and obviously he had nothing to gain. As a matter of fact, he said that he supported Justice Rehnquist's confirmation. But when it came to the question of what he saw Mr. Rehnquist doing, he testified that he saw Mr. Rehnquist intimidate voters; he tried to encourage them to leave the line at a minority polling place. This was a man who said, "I support his confirmation."

Mr. Mirkin testified that Mr. Rehnquist was giving instructions to challengers at the polling place. But Mr. Mirkin said they were merely props. He said that the real audience was the minority voters and the real object was to get them to leave the line, to get them to give up their right to vote.

How Justice Rehnquist could tell Senator THURMOND, could tell Senator KENNEDY, could tell me that he did not challenge or intimidate voters, or how he could have told the Senate committee that in 1971, in view of the evidence, is hard to comprehend.

Before the day is over, we will hear my colleague from Utah probably talk about the fact that there were five witnesses on one side and there were seven witnesses on the other side. So I think we ought to talk about those seven witnesses, because, so far as I am concerned, those witnesses were honorable people; they were respectable people. Some were lawyers. Five of them were Republicans, or active in the party. But I do not question the fact of their total honesty, Republicans or Democrats. I am not one who believes that some people in one party tell the truth and some people in another party do not. Those five were involved in the challenging program with Justice Rehnquist.

One witness was actually involved with the Democratic Party—he had been the county chairman—and another was a police officer. All of them said the same thing: "We were not with Mr. Rehnquist, so we cannot say what he did, but we don't think he would do such a thing." In fact, they talked about the law of probabilities being that he would not do such a thing.

I respect their opinions. But testimony based on the "law of probabilities," has little weight in the face of uncontroverted direct evidence from five people under oath, each of whom has nothing to gain by testifying against Justice Rehnquist's confirmation. The witnesses were asked about Justice Rehnquist's conduct in 1962.

Question: "Can you state categorically that Justice Rehnquist did not challenge anyone on that election day?"

One answered for the group: "How could you answer that categorically when not one of us was with him all day?"

I accept that answer. You cannot categorically say that somebody did not do something on a particular day if you were not with him all during the day. The truth is that none of these witnesses knows everything that happened on election day in 1962, and they do not know everything that happened in 1960 or in 1964. They were not with Justice Rehnquist all day in 1962, and they did not claim to have been with him all day in other years.

The proponents of his confirmation say that all this is just a case of mistaken identity, that all the testimony really refers to one incident involving another man. That, I say to my colleague from Utah, who has made that statement previously, is a smokescreen; that is a phony argument.

There was an incident involving another man in 1962 at Bethune Precinct. There was a scuffle, and a man was taken away. That man's name was Mr. Bentson. But none of the five witnesses referred to that incident at all. None of the five witnesses testified to a scuffle; none mentioned the police taking someone away. That was a totally separate and distinct action by Mr. Bentson. That incident occurred at a different time and place than the incidents described by the five eyewitnesses.

The five witnesses who saw Mr. Rehnquist were not talking about Mr. Bentson. There is no claim that Justice Rehnquist was involved in that incident. So let us not confuse the facts on the question of Mr. Bentson and Mr. Rehnquist.

I think my distinguished colleague will also probably say that they both were tall men, and therefore there was this confusion. But none of the five saw any scuffle. None of the five confused Mr. Rehnquist with anyone. All of the five recogized Mr. Rehnquist for whom he is.

There is another phony argument that has been offered. The supporters of Justice Rehnquist say that the police officer who investigated the scuffle was at the Bethune Precinct all day, and that he came forward and testified that he never saw Justice Rehnquist.

There are two major problems with that argument. First, only one of the witnesses testified he was sure an incident occurred at Bethune Precinct, and in that case the incident occurred in 1964. The police officer was at Bethune in 1962, not 1964.

Another problem: The police officer told us that he was at the polling place only 1 hour, and the rest of the day he was "in the area." Those are his words, "in the area." So he did not know what was going on there.

There are a lot of people in the area of the U.S. Senate today, probably some as close as the House of Representatives and some on the streets. They are in the area but they probably do not know what is going on on the floor of the U.S. Senate this afternoon.

Supporters of Justice Rehnquist go on to say that one of the witnesses they called, a Mr. Maggiore, was in Democratic headquarters in 1962—he was the county chairman at that time—and he never received a complaint about Mr. Rehnquist. So what? Because nobody called him, does that prove it did not occur? They contend that Mr. Rehnquist could not have been involved in challenging voters because Mr. Maggiore got no call.

□ 1420

Would the assistant U.S. attorney call the Democratic chairman, or would the State senator feel it necessary that he call the State chairman? Would the doctor feel that it was incumbent upon him to call the county chairman? Of course not.

The failure of a call to the Democratic county chairman does not prove anything. It just proves that nobody saw fit to call him.

And, again, the incidents that occurred in 1960 and 1964 could not lead to a call in 1962.

None of the witnesses, I might also say, claimed that he had called Mr. Maggiore.

So what do we have? On one side, we have five witnesses who were there, five witnesses with nothing to gain and a lot to lose, and on the other side, seven witnesses all of whom admit they were not with Justice Rehnquist throughout all the election days in either 1960, 1962, or 1964.

It is not easy to come out here on the floor and state my conclusion that a sitting Supreme Court Justice has misstated the facts. But the Constitution demands that each of us make an independent judgment as to the fitness of the nominee for this office, the nomination of the Chief Justice, the highest symbol of integrity and fidelity to the law. Justice Rehnquist misled the committee in 1971 and in 1986. He challenged voters. He harassed voters. He deprived them of their right to vote. Then he told the Senate—and to me this is the critical question—he told the Senate in 1971 under oath and again in 1986 that he did not.

That, to me, is the key point, the question of telling the truth to the U.S. Senate.

I cannot support his nomination under these circumstances. Yet I want to be very candid about something. If this had been the only instance of his lack of candor, I might be persuaded to say, "Well, maybe he has misstated the facts but one issue does not make a total case and perhaps I should give him the benefit of the doubt."

But there is so much more having to do with the very question of his candor and his integrity and his forthrightness.

Let me go now to another subject. As I go to these subjects, I want to emphasize I do not believe that the issue is what he did or did not do. I believe the issue has to do with his candor and his integrity and his truthfulness in his representations to the U.S. Senate.

The memo in connection with the case of Brown versus Board of Education is the next matter about which I would like to speak.

Justice Rehnquist wrote a memo. The memo has, right under the substance of the text, his initials, WHR. He was younger then. He was a clerk for Justice Jackson. He had a right to his own views. I am not concerned about whether I agree or disagree with him about his thoughts concerning Brown versus Board of Education of Plessy versus Ferguson back there in 1952. I am concerned about whether he told the truth about the memo in 1971 at his first confirmation hearings. I am concerned about whether he told the truth to the Senate in 1986.

Let us take a look at the facts: The memo was typed by Justice Rehnquist. As I previously stated, it has his initials on it. It is written in the first person. The memo says, "I realize that it is an unpopular and unhumanitarian position for which I have been excoriated by 'liberal' colleagues, but I think Plessy versus Ferguson was right and should be reaffirmed."

But in 1971, at his confirmation hearing, Justice Rehnquist stated, "Those are not my views. They are Justice Jackson's."

He stated in his 1971 letter to the Senate: "The bald simplistic conclusion that 'Plessy versus Ferguson was right and should be affirmed' is not an accurate statement of my own views at the time."

That leads to the first question of credibility because the memo is in the first person, the memo has his initials right below that very line and it is clear that he agreed with Plessy versus Ferguson doctrine of segregated schools. But when he advised the Senate about his position, he indicated that he disagreed with Plessy and supported the view that the public schools should be integrated.

I do not care what his opinion was then. He had a right to his point of view and he has a right to his point of view as a member of the Court and whether I agree or disagree is not the issue I am concerned about here.

So at one point he said he agreed with the Plessy decision, on the other point he said he disagreed with it, and then—and then—in 1986 When Senator BIDEN asked him what his views were, he said "I do not think I reached a conclusion."

Now, you have him on one of the issues, you have him on the other side of the issue categorically, and then you have him saying "I do not think I reached a conclusion."

These statements are too totally inconsistent to reconcile. The story just will not wash. All the rest of the evidence says the memo represented Justice Rehnquist's views.

The title of the memo is "A Random Thought on the Segregation Cases." Does that sound like he was stating Justice Jackson's views? Of course not.

The memo ends by it saying he has been "excoriated" by his liberal colleagues. If these are Justice Jackson's views in that memo, then is he saying that the liberal colleagues of Justice Jackson were excoriating him? Come on now. Other members of the Court excoriating their fellow colleague? Does Justice Rehnquist want us to believe that the liberal members of the Court were excoriating Justice Jackson?

Can we believe that Justice Jackson was excoriated by liberal colleagues for having a sincere view about this case? Can we believe that Justice Jackson would announce to his fellow Justices at the conference that he had been excoriated, as the memo indicates? It strains one's credulity. It is unbelievable.

Justice Rehnquist's own colleagues, his fellow clerks, indicate who those liberal colleagues are. One of those fellow colleagues recently said, "Unquestionably, in our luncheon meetings with the clerks he—meaning Justice Rehnquist—did defend the view that Plessy was right."

Another problem with his explanation is that the first half of the memo is a gratuitous discussion of the history of court decisions on property rights. Can it be reasonably claimed that Justice Jackson lectured his fellow Justices about elementary propositions, when they were intimately familiar with this history?

Justice Rehnquist says that Justice Jackson supported the doctrine of separate but equal.

He said to the Senate in 1971 and in 1986 that Justice Jackson did not want to overturn Plessy. He makes that argument to support his position that it was not his memo but that it was Justice Jackson's.

But what were Justice Jackson's views at the time? Certainly not those indicated by Justice Rehnquist. We can pretty well conclude what Justice Jackson's view were. After all, Justice Jackson joined in the unanimous decision to strike down Plessy versus Ferguson.

Justice Rehnquist says, even if those were Jackson's view when the decision was handed down they were different when the Justices first conferred about the case. But then you check some other evidence and you look at the notes of Justice Jackson's fellow Justice, Justice Burton at the conference. Justice Burton's notes show that Jackson supported overturning Plessy, and another Jackson clerk said Justice Jackson was prepared to support a Court decision ending segregation. There is no evidence supporting Justice Rehnquist's claim or contention in this respect.

No other drafts or memos indicate Justice Jackson agreed with the statement that "I think Plessy versus Ferguson was right and should be reaffirmed." Those were the views of William Rehnquist, the clerk.

□ 1430

He had a right to have those views. He did not have a right to fail to state the facts in 1971 and then to indicate his position was exactly opposite and then indicate in 1986 that he had no views at all.

The supporters of Justice Rehnquist's interpretation point to a letter from Justice Rehnquist's fellow clerk, Donald Cronson, to the Senate in 1971;

That letter claimed Jackson asked for two memos—one supporting overturning the Plessy decision and the other supporting upholding it. Cronson claimed both memos were collaborative efforts.

But the Cronson account just does not withstand scrutiny:

First, if the memos were collaborative effort, why did not Justice Rehnquist ever mention that? Why did not he respond to all the controversy by saying he coauthored the memo with someone else? He did not say that?

Second, if the memos were collaborative efforts, why is each signed by only one clerk, WHR, William H. Rehnquist? No more, no less; no other names. It is not difficult to find at least 25 other memos that are signed the same way, WHR.

Third, with respect to the Cronson memo, Cronson's claim is that Justice Jackson asked for one memo supporting Plessy and the other one opposing it. But Justice Rehnquist, you will recollect, as I just told you, claimed that Justice Jackson favored reaffirming Plessy, not that he wanted argument on both sides.

Fourth, Mr. Cronson's memo is titled "A Few Expressed Prejudices on the Segregation Cases." That is not a title for a memo stating Jackson's views of the cases.

The fact is that Mr. Cronson's claim that the memo represented Jackson's views does not hold up.

Ten years ago, in a scholarly analysis of the Brown and Plessy decisions, Richard Kluger concluded:

> One finds a preponderance of evidence to suggest that the memorandum in question . . . was an accurate statement of his own views on segregation; not those of Robert Jackson, who, by contrast, was a staunch libertarian and humanist.

And to further refute Justice Rehnquist's denial that the memo represented his own views, we now have the statement of Justice Jackson's personal secretary of 9 years, Elsie Douglas. Ms. Douglas stated in a recent letter to Senator KENNEDY:

> It surprises me every time Justice Rehnquist represents what he said in 1971 that the views expressed in his 1952 memorandum concerning the segregation case then before the Court were those of Justice Jackson's rather than his own views. As I said in 1971 when this question first came up, that is a smear of a great man for whom I served as Secretary for many years.
> Justice Jackson did not ask law clerks to express his views. He expressed his own and they expressed theirs. That's what happened in this instance.

This is no ordinary memo about which we are speaking. And I must say that I somewhat apologize to my colleagues for taking so much time to talk about this, but I believe that it again bears on the question of the Justice' credibility, of his candor, of his truthfulness. We are talking about a memo in a matter that was not an ordinary case. The Brown case was the most important constitutional decision of this century.

The memo was a key issue in his 1971 confirmation. It is inconceivable, that Justice Rehnquist could have had no position in that case, at the time which is what his statement was in answer to Senator BIDEN's question. He did have a position. That position was to oppose integration of schools.

But the issue still is not whether he was right, wrong, or whether I agree or disagree. The issue is, has he deliberately misled the Senate and the American people on two separate occasions?

Enough on that issue.

Let us go to another issue having to do with integrity and credibility and candor and openness with the U.S. Senate—Justice Rehnquist's knowledge of the restrictive covenants on his property in Vermont. Again, I want to say the issue is not whether he did or did not buy a home subject to a restrictive covenant. He did. He is not the first nor the last person who did. The issue also is not whether or not he took some action in connection with the restrictive covenant, which I believe personally he should have done. But he did not do that. The issue still has to do, in my opinion, with his candor and with his frankness with the U.S. Senate.

On July 30, Senator LEAHY asked Justice Rehnquist about the restrictive covenant in his deed to his Vermont home purchased in July 1974. The covenant states:

> No feet of the herein conveyed property shall be leased or sold to any member of the Hebrew races.

Now Justice Rehnquist testified that he was not aware of the covenant "at the time" and "was advised of it a couple of days ago."

In other words he did not know of it at the time and he just learned about it, was just advised about it a couple of days ago.

But the facts indicate something totally contrary to that. The facts indicate that Justice Rehnquist was aware of the covenant "at the time."

There are two letters that show that he was made aware of the covenant "at the time" he purchased the property. One letter, from Justice Rehnquist's attorney, dated June 24, 1974, recommends that Mr. Rehnquist "examine closely the attached abstract deed of the main cottage property."

Now, that is a letter from his lawyer. He was a member of the Supreme Court at the time. He is told by his lawyer that he should examine closely the attached abstract deed of the main cottage property. That is the deed containing the restrictive covenant.

Now, a lot of people, you might say, would not pay too much attention, but we are talking about a Justice of the U.S. Supreme Court, a man who reads legal documents and legal papers every single day of his life when he is sitting on the bench.

Can we believe that scholarly, erudite, able lawyer, William Rehnquist, Justice Rehnquist, totally disregarded his attorney's specific advice to "examine closely" the deed?

Now, as if that were not enough, there is another letter, dated about 10 days later, July 2, 1974. The second paragraph of that letter says:

> The property is subject to restrictions relative to use * * * and ownership by members of the Hebrew race.

To restrictions relative to use—and ownership by members of the Hebrew race.

So he not only got one letter. He got two letters from his lawyer.

There is no question that Justice Rehnquist was aware of the covenant "at the time." But he told the committee that he was not aware of it and just had learned about it a few days earlier. It is hard to believe. But then there is another development.

An August 4, 1986, article in the Legal Times newspaper revealed that Justice Rehnquist had received the two letters from attorneys with information on the restrictive covenant. The headline of the article was: "Rehnquist's lawyer urged him to note deed restriction."

The article said:

> Associate Justice William Rehnquist's lawyer in the 1974 purchase of a Vermont house said in an interview with Legal Times Friday that he had sent a letter to Rehnquist before the purchase advising him to read the property deed, including the condition set forth in the deed. One of those conditions was a covenant prohibiting sale or lease of the property "to any member of the Hebrew race."

At another point, the article mentions the second letter—and I have added the word "John" and I have added the phrase "lawyer for the sellers of the property" only for the purpose of this debate. And Willis, I might say, is the lawyer for Justice Rehnquist.

> (John) Downs (lawyer for the sellers of the property) said that both he and Willis (lawyer for Justice Rehnquist) were aware of the restrictive covenant at the time of the sale. Downs read to Legal Times an excerpt from a letter dated July 2, 1974, from Willis in which Rehnquist's lawyer said he studied the deed.
> According to Downs, the July 1974 letter states: "The property is also subject to restrictions relative to use, with rights of way, construction on the various parcels, and ownership by members of the Hebrew race."

Look what now develops. What an amazing coincidence of facts. On the very same day that the article appears, Justice Rehnquist who said he had not been notified and had not learned of the restrictive covenants until several days earlier writes a letter to Senator THURMOND, the chairman of our committee. And in that letter he said he reviewed his files and discovered that July 2, 1974 letter on restrictive covenants.

Mr. Justice, I respect you and I respect the office you hold. But, Mr. Justice, I wonder what you think about that kind of evidentiary development if the evidence only came out to contradict the witness' statement after it had been published in the newspapers, and then the witness came forward and reviewed and reversed his testimony.

Justice Rehnquist said in his letter to Senator THURMOND:

> While I do not doubt that I read the letter when I received it, I did not recall the letter or its contents before I testified last week.

Before this debate is concluded, I will attempt to bring to the attention of my colleagues the innumerable occasions on which Justice Rehnquist has faulty recall. It is very difficult to comprehend. I understand certainly somebody who could not recall what happened on October 7, 1968, or 1972. Nobody would expect that. We are not talking about those kinds of matters. We are talking about recall of issues far more important than that, recalls having to do with a memo concerning the most important constitutional decision perhaps in this country, recall having to do with lawyers' letters that does not become apparent until such time as a newspaper publishes the facts.

Justice Rehnquist told us the facts only after truth was published. Until then, he said he didn't know about restrictive covenants. Then when the whole world learned the truth—then and only then did he admit the truth.

Again—as in case of military surveillance of private citizens an issue which I will discuss at a later point—we find a distinguished legal scholar unable to recollect very salient, and very significant facts.

This failure of recollection is not believable. I quote from a recent newspaper editorial in the Toledo Blade:

> It is one thing for an ordinary home buyer to be unaware of a restrictive covenant in a deed, * * * it is quite different for a lawyer as astute as Mr. Rehnquist to plead ignorance. Quite simply, it is not believable * * *

In today's New York Times on this same subject about valid doubts about Justice Rehnquist, it states:

> Confronted with restrictive covenants on two of his homes, the nominee first said he had been unaware of them. Then he wrote to the Senate Judiciary Committee that he had found a letter in his file cautioning that his Vermont home could not be sold to "anyone of the Hebrew race." He said he "undoubtedly" read that letter when buying the property in 1974 but did not recall doing so. If the Senate believes that, what does this say of the sensitivity of a Supreme Court Justice?

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the entire New York Times editorial be included in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See Exhibit No. 1.)

Mr. METZENBAUM. The fact is—he did know about the covenant; he read the letter which described it—clearly and prominently—in the second paragraph.

But what did he do about it? Nothing.

When he was up for Senate confirmation, I believe he just was frankly embarrassed. He says he searched his files "after the conclusion of his testimony" and found the letter. We now know the letter was sent only after public disclosure of it. The issue is not simply whether he had a restrictive covenant on his property. The question is what did he tell the U.S. Senate concerning his knowledge of that fact. Did he tell us the truth or did he not? In this case, we have a restrictive covenant on a property purchased by a lawyer, a very prominent lawyer, a Justice of the Supreme Court. It is not a covenant just filed away in the courthouse record. It is in his deed. And the two letters are sent to him which mention it.

It is a temptation to ignore these issues. He is the President's nominee. He is already on the Court. He has the ABA's endorsement. These are arguments in favor of quick confirmation. But issues of integrity cannot be ignored and we in the Senate must meet our responsibility. It matters whether Justice Rehnquist told the truth to the Senate Judiciary Committee. The integrity of the Court is at stake. Integrity issues are always important when Senate confirmation is involved. But they are especially important here. We are confirming the head of the Supreme Court of the United States. The Senate cannot ignore the issue of integrity.

I am frank to say that I wish that I did not feel compelled to stand here on the floor today to talk about these issues of integrity, candor, and truthfulness with reference to a Justice of the Supreme Court who is up for confirmation as Chief Justice of that Court. But I do not know how I could look myself in the mirror if I had not discussed with my colleagues this entire question. It is so basic, it is so fundamental, it relates so directly to the question of whether or not Justice Rehnquist should be confirmed as our Chief Justice. I believe that I would have preferred, I know I would have preferred, not to have raised the questions concerning his integrity today. I do not think I had any alternative.

I yield the floor.

EXHIBIT No. 1

VALID DOUBTS ABOUT JUSTICE REHNQUIST

President Reagan has earned the right to try to shift the philosophy of the Supreme Court. But the Senate has an equal right to insist on high-quality appointments—particularly for Chief Justice, the noblest position in American law. The debate that begins today on the nomination of Justice William Rehnquist will properly turn on concerns beyond the mundanely partisan. The Senate's own investigation has raised valid questions about the nominee's credibility and convictions.

Justice Rehnquist has served on the high court for 15 years and there is no doubt about his legal ability or agreeable personality. But brilliance and courtesy are not enough. The Supreme Court's center seat demands a symbol of impartiality, fairness and integrity that resoundingly affirms America's commitment to equal justice. At critical junctures in his confirmation hearings, when senators sought to explore Justice Rehnquist's beliefs and past actions, he stonewalled with failures to remember and unpersuasive explanations of embarrassing facts.

As Assistant Attorney General in 1971, Mr. Rehnquist defended the Nixon Administration in Senate hearings into the military's surveillance of civilian protesters of the war in Vietnam. He testified then that plaintiffs suing the Defense Department had no case, yet still voted as a Supreme Court Justice in 1972 to throw out their lawsuit. When Senator Charles Mathias recently asked what role the nominee played in formulating the surveillance policy, he said that he couldn't remember. Does the Senate believe that?

Justice Rehnquist also testified this summer that he favored from the start the Supreme Court's 1954 school desegregation decision. A memorandum to the contrary that he wrote as a law clerk in 1952, he said, was not really his opinion but that of the late Justice Robert Jackson. Does the Senate believe that? And how does that testimony square with a memorandum that surfaced only last week in which Assistant Attorney General Rehnquist urged a constitutional amendment that would have permitted widespread evasion of this decision?

Confronted with restrictive covenants on two of his homes, the nominee first said he had been unaware of them. Then he wrote to the Senate Judiciary Committee that he had found a letter in his file cautioning that his Vermont home could not be sold to "anyone of the Hebrew race." He said he "undoubtedly" read that letter when buying the property in 1974 but did not recall doing so. If the Senate believes that, what does this say of the sensitivity of a Supreme Court Justice?

Accused of harassing black and Hispanic voters in Phoenix during turbulent elections in the 1960's, Justice Rehnquist has categorically denied over the years lodging even a legal challenge to any voter's qualifications. Yet a former Federal prosecutor has testified that he encountered Mr. Rehnquist in 1962 at a polling place where voters were registering complaints and that while denying impropriety, Mr. Rehnquist never denied having challenged persons attempting to vote. Can the Senate rest easy with this unresolved conflict?

Justice Rehnquist's unhappy record on matters of civil rights, civil liberties and judicial ethics is a legitimate concern. He has frustrated the Senate's inquiry with evasive and unconvincing replies. The Senate's pride and the serious task of passing a candidate for Chief Justice ought to make it demand more. This venerated post should not be conferred midst so much nagging doubt.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I ask unanimous consent that the following additional materials be printed in the RECORD in connection with the nomination of Justice Rehnquist.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ARTICLE IN NATION, SEPTEMBER 20, 1986

The almost daily revelations of examples of Justice William Rehnquist's deep hostility to civil rights would ordinarily be enough to kill a nomination for any public office. Assistant Attorney General William Bradford Reynolds was denied a short-term promotion in the Reagan Administration partly because of a civil rights record that is not much worse. Yet Rehnquist's nomination to a lifetime position as Chief Justice of the United States may sail through. Many senators think that since Rehnquist is already on the Court, his promotion will not change the vote count and, will therefore have little impact. Nothing could be more wrong or shortsighted.

First of all there is the obvious symbolism of the choice. The Court is in the forefront of the nation's quest for justice and liberty. Its mission, in Justice Lewis Powell's words, is to afford "protection [to] . . . the constitutional rights and liberties of individual citizens and minority groups against oppressive or discriminatory government action." Justice Rehnquist's record on and off the Court has been one of consistent opposition to every effort to provide such protection. To elevate to leadership someone with such a uniquely hostile record to the fundamental mission of the institution is to mock and disparage that mission. It amounts to saying to the nation, and indeed to the whole world, for whom the U.S. Supreme Court has been a model, that we don't take that mission seriously.

The symbolic effect of the appointment is increased by the fact that the Chief Justice speaks for the Federal judiciary, as well as the Court, to Congress, the legal profession and the nation and indeed the world.

There are also tangible considerations. The Chief Justice assigns the writing of opinions when he is in the majority. Like his predecessors, Rehnquist will probably write the most important opinions himself and will probably take on a large number of them. (He reportedly writes easily and quickly.) In the past, when he has spoken for the Court in a decision restricting someone's rights, he has used sweeping and often vague language, as in a recent case refusing to recognize a right to privacy against electronic tracking devices. The scope and ramifications of such opinions are broad and difficult to confine.

Conversely, on the rare occasions when Rehnquist has joined his colleagues in upholding someone's rights—and invariably these have been decisions in which the other eight are unanimous—he has defined the right narrowly, as in a recent case involving the rights of illegitimate children to child support. Rehnquist has set something of a record for lone dissents in decisions upholding civil rights. Given the opinion-assignment power wielded by the Chief Justice, Rehnquist is likely to indulge himself far less in such largely ineffectual gestures, and instead join the majority, writing the opinion himself or assigning a kindred conservative.

The role of assigning opinions gives the chief power over the other Justices, whose place in history once they ascend the Court is determined by when and what they write. Warren Burger was said to have used his power to punish Justices whose votes had displeased him.

As chief, Rehnquist's influence will be greater with new Justices than with those now on the bench. Because he may serve as Chief Justice for from ten to twenty years, at least five new Justices will join the Court during his reign, and probably more. No matter who appoints them or who they are, they will feel the power of the Chief Justice, particularly in their early years. Moreover, some Chief Justices, such as William Howard Taft, influenced appointments to both the lower Federal judiciary and the Supreme Court itself. Given Rehnquist's activist history, he may well emulate Taft in this respect.

Finally, the Chief Justice heads a vast adminsitrative apparatus: the Federal judiciary. He designates the members of special judicial bodies, including the Temporary Emergency Court of Appeals and the secret Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act court. He also presides over the Judicial Conference, a policy-making body which proposes and evaluates rules and legislation affecting the Federal courts. He appoints the membership and staff of the conference and of its twenty judicial committees. These groups play a significant role in the administration of justice in this country, for they deal with matters such as class-action rules, discovery, probation and sentencing. The importance of this authority is magnified by the Chief Justice's role as the spokesman to Congress on these and other legislative matters affecting court administration.

The power of the Chief Justice of the United States may not be visible, but it is very real. The Rehnquist nomination should not be dismissed as a minor shift in the Court's seating arrangements. The lifetime leadership of the third branch of our government deserves the closest scrutiny.

HERMAN SCHWARTZ.

LEGAL DEFENSE FUND,
Washington, DC, August 8, 1986.

Hon. HOWARD M. METZENBAUM,
Dirksen Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR METZENBAUM: I am writing to provide the additional information requested at the August 1, 1986 hearing regarding the nomination of Justice Rehnquist to serve as Chief Justice.

(1) We have identified 33 cases in which Justice Rehnquist voted in favor of a black complainant in a race discrimination case. Of these, 31 were unanimous opinions; in the two remaining cases only a single Justice voted against the black complainant. A list of these decisions is set out in Table A.

(2) We have identified 14 race discrimination cases brought by or on behalf of blacks in which Justice Rehnquist cast the deciding vote. These include nine cases in which the rest of the Court was evenly divided, and four cases in which, because only eight Justices participated, a vote by Justice Rehnquist in support of the complainant would have had the effect of upholding by an equally divided vote a favorable decision in the Court below. In the remaining case, Arlington Heights v. MCDH, Justice Rehnquist's vote determined whether the lower court would be permitted to consider on remand the plaintiffs' racial discrimination claim. In every one of these cases Justice Rehnquist cast the deciding vote against the civil rights claimant. None of these cases involved a dispute about quotas, and none of these cases concerned whether a particular statute or constitutional provision forbade practices with a discriminatory affect, or were limited to instances of intentional discrimination. A list of these decisions is set forth in Table B.

(3) At last week's hearing we urged the Committee to review with particular care Justice Rehnquist's record regarding the interpretation and application of twentieth century civil rights statutes. We believe that aspect of the nominee's record is important for several reasons. First, because such cases involve considerations of statutory construction, and are thus governed by well established rules of statutory construction, a nominee's constitutional philosophy should have little impact. Second, Justice Rehnquist has explained that his decisions on constitutional cases dervies in part from a reluctance to override the will of the majority as expressed in legislation; in statutory cases, however, it is the will of the majority as expressed by Congress which the Supreme Court is asked to enforce. Third, prior to becoming a member of the Court, Justice Rehnquist on several occasions voiced opposition to the adoption of certain civil rights measures. Justice Rehnquist's actual record with regard to statutory civil rights cases is the best evidence as to whether he has been influenced as a judge by his personal disagreement with this legislation.

We have identified a total of 83 cases since 1971 in which there has been some disagreement within the Court as to the interpretation or application of a twentieth century civil rights statute.[1] These cases involve more than a dozen different laws covering employment, housing, voting, and federal assistance programs, and prohibiting discrimination on a variety of grounds, including race, sex, national origin, age, and disability. Only four of these cases involved a dispute about quotas or affirmative action.[2] Only two of these cases concerned whether a particular statute forbade practices with a discriminatory effect, or was limited to instances of intentional discrimination.[3] Because these are cases in which the interpretation or application of a civil rights statute was sufficiently debatable that members of this Court reached different conclusions, it would not, of course, be reasonable to expect Justice Rehnquist to vote in every case for the result more favorable to the civil rights plaintiffs. The Court as a whole reached such a favorable result in slightly less than half of these cases.

Among the 83 cases in which members of the Court have disagreed about the interpretation or application of a twentieth century civil rights statute, Justice Rehnquist has joined on 80 occasions for the interpretation or application least favorable to minorities, women, the elderly, or the disabled. In two cases, Albermarle Paper Company v. Moody and Dothard v. Rawlinson, Justice Rehnquist's interpretation of Title VII was less favorable to minorities and women then the standard adopted by the majority in each of these cases, but more favorable than the standard and result urged by a sole dissenter in each case. In only one of the 83 disputed cases, Cannon v. University of Chicago, did Justice Rehnquist vote for the interpretation of the law that was advanced by the civil rights plaintiffs. A complete list of the 83 cases is set out in Table C.

There are a number of Supreme Court decisions which, although they originally arose out of a civil rights controversy were resolved by the Court on another basis, were disposed of in a manner not relevant to the attached tables. In categorizing cases for the tables, some judgment calls were at times required, but they did not affect the overall pattern revealed by the study.

Yours sincerely,

ELAINE R. JONES.
ERIC SCHNAPPER.

REHNQUIST DECISIONS IN FAVOR OF BLACK COMPLAINANTS

I. UNANIMOUS DECISIONS

Ham v. South Carolina, 409 U.S. 524 (1973) (black criminal defendant entitled to voir dire the jurors about their racial attitudes) (9-0 opinions for defendant) (Rehnquist wrote majority opinion).

Test v. United States, 420 U.S. 28 (1975) (9-0 decision holding criminal defendant entitled to inspect jury roles to prove discrimination) (Rehnquist joined per curiam decision).

McDonnell-Douglas v. Green, 411 U.S. 792 (1973) (9-0 opinion overturning dismissal of discrimination claim and setting standards for remand) (Rehnquist joined majority opinion).

Chandler v. Roudebush, 425 U.S. 840 (1976) (9-0 decision holding that federal employee alleging discrimination entitled to trial de novo) (Rehnquist joined majority opinion).

Teamsters v. United States, 431 U.S. 324 (1976) (finding of intentional discrimination) (9-0 decision finding discrimination) (Rehnquist joined majority opinion).

Carson v. American Brands, 450 U.S. 79 (1981) (9-0 decision holding refusal to approve Title VII consent decree is an appealable order) (Rehnquist joined majority opinion).

EEOC v. Shell Oil Co., 466 U.S. 54 (1984) (9-0 decision sustaining EEOC subpoena) (Rehnquist joined concurring opinion).

Cooper v. Federal Reserve Board, 81 L. Ed. 2d 718 (1984) (8-0 decision holding rejection of class claim does not bar individual claim) (Rehnquist joined majority opinion).

University of Tennessee v. Elliott, 54 USLW 5084 (1986) (9-0 decision holding that unreviewed state administrative proceedings do not have preclusive effect on Title VII claims) (Rehnquist joined majority opinion).

Bazemore v. Friday, 54 USLW 4972 (1986) (9-0 decision holding that under Title VII the defendant Extension Service had a duty to eradicate salary disparities between white and black workers that originated prior to the effective date of Title VII) (Rehnquist joined with majority).

U.S. v. Scotland Neck Board of Education, 407 U.S. 484 (1972) (creation of separate school district prevented desegregation) (9-0 decision finds new district unconstitutional) (Rehnquist joined concurring opinion).

Norwood v. Harrison, 413 U.S. 455 (1973) (9-0 decision holds states may not provide textbooks to segregated private schools) (Rehnquist joined majority opinion).

Milliken v. Bradley, 418 U.S. 717 (1974) (9-0 opinion upholding remedial programs for segregated school system) (Rehnquist joined majority opinion).

White v. Regester, 412 U.S. 755 (1973) (9-0 opinion held that at-large plan unconstitutionally diluted votes of blacks and hispanics) (Rehnquist joined majority opinion).

Connor v. Waller, 421 U.S. 656 (1975) (9-0 decision holding redistricting plan is subject to §5 of Voting Rights Act) (Rehnquist joined majority opinion).

Briscoe v. Bell, 432 U.S. 404 (1977) (9-0 holding state cannot challenge §5 coverage) (Rehnquist joined majority opinion).

Connor v. Coleman, 440 U.S. 612 (1979) (8-1 decision directing district court to frame redistricting plan) (dissenter would have granted stronger remedy) (Rehnquist joined majority opinion).

Blanding v. DuBose, 454 U.S. 393 (1982) (9-0 decision holding letter was not request for preclearance within meaning of §5) (Rehnquist's separate opinion concurred in the result but denounced §5).

McCain v. Lybrand, 465 U.S. 236 (1983) (9-0 decision holding mailing of statute to Attorney General did not constitute §5 submission absenting request for preclearance) (Rehnquist concurred in judgment).

NAACP v. Hampton County, 84 L. Ed 2d 124 (1985) (9-0 decision holding election law changes subject to §5) (Rehnquist concurred in judgment).

Hunter v. Underwood, 85 L. Ed. 2d 222 (1985) (8-0 decision holding state law disenfranchising misdemeanants unconstitutional due to racial purpose) (Rehnquist wrote majority opinion).

Thornburg v. Gingles, 54 USLW 4877 (1986) (9-0 decision upholding §2 challenge to general at-large districts) (Rehnquist joined majority opinion as to those districts but urged adoption of standard more favorable to defendants).

Trafficante v. Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., 409 U.S. 205 (1972) (9-0 decision holding whites may challenge exclusion of blacks under Title VIII) (Rehnquist joined majority opinion).

Hills v. Gautreaux, 425 U.S. 284 (1976) (8-0 decision upholding authority of district court to order multi-city housing remedy) (Rehnquist joined majority opinion).

Havens Realty v. Coleman, 455 U.S. 363 (1981) (9-0 decision holding "testers" can sue under Title VIII) (Rehnquist joined majority opinion).

REPORT ON THE CIVIL LIBERTIES RECORD OF JUSTICE WILLIAM H. REHNQUIST

(Prepared by the American Civil Liberties Union)

PREFACE

It is important that the reader understand what this report is and what it is not.

Pursuant to ACLU policy, established by the National Board of Directors of the American Civil Liberties Union, the Union does not take any position on candidates for elective or appointive office at the national, state or local level. At the same time, the Board has directed the national staff to publish reports on the civil liberties records of individuals nominated for certain offices, including positions on the Supreme Court. The purpose of such reports, like the periodic publication by the ACLU of legislative voting records on civil liberties issues, is to provide relevant information to the public. The purpose is not to suggest that the civil liberties record of any candidate ought to determine anyone's position on such candidacy.

This is the report of the civil liberties record of U.S. Supreme Court Justice William Rehnquist, who has been nominated for the position of Chief Justice of the United States. The ACLU has not, and will not, take a postion on whether the Senate should consent to his appointment.

Justice Rehnquist has served on the Supreme Court for some fifteen years and has authored and joined a large number of majority, concurring and dissenting opinions. It is not possible to summarize even briefly every opinion he has written or joined, nor is it even possible to deal with most of those opinions in a report of manageable length. Therefore no effort is made to be comprehensive. Rather, the report presents a description of Justice Rehnquist's judicial philosophy and seeks to explain how it shapes his record on civil liberties questions by focusing on those opinions which Justice Rehnquist authored alone. The ACLU believes that these opinions fairly reflect Justice Rehnquist's civil liberties record.

Justice Rehnquist has a very clear and comprehensive position on the role of the Court and the nature of the American constitutional system of government. His judicial philosophy is not shared in its entirety or even in its central features by any other person who now sits on the Court or who has served with Justice Rehnquist, including Justices who often vote with him. For that reason, his position emerges most clearly in the opinions that he has written only for himself. This report quotes extensively from these opinions so as to present Justice Rehnquist's position on civil liberties in his own words. Unless otherwise noted the opinions of Justice Rehnquist quoted from and cited are dissents in which Justice Rehnquist speaks only for himself.

A reader introduced in reviewing the entire record might want to begin with the cases cited below which suggest the range of opinions that Justice Rehnquist has authored or joined. In the cases listed Justice Rehnquist authored the opinion unless otherwise noted.

Over the past fifteen years, Justice Rehnquist has authored or joined a small number of opinions of the Court which have expanded civil liberties. In almost all of these cases the issue was one of statutory, rather than constitutional, construction, and in many he issued concurring opinions joining the holding on narrower grounds. See e.g.:

Nashville Gas Co. v. Satty, 434 U.S. 136 (1977) (Discrimination under Title VII when women denied senority when returning from mandatory pregnancy leave.)

Meritor Saving Bank v. Vinson, 54 U.S. L.W. 4703 (June 19, 1986) (Title VII prohibits sexual harassment.)

Paul v. Davis, 424 U.S. 693 (1976) (Rejecting right of privacy as to disclosure of unadjudicated arrest records.)

INS v. Delgado, 466 U.S. 210 (1984) (INS factory searches do not constitute either detention or seizure.)

Justice Rehnquist has also authored and joined a number of minority opinions which would have limited civil liberties. See e.g.:

County of Washington v. Gunther, 452 U.S. 161, 181-204 (1981) (Title VII does not apply to intentional sex-based wage discrimination.)

Michigan v. Jackson, 89 L. Ed. 631, 643-647 (1986) (Limiting right to counsel.)

Hill v. Stone, 421 U.S. 239, 302-308 (1975) (Approving restrictions on voting based on wealth.)

Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, 171-178 (1973) (No right of abortion in the Constitution.)

Payton v. N.Y., 445 U.S. 573, 620-621 (1980) (Warrantless nonconsensual entry into a home to make a felony arrest does not violate Fourth Amendment.)

A report which included detailed consideration of these and other cases would not present a different view of Justice Rehnquist's civil liberties record.

SUMMARY

Two propositions are central to Justice Rehnquist's civil liberties record and the degree to which his views differ from those of every Justice with whom he has served on the Court. First, he believes that it is far worse to hold a statute unconstitutional than to deny an individual his/her civil rights. Second, he believes that the Bill of Rights as applied to the states prevents them from encroaching on the rights of individuals only when the state action is "irrational."

In Justice Rehnquist's opinion, the primary responsibility of the Supreme Court is to protect the freedom of action of the states against the actions of the federal government and the claims of rights by individual citizens. In interpreting federal legislation or actions of the federal courts which affect the powers of the states, he interprets the Constitution so as to preserve state autonomy. In dealing with individual liberty, on the other hand, he does not believe that the courts should go beyond the literal words of the Constitution or the original intentions of the Framers. Thus, he rejects the view that the Supreme Court has a special obligation to defend individual liberty, and rejects the position, often expressed in the opinions of the Court, that the Bill of Rights as a whole, and the First Amendment in particular, have a favored place in the constitutional scheme.

This approach to the Constitution—viewing it as the creation of the majority whose primary objective was to preserve the power of the states—also determines Justice Rehnquist's view of the Civil War Amendments. Every other sitting Justice has come to accept the position that the Fourteenth Amendment "incorporates" the major provisions of the Bill of Rights and therefore requires the states to observe these limits on governmental action to the same degree that the federal government is limited. Justice Rehnquist, in marked contrast, views the Civil War Amendments as having only very limited applicability. Writing on a clean slate, Justice Rehnquist would reject the doctrine of incorporation entirely, and would permit the states to restrict the liberty of their citizens within limits proscribed by their own state constitutions and those few rights in the federal constitution that apply explicitly to the states. Justice Rehnquist mentions this position only in passing in his opinions, and focuses instead on the very narrow reading that he would give to the applicability of the Bill of Rights to the states.

The Supreme Court, with only Justice Rehnquist dissenting, has consistently interpreted the Equal Protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment to prohibit discrimination on a variety of "suspect" grounds, including sex and citizenship. By contrast, Justice Rehnquist holds that the Amendment applies only to race discrimination, and even as to race only when segregation was the official policy of the state.

The Due Process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, again with only Justice Rehnquist in dissent, has been held to require the states to observe the protections of liberty found in the Bill of Rights. In Justice Rehnquist's view the Amendment "incorporates" only the most fundamental principles of the Bill of Rights. State legislatures have wide latitude to determine what actions to take. In contrast to his Supreme Court colleagues who subject such legislation to heightened scrutiny of various kinds, Justice Rehnquist believes that the role of the Supreme Court in cases involving challenges to state action on constitutional grounds is limited to determining if the legislation is "irrational." If it is not, the Court must uphold the statute. Applying this rational basis test, Justice Rehnquist would permit the states to restrict freedom of speech or press in ways that would, in his view, violate the First Amendment if done by the federal government. This approach has led Justice Rehnquist to uphold the actions of states in the area of religion whether they expanded or limited religious liberty as long as he could articulate a rational reason for the state action.

Because of his belief that such legislation need only not be "irrational," Justice Rehnquist has routinely voted to uphold the constitutionality of state statutes not only when a majority of the court or a large minority took the same position, but also when all of his colleagues on the Supreme Court agreed the law violated the Constitution.

In addition, Justice Rehnquist holds a number of substantive views which affect his interpretation of civil liberties. He believes, for example, that the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment prohibits government aid to a particular religion, but does not prohibit legislation whose purpose is to support all religions. He also believes that commercial speech is not entitled to any special constitutional protection.

The civil liberties record of Justice Rehnquist is most succinctly summarized in his opinion of how a Justice should weigh the relative harms of denying a person rights under the Constitution and striking down a legislative act:

"An error in mistakenly sustaining the constitutionality of a particular enactment, while wrongfully depriving the individual of a right secured to him by the Constitution, nonetheless does so by simply letting stand a duly enacted law of a democratically chosen legislative body. The error resulting from a mistaken upholding of an individual's constitutional claim against the validity of a legislative enactment is a good deal more serious. For the result in such a case is not to leave standing a law duly enacted by a representative assembly, but to impose upon the Nation the judicial fiat of a majority of a court of judges whose connection with the popular will is remote at best."—Furman v. Georgia, 408 U.S. 238, 468 (1972) (three Justices joining in the dissenting opinion).

To the extent that the Bill of Rights and the Civil War Amendments were designed precisely to limit the popular will when it impinges on individual rights, Justice Rehnquist's view is inconsistent with the functional purpose of the Bill of Rights and the generally accepted role of the federal courts in enforcing it.

THE CIVIL LIBERTIES RECORD OF JUSTICE REHNQUIST

This is a report by the American Civil Liberties Union of the civil liberties record of Justice William H. Rehnquist. It first presents a description of the basic principles which Justice Rehnquist brings to the adjudication of claims that actions violate civil liberties or civil rights. It then deals with the role of the Fourteenth Amendment, which is central both to the protection of civil liberties and to understanding why Justice Rehnquist so often takes a position on civil liberties issues which finds no other support on the Court. Finally, the report describes his views on the First Amendment which depart from those of the rest of the court.

PROTECTING CIVIL LIBERTIES

In his Supreme Court opinions and his extra-judicial writings, Justice Rehnquist rejects the notion that the Supreme Court has a special responsibility to protect civil liberties to protect the individual against the excesses of the majority. Rather, he maintains that the Court's obligation is to protect the primary political structures of the government, which include the independence of the states and majority rule. This approach is illustrated, for example, by the narrow reading that Justice Rehnquist gives to the 5th clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. The power given to the Congress in that clause to take actions necessary to effectuate the purposes of the Amendment is viewed narrowly so as to protect the rights of the states to determine their own political structures and procedures. See City of Rome v. U.S. 446 U.S. 156, 168 (1980) (dissent joined by Justice Stewart). Doubts are to be resolved in favor of permitting the will of the legislature to be effectuated and the automony of the states protected. As Justice Rehnquist explains in a dissenting opinion in a death penalty case (joined by three other Justices):

"Whatever its precise rationale, today's holding necessarily brings into sharp relief the fundamental question of the role of judicial review in a democratic society. How can government by the elected representatives of the people coexist with the power of the federal judiciary, whose members are constitutionally insulated from responsiveness to the popular will, to declare invalid laws duly enacted by the popular branches of government?

"The answer, of course, is found in Hamilton's Federalist Paper No. 78 and in Chief Justice Marshall's classic opinion in Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch 137, 2 L. Ed 60 (1803). An oft-told story since then, it bears summarization once more. Sovereignty resides ultimately in the people as a whole and, by adopting through their States a written Constitution for the Nation and subsequently adding amendments to that instrument, they have both granted certain powers to the National Government, and denied other powers to the National and the State Governments. Courts are exercising no more than the judicial function conferred upon them by Art. III of the Constitution when they assess, in a case before them, whether or not a particular legislative enactment is within the authority granted by the Constitution to the enacting body, and whether it runs afoul of some limitation placed by the Constitution on the authority granted by the Constitution to the enacting body, and whether it runs afoul of some limitation placed by the Constitution on the authority of that body. For the theory is that the people themselves have spoken in the Constitution, and therefore its commands are superior to the commands of the legislature, which is merely an agent of the people.

"The Founding Fathers thus wisely sought the best of both worlds, the undeniable benefits of both democratic self-government and individual rights protected against possible excesses of that form of government.

"The courts in cases properly before them have been entrusted under the Constitution with the last word, short of constitutional amendment, as to whether a law passed by the legislature conforms to the Constitution. But just because courts in general, and this Court in particular, do have the last word, the admonition of Mr. Justice Stone dissenting in United States v. Butler must be constantly borne in mind:

'[W]hile unconstitutional exercises of power by the executive and legislative branches of the government is subject to judicial restraint, the only check upon our own exercise of power is our own sense of self-restraint.' 297 US 1, 78–79, 80 L Ed 477, 495, 56 S Ct 312, 102 ALR 914 (1936).

"Rigorous attention to the limits of this Courts authority is likewise enjoined because of the natural desire that beguiles judges along with other human beings into imposing their own views of goodness, truth, and justice upon others. Judges differ only in that they have the power, if not the authority, to enforce their desires. This is doubtless why nearly two centuries of judicial precedent from this Court counsel the sparing use of that power. The most expansive reading of the leading constitutional cases does not remotely suggest that this Court has been granted a roving commission, either by the Founding Fathers or by the framers of the Fourteenth Amendment, to strike down laws that are based upon notions of policy or morality suddenly found unacceptable by a majority of this Court. The Framers of the Constitution would doubtless have agreed with the great English political philosopher John Stuart Mill when he observed:

"The disposition of mankind, whether as rulers or as fellow-citizens, to impose their own opinions and inclinations as a rule of conduct on others, is so energetically supported by some of the best and by some of the worst feelings incident to human nature, that it is hardly ever kept under restraint by anything but want of power." On Liberty 28 (1855).

"A separate reason for deference to the legislative judgment is the consequence of human error on the part of the judiciary with respect to the constitutional issue before it. Human error there is bound to be, judges being men and women, and men and women being what they are. But an error in mistakenly sustaining the constitutionality of a particular enactment, while wrongfully depriving the individual of rights secured to him by the Constitution, nonetheless does so by simply letting stand a duly enacted law of a democratically chosen legislative body. The error resulting from a mistaken upholding of an individual's constitutional claim against the validity of a legislative enactment is a good deal more serious. For the result in such a case is not to leave standing a law duly enacted by a representative assembly, but to impose upon the Nation the judicial fiat of a majority of a court of judges whose connection with the popular will is remote at best.

"The task of judging constitutional cases imposed by Art. III cannot for this reason be avoided, but it must surely be approached with the deepest humility and genuine deference to legislative judgment." Furman v. Georgia, 408 U.S. 238, 466 (1972). See also Fry v. U.S. 421 U.S. 542, 549-559 (1975); Carey v. Population Services International, 431 U.S. 678, 717-719 (1977).

Justice Rehnquist also rejects the view that the courts should interpret the Bill of Rights in light of changing morality and circumstances. In an article challenging the notion of a "living Constitution," Justice Rehnquist sums up his view of this doctrine:

"The brief writer's version of the living Constitution, in the last analysis is a formula for an end run around popular government. To the extent that it makes possible an individual's persuading one or more appointed federal judges to impose on other individuals a rule of conduct that the popularly elected branches of government would not have enacted and the voters have not and would not have embodied in the Constitution, the brief writer's version of the living Constitution is genuinely corrosive of the fundamental values of our democratic society." Rehnquist, "The Notion of a Living Constitution," 54 Texas Law Review 693, 706 (May 1976).

In this view, protection for new rights as reflected in new moral values should come exclusively through legislation or constitutional amendment and not by the Supreme Court interpreting a "living" Constitution. "[S]urely," Justice Rehnquist wrote in dissenting from a decision of the Court holding that it violated the Fourteenth Amendment to exclude women from juries, "constitutional adjudication is a more canalized function than enforcing as against the States this Courts perception of modern life." Taylor v. Louisiana, 419 U.S. 522, 542 (1975). In the article quoted just above, he puts the point more fully as follows:

"It seems to me that it is almost impossible, after reading the record of the Founding Fathers' debates in Philadelphia, to conclude that they intended the Constitution itself to suggest answers to the manifold problems that they knew would confront succeeding generations. The Constitution that they drafted was indeed intended to endure indefinitely, but the reason for this very well-founded hope was the general language by which national authority was granted to Congress and the Presidency. These two branches were to furnish the motive power within the federal system, which was in turn to coexist with the state governments; the elements of government having a popular constituency were looked to for the solution of the numerous and varied problems that the future would bring. Limitations were indeed placed upon both federal and state governments in the form of both a division of powers and express protection for individual rights. These limitations, however, were not themselves designed to make certain that the constituent branches, when they attempted to solve those problems, should not transgress these fundamental limitations." Id. 699.

Justice Rehnquist does not believe that legistation challenged on the grounds that it violates constitutional rights should be subjected to strict scrutiny. Rather he believes that the Supreme Court should not invalidate legislation on constitutional grounds unless the Court is sure that the Constitution compels that result. Actions of legislatures should be accorded a presumption of constitutionality. Justice Rehnquist in a number of lone dissents quotes from McGowan v. Maryland, 366 U.S. 420 (1961) which he believes establishes this principle even when individual rights are at stake. Here is a typical statement of his position:

"State legislatures are presumed to have acted within their constitutional power despite the fact that, in practice, their laws result in some inequality. A statutory discrimination will not be set aside if any state of facts reasonably may be conceived to justify it. McGowan v. Maryland, 366 US 420, 425-426, 6 L Ed 2d 393, 398-399, 81 S Ct 1101 (1961). Under this test, so long as the 'discrimination is founded upon a reasonable distinction, or difference in state policy.' Allied Stores of Ohio, Inc. v. Bowers, 358 US 522, 528, 3 L Ed 2d 480, 485, 79 S Ct 437 (1959). The Court will not attempt to weigh its social value or determine whether the classification might have been more finely drawn. Ferguson v. Skrupa, 372 US 726 10 L Ed 2d 93, 83 S Ct 1028, 95 ALR 2d 1347 (1963). However, this salutary principle has been departed from by the Court in recent years, as pointed out in its opinion here, where the Court has felt that the classification has affected what it conceives to be 'fundamental personal rights.'" Weber v. Aetna Casualty & Surety Co., 406 U.S. 164, 178-179 (1972). See also Zablocki v. Redhail 434 U.S. 374, 407-411 (1978); Sugarman v. Dougall 413 U.S. 634, 649-664 (1973).

Actions of administrators are assumed to be valid: "I think that the Court's approach reverses the presumption of constitutionality accorded acts of the States," Justice Rehnquist writes in a lone dissent. "The burden is not upon the State to demonstrate that its procedures are consistent with the Fourth Amendment, but upon respondent to demonstrate that they are not." Delaware v. Prouse 440 U.S. 648, 667 (1979). Administrators must be given very wide latitude to act. The role of the federal courts is limited to enjoining actions that are specifically prohibited by the Constitution. Hutto v. Finney 437 U.S. 678, 710-714 (1978). Those who wish to protect new rights, such as those of women, the right to an abortion, or the rights of aliens or prisoners should look to the legislatures or the constitutional amendment process rather than to existing constitutional principles as applied by the courts to new conditions.

Justice Rehnquist believes that in appropriate circumstances the Court should look beyond the original intent of the Framers and should not be bound by a literal reading of the Constitution. Where he differs from those who believe that a primary function of the Supreme Court is to protect civil liberties is on the question of when to rely exclusively on presumed original intent only and apply a literal reading of the Constitution. Confronted with claims of civil liberties or equal protection, Justice Rehnquist declines to go beyond the intent of the Framers as he sees it. In contrast, he goes beyond original intent to take account of changing conditions when the issue is the ability of the states to avoid federal regulation. (Compare, Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, 171-178 (1973) (abortion) Payton v. N.Y. 445 U.S. 573, 620-621 (1980) (privacy), Woodson v. North Carolina 428 U.S. 280, 308-324 (1976) (death penalty), Carey v. Population Services International 431 U.S. 678, 717-719 (1977) (contraceptive services), with Nevada v. Hall 440 U.S. 410, 432-443 (1979) (states rights) (dissent joined by Chief Justice Burger). He requires an explicit and unmisfeasable reference in the Constitution to uphold individual rights, but imposes no such requirement when the question is whether federal legislation impermissibly restricts the power of the states. (See, Fry v. U.S. 421 U.S. 542, 549-559 (1975)).

THE FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT

It is impossible to exaggerate either the role of the Fourteenth Amendment in protecting civil liberties in the United States, or the degree to which Justice Rehnquist's view of that Amendment explains his civil liberties records.

The Bill of Rights originally applied only to the federal government. Although there were earlier hints of this position, it was not until the 1930's that the Supreme Court began to systematically "incorporate" the Bill of Rights into the Fourteenth Amendment. Over the past 30 years the Court has held that almost all of the elements of the Bill of Rights apply to the states in the same way as they apply to the Federal government. For example, whatever restrictions the First Amendment puts on actions of the federal government it also places on actions of the states. Relying on this doctrine, the Supreme Court has struck down numerous statutes and state actions which discriminate against classes of people has held unconstitutional state and local statutes which violate rights both explicitly mentioned in the Bill of Rights, such as freedom of religion and the right to be secure in one's home, as well as rights which the court has found implicit in the Constitution, such as the right to travel and to privacy. This doctrine of "selective incorporation" was initially controversial both on and off the Supreme Court. On the Court, Justice Frankfurter and Harlen led the fight against full or selective incorporation. For most the fight is over; "incorporation" is now accepted as the settled interpretation by every sitting Supreme Court Justice but Justice Rehnquiust. See, Wallace v. Jaffree 86 L Ed 2d 29, 38 (1985).[1]

[1] See also Michael Kent Curtis, No State Shall Abidge: The Fourteenth Amendment and the Bill of Rights (Durham, NC: Duke University Press, 1986).

Justice Rehnquist's view is totally different. He is very skeptical of the doctrine of incorporation and continues in his optinions to dismiss it as an error. Although he does not seem to advocate the complete abandonment of the doctrine or to base his opinions on such a view, he does reach his conclusions on issues before the court based on a very narrow reading of the role of the Fourteenth Amendment and of "incorporation."

The key phrases of the Fourteenth Amendment read as follows:

"[N]or shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."

The Supreme Court has interpreted the first clause as "incorporating" many elements of the Bill of Rights, and the second as preventing discrimination on a number of "suspect" grounds in addition to race. In assessing the constitutionality of statutes it often blends the requirements of the two sections. Justice Rehnquist insists on their strict separation and a very narrow reading of each one. In one of his many dissents in cases applying the Fourteenth Amendment to the states and limiting state action Justice Rehnquist puts his view this way:

"I would view this legislative judgment in the light of the traditional presumption of validity. I think that under the Equal Protection Clause the statute need pass only the 'rational basis test,' Dandridge v. Williams, 397 U.S. 471, 485, 90 S.Ct. 1153, 1161, 25 L.Ed.2d 491 (1970), and that under the Due Process Clause it need only be shown that it bears a rational relation to a constitutionally permissible objective. Williamson v. Lee Optical Co., 348 U.S. 483, 491, 75 S.Ct. 461, 466, 99 L.Ed. 563 (1955); Ferguson v. Skrupa, 372 U.S. 726, 733, 83 S. Ct. 1028, 1032, 10 L.Ed.2d 93 (1963) (Harlan, J., concurring). The statute so viewed as a permissible exercise of the State's power to regulate family life and to assure the support of minor children, despite its possible imprecision in the extreme cases envisioned in the concurring opinions." Zablocki v. Redhail, 434 U.S. at 407 (1978).

His view of the Equal Protection Clause is that it relates only to race and not to discrimination on other grounds:

"The Equal Protection Clause was adopted as a part of the Fourteenth Amendment in 1868. Five years later Mr. Justice Miller delivered this Court's initial construction of that amendment in his classic opinion in Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wass 36, 21 L Ed 394 (1873). After setting forth an account of the adoption of that amendment, he described the account as a 'recapitulation of events, almost too recent to be called history, but which are familiar to us all.' 16 Wall, at 71, 21 L Ed at 407. Referring to the Equal Protection Clause, he said: 'We doubt very much whether any action of a State not directed by way of discrimination against the negroes as a class, or on account of their race, will ever be held to come within the purview of this provision.' 16 Wall, at 81, 21 L Ed at 410.

"In nearly 100 years of subsequent adjudication concerning this clause, the Court has adhered to the notion expressed in the Slaughter-House Cases that racial classifications are 'suspect.' See e.g., Loving v. Virginia, 388 US 1, 18 L Ed 2d 1010, 87 S Ct 1817 (1967). But during that same period of time, this Court has proved Mr. Justice Miller a bad prophet with respect to nonracial classifications." Weber 406 U.S. at 178.

Rejecting this expansion, he has dissented, often alone, in a long list of cases in which the Supreme Court has applied equal protection analysis to a variety of classifications and struck down state laws as violative of the equal protection mandate of the Fourteenth Amendment.

Even as to race, Justice Rehnquist takes a narrow view, holding that Equal Protection applies only to those evils which were, in his opinion, envisioned by the Framers of the Amendment and only to remedies aimed at those specific evils. Thus, in his view, it does not permit actions to overcome de facto segregation, or to issue orders affecting entire school systems unless there was a formal, system-wide "dual" system of white and black schools. Justice Rehnquist has, as a result, dissented in major school desegregation cases. See Columbus Board of Education v. Penick, 443 U.S. 449, 489-525 (1979) (Justice Powell joined in dissent) and Keyes v. School District No. 1, 413 U.S. 189, 254-265 (1973). Justice Rehnquist also dissents from the nearly unanimous holdings of the Court that the fifth clause of the Fourteenth Amendment giving the Congress the power to take steps necessary to effectuate the objections of the Amendment is very broad. He thus dissented from an opinion ordering the City of Rome to change its electoral system:

"Congress unquestionably has the power to prohibit and remedy state action which intentionally deprives citizens of Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendment rights. But unless these powers are wholly uncanalized, it cannot be appropriate remedial legislation for Congress to prohibit Rome from structuring its government in the manner as its population sees fit absent a finding or unrebutted presumption that Rome has been or is, intentionally discriminating against its black citizens. Rome has simply committed no constitutional violations, as this Court has defined them.

"More is at stake then sophistry at its worst in the Court's conclusion that requiring the local government to structure its political system in a manner that most effectively enhances black political strength serves to remedy or prevent constitutional wrongs on the part of the local government. . . . The enforcement provisions of the Civil War Amendments were not premised on the notion that Congress could empower a later generation of blacks to 'get even' for wrongs inflicted on their forebears. What is now at stake in the city of Rome is the preference of the black community to be represented by a black. This Court has never elevated such a notion, by no means confined to blacks, to the status of a constitutional rights. See Whitcomb v. Chavis, 403 US 124, 29 L Ed 2d 363, 92 S Ct 1858 (1971).

* * * * *

"The Constitution imposes no obligation on local governments to erect institutional safeguards to ensure the election of a black candidate. Nor do I believe that Congress can do so, absent a finding that this obligation would be necessary to remedy constitutional violations on the part of the local government.

* * * * *

"To permit congressional power to prohibit the conduct challenged in this case requires state and local governments to cede far more of their powers to the Federal Government than the Civil War Amendments ever envisioned; and it requires the judiciary to cede far more of its power to interpret and enforce the Constitution than ever envisioned. The intrusion is all the more offensive to our constitutional system when it is recognized that the only values fostered are debatable assumptions about political theory which should properly be left to the local democratic process." City of Rome v. U.S., 446 U.S. 156.

Justice Rehnquist grudgingly accepts the doctrine of specific incorporation as settled constitutional law, but interprets its consequences in a narrow way which has no other adherents on the court. In an opinion for the Court, Justice Stevens described the position to which Justice Rehnquist takes exception:

"Before analyzing the precise issue that is presented to us, it is nevertheless appropriate to recall how firmly embedded in our constitutional jurisprudence is the proposition that the several States have no greater power to restrain the individual freedoms protected by the First Amendment than does the Congress of the United States.

"As is plain from its text, the First Amendment was adopted to curtail the power of Congress to interfere with the individual's freedom to believe, to worship, and to express himself in accordance with the dictates of his own conscience. Until the Fourteenth Amendment was added to the Constitution, the First Amendment's restraints on the exercise of federal power simply did not apply to the States. But when the Constitution was amended to prohibit any State from depriving any person of liberty without due process of law, the Amendment imposed the same substantive limitations on the States' power to legislate that the First Amendment had always imposed on the Congress' power. This Court has confirmed and endorsed this elementary proposition of law time and time again." Wallace v. Jaffree, 86 L. Ed.2d 29, 38-39 (1985) (footnotes omitted).

Justice Rehnquist's contrary view is that only the very general principles of each Amendment of the Bill of Rights are to be applied to the states. The states, for example, are limited by the requirement in the First Amendment that they pass no law abridging freedom of speech. However, the states are not limited by the decisions of the Supreme court elaborating that doctrine and applying it in various situations. Rather, the states are free to take actions which if undertaken by the federal government would violate the First Amendment as long as such actions do not violate the fundamental spirit of the Amendment. In this typical explanation, Justice Rehnquist notes that his position is the same as that consistently taken by Justices Harlan and Jackson:

"The limits imposed by the First and Fourteenth Amendments on governmental action may vary in their stringency depending on the capacity in which the government is acting.

* * * * *

"For the reasons stated in the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Jackson in Beauharnais v. Illinois, 343 US 250, 288-295, 96 L Ed 919, 72 S Ct 725 (1952), and by Mr. Justice Harlan in his dissenting opinion in Roth v. United States, 354 US 476, 500-503, 1 L Ed 2d 1498, 77 S Ct. 1304, 14 Ohio Ops 2d 331 (1957), I am of the opinion that not all of the strictures which the First Amendment imposes upon Congress are carried over against the States by the Fourteenth Amendment, but rather that it is only the 'general principle' of free speech, Gitlow v. New York, 268 US 652, 672, 69 L Ed 1138, 45 S Ct. 625 (1925) (Holmes, J., dissenting), that the latter incorporates. See Palko v.

Connecticut, 302 US 319, 324-325, 82 L Ed 288, 58 S Ct 149 (1937)." Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 290-91 (1976). See also First National Bank v. Bellotti 435 U.S. 765, 823-828 (1978).

To take another example, the Supreme Court has held that in order to effectuate the Fifth Amendment ban on self-incrimination, a criminal defendant is entitled to have the judge instruct the jury that it cannot consider the fact that a defendant failed to testify. Justice Rehnquist believes that this rule is valid in the federal context but cannot be applied to the state courts by the Supreme Court. Only the literal rule against self-incrimination applies to the states, and the federal courts have no power to order the states or the state courts to take actions to effectuate that principle. As long as they do not literally compel someone to testify against him or herself, the states are free to determine how the purpose of the injunction is to be effectuated. Here is how Justice Rehnquist explained this position in a long dissent:

"If we begin with the relevant provisions of the Constitution, which is where an unsophisticated lawyer or layman would probably think we should begin, we find the provision in the Fifth Amendment stating that '[n]o person . . . shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself . . . .' Until the mysterious process of transmogrification by which this Amendment was held to be "incorporated" and made applicable to the States by the Fourteenth Amendment in Malloy v. Hogan, 378 US 1, 12 L Ed 2d 653, 84 S Ct. 1489 (1964), the provision itself would not have regulated the conduct "of criminal trials in Kentucky. But even if it did, no one here claims that the defendant was forced to take the stand against his will or to testify against himself inconsistently with the provisions of the Fifth Amendment. The claim is rather that in Griffin v. California, supra, the Court, building on the language of the Constitution itself and on Malloy, supra, held that a charge to the effect that any evidence or facts adduced against the defendant which he could be reasonably expected to deny or explain could be taken into consideration by the jury violated the constitutional privilege against compulsory self-incrimination. The author of the present opinion dissented from that holding, stating: 'The formulation of procedural rules to govern the administration of criminal justice in the various States is properly a mater of local concern. We are charged with no general supervisory power over such matters; our only legitimate function is to prevent violations of the constitution's commands.' 380 US, at 623, 14 L Ed 2d 106, 85 S Ct 1229, 5 Ohio Misc 127, 32 Ohio Ops 2d 437." Carter v. Kentucky, 450 U.S. 288, 308-310 (1981).

Justice Rehnquist applies this view across the board and consistently finds that there are severe limits on the authority of the federal courts to insure that state courts effectively protect civil liberties. He believes that the Supreme Court should exercise self-restraint in order to promote what he describes as a healthy pluralism:

"We have at present 50 state judicial systems and one federal judicial system in the United States, and our authority to reverse a decision by the highest court of the State is limited to only those occasions when the state decision violates some provision of the United States Constitution. And that authority should be exercised with a full sense that the judges whose decisions we review are making the same effort as we to uphold the Constitution. As said by Mr. Justice Jackson, concurring in the result in Brown v. Allen, 344 U.S. 433, 540, 73 S. Ct. 397, 427, 7 L.Ed. 469 (1953), "We are not final because we are infallible, but we are infallible only because we are final."

"The proper administration of justice in any nation is bound to be a matter of the highest concern to all thinking citizens. But to gradually rein in, as this Court has done over the past generation, all of the ultimate decisionmaking power over how justice shall be administered, not merely in federal system but in each of the 50 states, is a task that no Court consisting of nine persons, however gifted, is equal to. Nor is it desirable that such authority be exercised by such a tiny numerical fragement of the 220 million people who compose the population of this country. In the same concurrence just quoted, Mr. Justice Jackson accurately observed that '[t]he generalities of the Fourteenth Amendment are so indeterminate as to what state actions are forbidden that this Court has found it a ready instrument, in one field or another, to magnify federal, and incidentally its own, authority over the states.' Id. at 534, 73 S.Ct., at 423.

"However high-minded the impulses which originally spawned this trend may have been, and which impulses have been accentuated since the time Mr. Justice Jackson wrote, it is basically unhealthy to have so much authority concentrated in a small group of lawyers who have been appointed to the Supreme Court and enjoy virtual life tenure. Nothing in the reasoning of Mr. Chief Justice Marshall in Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch 137, 2 L.Ed. 60 (1803), requires that this Court through ever-broadening use of the Supremacy Clause smother a healthy pluralism which would ordinarily exist in a national government embracing 50 States.

"The issue here is not whether the 'right' to freedom of the press conferred by the First Amendment to the Constitution overrides the defendant's 'right' to a fair trial conferred by other Amendments to the Constitution; it is instead whether any provision in the Constitution may fairly be read to prohibit what the trial judge in the Virginia state-court system did in this case. Being unable to find any such prohibition in the First, Sixth, Ninth, or any other Amendment to the United States Constitution, or in the constitution itself, I dissent." Richmond Newspapers, Inc. v. Virginia, 448 U.S. 555, 605-606 (1980).

Justice Rehnquist's analysis leads him to the view, not supported by any other Justice on the Court, that the Supreme Court cannot require the states to follow specific procedures in death penalty cases. Once the Court has determined that capital punishment is not cruel and unusual punishment within the meaning of the Eighth Amendment as it applies to the States, the Court lacks authority over the procedures used by the state to determine when the penalty should be applied and with what safeguards. In his own words, put succinctly in a dissenting opinion:

"[I]f capital punishment is not cruel and unusual under the Eighth and Fourteenth Amendments, as the Court held in that case, the use of particular sentencing procedures, never previously held unfair under the Due Process Clause, in a case where the death sentence is imposed cannot convert that sentence into a cruel and unusual punishment. The prohibition of the Eighth Amendment relates to the character of the punishment, and not to the process by which it is imposed. I would therefore affirm the judgment of the Supreme Court of Florida." Gardner v. Florida, 430 U.S. 349, 371 (1977). See also Woodson v. North Carolina, 428 U.S. 280,m 308-324 (1976), Lockett v. Ohio 438 U.S. 586, 628 (1978), and Coleman v. Balkcom 451 US 949 (1981).

In determining whether a state statute or action runs afoul of the Bill of Rights, Justice Rehnquist does not apply the same rules that would apply to such a challenge to a federal statute. Rather he applies the test which the Supreme Court applies to actions of the states which are challenged on grounds other than that they violate individual rights. Justice Rehnquist thus asks only whether the state action, whether by the legislature or an administrator, is rational. Unless he finds the action to be irrational, Justice Rehnquist upholds it. See, e.g. Sugarman v. Dougall, 413 US 634, 649-664 (1973). It is not even necessary for the state to have articulated a rational reason for its actions; rather the "Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment requires neither that the state enactments be 'logical' nor that they be 'just' in the common meanings of those terms. It requires only that there be some conceivable set of facts that may justify the classification involved." Weber v. Aetna, 406 U.S. 164, 183 (1972). See also Sugarman v. Dougall, 413 U.S. 631, 658 (1973).

Justice Rehnquist's opinions in cases arising under the Establishment and Free Exercise Clauses of the First Amendment illustrate how he applies these principles and why they often lead him to positions not accepted by any other member of the Court. The starting point for Justice Rehnquist in analyzing any such case is what action the legislature has taken. State action must, in his view, be accorded a presumption of constitutionality and be over-turned only if it has no rational purpose. Thus, Justice Rehnquist is no more willing to find a constitutional violation when a state refuses to provide religious facilities for a Buddhist prisoner, Cruz v. Beto, 405 U.S. 319, 324-328 (1972), or to bend the unemployment laws to accommodate religious beliefs, Thomas v. Review Board, 450 U.S. 707, 720-727 (1981), than he is to find a violation when the state allows a religious institution to veto the granting of a liquor license, Larkin v. Grindel's Den 459 U.S. 116 (1982). In each of the cases Justice Rehnquist dissented alone. He did so because he applied a different test than that of all of his colleagues. They applied particularized standards that the Court has developed to address challenges under the Free Exercise and Establishment clauses. Justice Rehnquist asked only if the state action was "irrational". Finding that it was not, he held that the Supreme Court had no power to hold it unconstitutional.

Similarly, in cases involving such issues as the rights of women, of aliens, of prisoners, and in cases relating to freedom of speech, Justice Rehnquist has penned lone dissents because he asked only whether there was some conceivable rational purpose for the statute, while his colleagues were balancing the state interest against the right of the individual with some degree of special scrutiny providing a balance in favor of the right of the individual. Taylor v. Louisiana, 419 U.S. 522, 538-539 (1975) (woman), Weber v. Aetna 406 U.S. 164, 177-185 (1972) (illegitimate children), Zablocki v. Redhail 434 U.S. 374, 407-411 (1978) (marriage), Sugarman v. Dougall, 413 U.S. 634, 649-664 (1973) (aliens), Hutto v. Finney, 437 U.S. 678, 710-714 (1978) (prisoners), Woodsom v. North Carolina, 428 U.S. 280, 308-324 (1976) (death penalty procedures), and Carey v. Population Services International, 431 U.S. 678, 717-719 (1977) (right to contraception). Delaware v. Prouse, 440 U.S. 648 (1979) (scope of Fourth Amendment).

FIRST AMENDMENT

In two fundamental respects Justice Rehnquist's substantive view of the First Amendment differs from that of all of his colleagues on the Court and shapes his opinions on issues relating to these two aspects of the Amendment.

All of the other Justices of Supreme Court take the view that the Establishment clause of the First Amendment prohibits actions by the state of federal government which support religion. Justice Rehnquist believes that the provision only prohibits aid to a particular religion. In his famous lone dissent on this issue in Wallace v. Jaffree he explains his view as follows:

"It would seem from this evidence that the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment had acquired a well-accepted meaning: it forbade establisment of a national religion, and forbade perference amont religious sects or denoninations. Indeed, the first American dictionary defind the word 'establishment' as 'the act of establishing, founding, ratifying or ordaining(g,') such as in '[t]he episcopal form of religion, so called, in England.' 1 N. Webster, American Dictionary of the English Language (1st ed 1828). The Establishment Clause did not require government neutrality between religion and irreligion nor did it prohibit the federal government from providing non-discriminatory aid to religion. There is simply no historical foundation for the proposition that the Framers intended to build the 'wall separation' that was constitutionalized in Everson.

"Notwithstanding the absence of an historical basis for this theory of rigid separation, the wall ideal might well have served as a useful albeit misguided analytical concept, had it led this Court to unified and prinicpled results in Establishment Clause cases. The opposite, unfortunately, has been true; in the 38 years since Everson our Establishment Clause cases have been neither prinicipled nor unified. Our recent opinions, many of them hopelessly divided pluralties, have with embarrassing candor conceded that the 'wall of separation' is merely a 'blurred indistinct, and variable barrier,' which 'is not wholly accurate' and can only be 'dimly perceived.' Lemon v. Kurtzman, 403 US 602, 614, 29 L Ed 2d 745, 91 S Ct 2105 (1971); Tilton v. Richardson, 403 US 672, 677-678, 29 L Ed 2d 790, 91 S Ct 2593, 5 Ohio Ops 3d 197 (1977); Lynch v. Donnely, 465 US ——, 79 L Ed 2d 604, 104 S Ct 1355 (1984).

"Whether due to its lack of historical support or its practical unworkability, the Everson 'will' has proven all but useless as a guide to sound constitutional adjudication. It illustrates only too well the wisdom of Benjamin Cardozo's observation that '[m]etaphors in the law are to be narrowly watched, for starting as devices to liberate thought, they end often by enslaving it.' Berkey v. Third Avenue R. Co. 244 NY 84, 94, 155 NE 58, 61 (1926).

"But the greatest injury of the 'wall' notion is its mischievous diversion of judges from the actual intentions of the drafters of the Bill of Rights. The 'crucible of litigation,' ante at 14, is well adapted to adjudicating factual disputes on the basis of testimony presented in court, but no amount of repetition of historical errors in judicial opinions can make the errors true. The 'wall of separation between church and States' is a metaphor based on bad history, a metaphor which has proved useless as a guide to judging. It should be frankly and explicitly abandoned." Wallace v. Jaffree, 53 U.S. L.W. 4665, 4683-4684 (U.S. June 4, 1985) (footnotes omitted).

Justice Rehnquist also takes the view that commercial speech is not entitled to any special constitutional protection. Va. Pharmacy Bd. v. Va. Consumer Council, 425 U.S. 748, 781-790 (1976). Although he has joined in and even authored opinions for the Court applying the majority view that commercial speech is entitled to some First Amendment protection, he continues to assert his view that the federal government, as well as the states, are free to put any limits that they choose on the public statements of corporations.

CONCLUSION

This report on Justice Rehnquist's civil liberties record has focused not on his opinions in particular areas of the law, but rather on the philosophical approach that he brings to the adjudication of constitutional claims and in particular to his view of the Fourteenth Amendment. It attempts by this means to illuminate the sources of Justice Rehnquist's opinions and permit an evaluation of his civil liberties record taken an a whole.

As indicated at the outset, Justice Rehnquist rejects the views that the primary function of the Supreme Court is to protect the rights of persons and that the Court should err, if err it must, on the side of protecting individual liberty. A review of Justice Rehnquist's votes during the fifteen years on which he has served on the Supreme Court leaves no doubt that he has been faithful to that premise.

Mr. HATCH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I wish to say that all of these matters have been debated very fully, all of them have gone over time and time again in the committee. I agree they should be brought up here.

On the other hand, there is a great propensity on the part of people who are opposed to the nominee to resolve every ambiguity in favor of their position against nominee, regardless of his years of public service, regardless of how good a Justice he is, regardless of the fact that he has the complete support of the fellow Justices, regardless of the fact that he is a good man and a leading intellect on the Court. I find that inconguous.

Let me take a few minutes to discuss one of the arguments that has come up. Several myths have circulated about Justice Rehnquist's 15 years on the Court. We heard that he was the Court's foremost lone dissenter. We heard charges of impropriety in connection with the Laird versus Tatum case. These deserve clarification.

At the outset of these proceedings, we heard that Justice Rehnquist's record as the Court's leading lone dissenter makes him too extreme to serve as Chief Justice. The problem with this argument is that it is not accurate. Justice Rehnquist is simply not the Court's leading lone dissenter. In the 10 years their terms have overlapped, Justice Stevens' record of lone dissents has far outstripped that of Justice Rehnquist. Over that period, Justice Stevens dissented alone 51 times, Justice Rehnquist, 40 times. The title of greatest dissenting author on the Court also goes to Justice Stevens with 145 from 1980-84. That is the difference in the number. Justice Brennan had 106 for that period; and Justice Rehnquist, 75. In terms of dissenting votes, Justice Rehnquist's 152 losing votes from 1980-84 falls far short of Justice Brennan's 245. As I mentioned earlier, the real test of the ability to shape a consensus on the Court would be the number of majority opinions authorized by any particular Justice. In that regard, no Justice has authored more majority opinions than Justice Rehnquist over the past four terms. A careful and fair examination of the facts simply does not make Justice Rehnquist an extreme dissenter, but the leading articulator of Supreme Court policy.

Admittedly, some of those opposed do not like Supreme Court policy any more than I do on certain issues. But that is not a reason to be against him. Unfortunately, it may be, in the eyes of some.

With respect to the Laird v. Tatum issue, we gave heard that Justice Rehnquist, who gave general testimony on executive branch surveillance before Senator Ervin's subcommittee in 1971, should have recused himself when the case came before the Court. Recusal is a legal doctrine governed by a statute. A fair look at that statute offers ample reason to agree with Justice Rehnquist on his decision not to recuse himself. The governing statute in 1972, 28 U.S.C. 445, read:

> Any Justice * * * shall disqualify himself in any case in which he has a substantial interest, has been of counsel, is or has been a material witness, or is so related to or connected with any party or his attorney as to render it improper, in his opinion, for him to sit * * *.

The statute requires disqualification where the Justice has a substantial interest, has been of counsel, is or has been a material witness. No one contends that Justice Rehnquist was ever "of counsel" or a "material witness" in the Laird versus Tatum case itself. Therefore, those provisions are inapplicable. It is important to note, however, that in cases where Justice Rehnquist did have a very slight advisory role at the Justice Department, for instance United States versus U.S. District Court and S&E Contractors versus United States, he recused himself.

The second part of the statute is qualified by the discretionary language "in his opinion," referring to the judge's discretion. It urges disqualification where the Justice "is so related to or connected with any party or his attorney as to render it improper." In reviewing his relationship with this particular case while at the Justice Department, Justice Rehnquist concluded that discretionary disqualification was not warranted. This was based on his "total lack of any connection" with the case at the Department.

Critics of this judgment, which was completely within Justice Rehnquist's authority to make, contend that his testimony before the Ervin subcommittee was evidence of his extensive connection with the issues of the case while at the Justice Department. To the contrary, the extent of Justice Rehnquist's involvement with executive branch surveillance efforts was extremely minimal. He had helped prepare an initial draft of a plan to deal with civil emergencies. This included a section concerning information about potential instigators of unrest. This was simply a planning memo; the Justice did not participate in its implementation. The planning memo says nothing about surveillance underway nor about any specific event of the sixties or seventies. In fact, he explained repeatedly to the Ervin subcommittee that he was only giving his understanding of the constitutional and legal issues connected with executive branch information gathering.

He did not have personal knowledge of the actual surveillance. He did not have any personal knowledge of the facts of the Laird versus Tatum case. Most likely 28 U.S.C. 445 was discretionary in 1972 precisely because only the Justice himself can judge the degree of his involvement with a particular issue. The statute was later changed, but the Justice certainly could not be held to the subsequent changed standard at the time he made his decision to join in the Laird judgment.

Justice Rehnquist's decision was fully in line with the Supreme Court precedents and practices at that time. Justice Black had authored the Fair Labor Standards Act as the Labor Committee Chairman in the Senate, yet he helped decide its constitutionality on the Court. He even sat on one Fair Labor Standards Act case that has handled by one of his former law partners. Justice Frankfurter had written a book in the field of labor law and was acknowledged as a dominant force in the authorship of the Norris-LaGuardia Act, yet he wrote the primary case on the act.

By the way, the Norris-LaGuardia Act is one of those instances where the jurisdiction of a Federal Court of the United States was limited pursuant to article III, section 1 of the Constitution.

Justice Jackson resolved an immigration issue on the Court that he had developed as Attorney General. Chief Justice Vinson never hesitated to review legislation he had helped formulate as a Member of the House of Representatives. Chief Justice Hughes had written a book critical of one Supreme Court case and then on the Court wrote the opinion which overruled the case. This list could go on. The only purpose is to show that Justice Rehnquist's legal determination about the interpretation of the discretionary section of 28 U.S.C. 445 was completely in harmony with Supreme Court practice at that time.

Again, this is a red herring, it is offensive, frankly; it is something that should not be brought up this way. It shows a lack of knowledge about the Supreme Court.

□ 1500

He not only made a careful legal analysis, but he reported that analysis in the spirit of full disclosure and ethical treatment of the issue.

We have heard Mr. Justice Rehnquist made a statement because he was biased against the case. There are two responses. First, a Justice is not expected to join the Court with a blank mind. As Justice Rehnquist said, this would be a "lack of qualification", not lack of bias.

Second, this was a legal decision permitted by the law of that time of Justice Rehnquist. He faithfully analyzed the law and he reached a decision which others can second-guess after the fact. But that legal judgment should not be twisted into something of ethical dimensions. That is what is being attempted here today. It was attempted on the committee, because they do not have anything else.

That is the problem, Mr. President, they do not have anything against Justice Rehnquist. The allegation they have made can all be easily rebutted. We do not want to take days doing that, because most of these items were rebutted in committee.

Justice Rehnquist, on the Laird versus Tatum case, acted completely ethically and within the law.

Once again, the Laird, versus Tatum case is just another instance of some individuals holding a different legal opinion than that credibly espoused by Mr. Justice Rehnquist.

Mr. KENNEDY. Does the Senator want to yield on that particular question?

Mr. HATCH. I am glad to yield.

Mr. KENNEDY. I noticed in the report of the majority that the Senator from Utah describes a similar expression was made, that the Laird versus Tatum controversy is just a difference of opinion on the Laird versus Tatum decision.

Mr. HATCH. That is correct.

Mr. KENNEDY. Has the Senator had the opportunity to examine Professor Hazzard's memorandum?

Mr. HATCH. I did.

Mr. KENNEDY. Professor Hazzard, who was a key draftsman of the 1972 ABA Code of Judicial Ethics, indicated a complete disbelief in Justice Rehnquist's decision to participate in a case involving a policy that the Justice had been very much involved in fashioning while he was a government attorney.

I want to make the point that it is not a question of different people agreeing or differing on the outcome of the Laird versus Tatum case. That misses the point completely. The point is that Justice Rehnquist had indicated to the Senate of the United States what the outcome of the Laird versus Tatum case should be, and Mr. Rehnquist was an architect of the disputed policy that dealt with some very basic liberties of the American people.

After he participated in the case, Justice Rehnquist mislead whoever was to read his memorandum opinion by excluding from it references to key testimony that he made to the Senate, and completely distorting the ABA's canons of ethics.

I wish that, both in the presentation that is being made in favor of Justice Rehnquist as well as in the committee's majority report, the Laird versus Tatum matter issue would be examined in a more complete and accurate fashion.

Mr. HATCH. If the Senator would let me reply. That is a little sophistry. The fact of the matter is Hazzard's opinion resolved everything against Justice Rehnquist just as you are doing. Every ambiguity has to be resolved against this man who has set on the bench for 15 solid years.

Mr. KENNEDY. Is the Senator talking about Laird versus Tatum?

Mr. HATCH. I am going to talk about Laird versus Tatum. Let me say this: You are applying ethical standards enacted afterward. I am just looking at the questions raised about his participation. He was not counsel in the Laird versus Tatum case. That is what the law was at the time. He was not an adviser in the case. That is what the law was at that time. He had discretion to make this decision. That is what the law was at that time.

I cited a whole raft of other Justices who did things that were far in excess of what anybody, any reasonable mind could say Mr. Justice Rehnquist did——

Mr. KENNEDY. Would the Senator yield so I can quote the law at this time.

Mr. HATCH. I would perfer not to yield.

Mr. President, who has the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. EVANS). The Senator from Utah has the time.

Mr. HATCH. I shall yield in a moment. Let me finish my comments.

He was not counsel, he was not an adviser on the case, he had only commented initially on Laird versus Tatum. When he was a judge, he could comment whether he could review that in making a judicial decision and he did. He said he used that statute.

Other Justices have asserted that right and used it.

I do not hear Justice Frankfurter being excoriated because he participated and exercised discretion in decisions he later helped to write. Because opponents of Mr. Justice Rehnquist do not have anything else, they are trying to do distort Laird versus Tatum, a case where he had the right to make the decision under the then existing law. The law was changed later. I doubt that he would have exercised the discretion any more than Mr. Justice Black would have in the case I have cited that he did, or Mr. Justice Frankfurter in the case that I have cited that he did. We could go on through dozens of other cases of people who were Justices who acted as they did.

Let us be fair. Let us not distort everything.

The law was such that Justice Rehnquist had every right to do what he did at the time and most Justices probably would have done the same thing.

With regard to these other memoranda, let us be honest about that, too. He was the Assistant Attorney General at the Office of Legal Policy. He did not write every memorandum. He may have had them come through his desk as you, and I do. A month from now we will not remember which ones we signed off and which ones we did not, let alone 15, 16, 24 years or in some cases even beyond that. He was the only one who knew whether or not he had personal knowledge of the case. Why can you not accept that? Who is Mr. Hazzard that he can say that he knew when he did not know? It is typical of the type of case that the opponents have tried to build here.

Mr. KENNEDY. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I will be happy to yield.

Mr. KENNEDY. Professor Hazard was a key draftsman of the ABA canons of ethics, and the preeminent expert on judicial ethics.

Mr. HATCH. What has that got to do with it?

Mr. KENNEDY. The Senator questioned Professor Hazard's authority to make a judgment whether the action that was taken by Mr. Rehnquist was ethical or not. Professor Hazard is a nationally recognized expert on legal and judicial ethics.

Mr. HATCH. The first time we hear from this author——

Mr. KENNEDY. He believes that Justice Rehnquist's action in participating in the Laird case and casting the deciding vote against the plaintiffs were unethical.

Mr. HATCH. The first time we hear from this author——

Mr. KENNEDY. That is all we are trying to point out.

Mr. HATCH. The first time we hear from this author on Laird versus Tatum is right now. I do not think that author is noted for his conservative politics any more than Rehnquist is noted for liberal politics. He has a right to the opinion, but he resolved everything against Justice Rehnquist. It is typical. We can get any authority sometimes to say something on one side or the other of these issues. But the fact of the matter is Mr. Justice Rehnquist's testimony absolves him of any responsibility for that because he abided by the then-existing law.

Now, if you are talking about the subsequent law, then you might be able to criticize. And, if course, you have talked about that as though he knew what was going to be passed or brought down a little bit later. He did not know any more than you did or anybody else and you were sitting in the U.S. Senate at the time.

In summation, the Justice was neither of counsel nor was he a material witness in the Laird case while at the Department of Justice. He did not even have an advisory role in connection with the case. For this reason he was entirely within his rights to refuse to recuse himself.

I might add that you can try and build a case out of anything I suppose, but let us be fair about it. Let us look at the facts. Let us look at the law. Let us look at the laws that then existed. Let us look at the practice of the Supreme Court. Let us look at what other Justices did.

It is amazing to me how free they were to not recuse themselves in a lot of the cases that they did. It is no small thing in some of the things that I cited, such as Justice Black.

He authored the Fair Labor Standards Act. He was the Labor Committee chairman. I understand a bit about that. I am the Labor Committee chairman in the U.S. Senate. Yet he helped to decide its very constitutionality in the Court. If he could do that, certainly Mr. Justice Rehnquist, who was not a witness, was not a material witness, was not counsel, who did not really basically have anything but a passive interest in it, certainly he could have refused to recuse himself.

Justice Frankfurter was considered one of the top labor professors in the country. He was the dominant force in the enactment of the Norris-LaGuardia Act. The only reason I bring that sideline issue into it is that the Norris-LaGuardia Act is a perfect illustration of how the jurisdiction of the courts can be limited. And Felix Frankfurter had a lot to do with that.

We have had a lot of arguments here on the floor, but there is a perfect illustration of how we in Congress can limit the jurisdiction of the courts in this country under article III, section 1 of the Constitution. Yet Mr. Justice Frankfurter wrote the primary case on that particular act.

Let us be fair. I mentioned Justice Jackson's resolution of an immigration issue, that was before the Court that he actually handled as Attorney General of the United States. Chief Justice Vinson never once, to my knowledge, I hesitated to review legislation he had helped formulate as a Member of the House of Representatives. He is not being excoriated here today. These are some of the greatest men who ever served on the Court. Chief Justice Hughes wrote a critical book of one Supreme Court case and then wrote the opinion that overruled the case.

Mr. KENNEDY. Will the Senator yield on this argument?

Mr. HATCH. Those were important issues.

Mr. KENNEDY. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. HATCH. Yes.

Mr. KENNEDY. The record shows without question that Justice Rehnquist expressed an opinion on a case while it was pending in the lower court and then he voted on that case, cast the crucial vote, when he was on the Supreme Court of the United States.

Can the Senator from Utah give me any instance where any of the Justices to which the Senator is now referring had ever expressed an opinion about the outcome of a case in a lower court and then voted in the Supreme Court? Can the Senator give me any case?

Mr. HATCH. First of all, he did not express an opinion regarding the outcome of the case. He generally described the case. You cannot call that an opinion. That is again a distortion.

Mr. KENNEDY. It is not a distortion. I can read the record and the Members of the Senate can make their own decision on it.

Mr. HATCH. Go ahead.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Rehnquist said to Senator Ervin:

My only point of disagreement with you is to say whether as in the case of Laird v. Tatum that has been pending in the Court of Appeals here in the District of Columbia that an action will lie by private citizens to enjoin the gathering of information by the executive branch where there has been no threat of compulsory process and no pending action against any of those individuals on the part of the government.

Senator Ervin said that a cause of action would lie and Mr. Rehnquist is pointing out, "My only point of disagreement with you" is whether an action will lie.

That is a major point of disagreement.

In addition, Mr. Rehnquist was an architect of the policy that was being disputed. That is very clear. That is not a question of ideology. That is a question of fact. I am interested in whether the Senator can give me examples of other Supreme Court Justices who have expressed a view on the outcome of a case pending in the lower court and then voted in the case in Supreme Court.

Mr. HATCH. Let me go through the examples again. When Mr. Justice Black was in Congress, he was chairman of the Labor Committee. You sit on the committee with me. He helped write the Fair Labor Standards Act. He actually wrote the language. He not only gave opinions, I presume he had a lot to do with the report on the Fair Labor Standards Act. Then he decided the questions with regard to it and its constitutionality. That was the practice of the Court. Mr. Justice Vinson never recused himself on bills that he wrote, that he gave opinions on, that he wrote majority reports for. I think we could go through a lot of illustrations.

Mr. KENNEDY. If that is the answer——

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, who has the floor? I will be happy to yield for a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. EVANS). The Senator from Utah has the floor.

Mr. KENNEDY. I thought we would have an opportunity for a debate.

Mr. HATCH. I would like to yield to you, but I would like to make my points before you interrupt.

Mr. KENNEDY. I was still waiting for additional information, because if that is your best response, it is not a satisfactory one. What you are talking about is a general question of the constitutionality of a statute. In Laird versus Tatum we have the application of the Constitution to particular facts in a particular case. That was my question.

The examples given by the Senator from Utah fail to address the issue that is raised in the Laird versus Tatum case.

Mr. HATCH. He did not give an opinion of that case. It was a passing comment in a hearing.

Mr. KENNEDY. He commented the Laird versus Tatum was nonjusticiable.

Mr. HATCH. One passing comment. He did not write a bill in this case. He did not make decisions in this case. I am telling you that the contrast with what Mr. Justice Black did and this small matter that you brought up here is stark. I do not condemn Mr. Justice Black nor Mr. Justice Frankfurter nor Mr. Justice Vinson, nor would any reasonable person. I do not think Mr. Hazard would do that. I am surprised that he is doing it to Mr. Justice Rehnquist, in light of the testimony Mr. Justice Rehnquist has given. I do not know why he did that.

The fact of the matter is that if you read the statute, as I have read it, there is no reason in the world why he had to recuse himself. He had every right to or not to. The statute itself is fairly clear. The governing statute, as I said, was a 1972 statute, 28 U.S.C. 445. It read:

Any justice . . . shall disqualify himself in any case in which he has a substantial interest.

He did not have any special interest.

has been of counsel.

He was not of counsel.

is or has been a material witness.

He was not a material witness.

is so related to or connected with any party or his attorney

He was not related to any party or his attorney.

as to render it improper, in his opinion, for him to sit. . .

He had to make that final decision. He was right. He had a right to make it that way.

I have cited at least four illustrations, stronger illustrations than the one you are trying to bring up. Let us be fair about it. Besides, Laird versus Tatum was gone into years ago.

THE PHOENIX VOTING ISSUES

Let me turn my comments from the Laird versus Tatum matter to the Phoenix voting issues.

The allegations concerning the Phoenix voting practices testify more to the frailties of human memory than to anything else. Nonetheless, this 24-year-old history must be clarified. I will first make a few general observations and then discuss a few of the witnesses who challenged Justice Rehnquist's account of these 1962 events.

In the first place, it is important to realize that these allegations were investigated carefully in 1971 when they were only 9 years old. At that time, the Senate Judiciary Committee, which was chaired by a Democrat—Senator McClellan—concluded that the Voter harassment charges against Mr. Rehnquist are found by this committee to be wholly unsubstantiated. Viewed in its entirety, the incident suggests at the very most a case of mistaken identity.

The case of mistaken identity arises from a disturbance at Bethune precinct in 1962. This disturbance began when a Republican official challenged the credentials of several voters. Challenging voters was a legal means of ensuring that those voting were adequately qualified and registered to vote. This particular challenger, however, evidently became so aggressive that the line of people waiting to vote grew very long. This precipitated some kind of scuffle. As a result, the Republican challenger was escorted away from the polling place by a police officer. This individual was a Mr. Wayne Bentson, not a Mr. William Rehnquist, although their heights and weights appear to have been similar.

According to those who know them, they probably looked a little bit alike. Certainly, heights and weights were pretty much the same.

In his capacity as legal advisor to the Maricopa County Republican Party, Attorney Rehnquist had occasion to visit precincts to mediate voting disputes and to advise challengers. Justice Rehnquist has repeatedly testified that this was entirely within his responsibility, and it was the only thing, basically, he did. Thus, it is very probably that Attorney Rehnquist may have even appeared at Bethune in 1962, but as a legal advisor, not as a disruptive challenger. In fact, none of the contemporaneous accounts of this disturbance, including the FBI report of the matter, the detailed news accounts in the Arizona Republic, and the Phoenix City Police reports, even mention Mr. Rehnquist. Each of these accounts carefully and consistently records these events, but each identifies Bentson as the challenger, not Rehnquist. Incidentally, none of these contemporaneous sources find another disturbance worth mentioning on election day in 1962.

These contemporaneous written accounts are corroborated by then Democratic U.S. attorney—now Federal judge—Carl Muecke, who thoroughly investigated voter harassment in 1962; by Carl Sims, who scuffled with Bentson; but all other persons present who were interviewed by the FBI; by Attorney Justice Rehnquist's Democratic counterpart—now Federal judge—Hardy; and by the Judiciary Committee in 1971. Judge Hardy's statement is particularly interesting. He is a Federal judge today. Here is what he said:

Can state unequivocally that Mr. Rehnquist did not act as a challenger at the Bethune precinct * * * challenging voters was not a part of Mr. Rehnquist's role in 1962 or subsequent election years.

This was 9 years after the alleged happenings occurred. Mr. Muecke, a leading Democrat, made those comments in 1971, when his recollections were a lot better.

Before discussing each of the witnesses before the committee, I have a few other general comments about those individuals who purported to have seen Mr. Rehnquist challenge voters 24 years ago. All of these individuals failed to come forward or to make any allegations 15 years ago in 1971. Much of their testimony is consistent with Attorney Rehnquist's role as legal advisor who visited precincts to settle voting disputes. Of the seven who claim to have seen Attorney Rehnquist challenge voters, five did not know him at the time and only identified him on the basis of 1971 newspaper photographs—9 years after the alleged incidents. All of those purporting to have seen Attorney Rehnquist challenging are committed Democratic or liberal activists, whereas six Democrats—including four State or Federal judges—refute the harassment or challenging charges.

Perhaps at this point I could proceed to examine the testimony of these witnesses. Who are these witnesses? Every specific allegation—one identifying a particular year and voting precinct—is either refuted by contemporaneous eyewitness reports or rendered highly unlikely by internal inconsistencies or contrary testimony from other reliable witnesses.

BROSNAHAN

Let us take Mr. Brosnahan.

Mr. James Brosnahan was an assistant U.S. attorney in 1962. The Arizona Republic mentions him as the investigator of the Bethune precinct incident in that year. Moreover, a 1962 letter from Wayne Bentson identifies Brosnahan as the investigating legal officer at the disturbance. Actually there should be little doubt about where Brosnahan was on November 6, 1962 or what he was doing because he stated himself on two occasions that the place where he saw Rehnquist in 1962 was Bethune precinct.

The Washington Post of July 26, 1986 states: "Brosnahan, however, said there were enough complaints about the GOP challenges at the Bethune precinct in 1962 that he went there with an FBI agent to investigate. Brosnahan said he found a small group of Republicans, including Rehnquist, there. * * *" The Nation Institute Press release, which features a running commentary by Brosnahan, includes the admission that the investigation occurred at Bethune in 1962. Moreover, Carl Muecke, Brosnahan's supervisor, only mentions dispatching Brosnahan to Bethune, not any other precinct. Nonetheless, when he appeared before the Judiciary Committee, Mr. Brosnahan, a self-described "liberal Democrat," suddenly could not remember which precinct it was and suddenly could remember that he investigated several precincts that day.

One of the great mysteries of this entire proceeding is what caused Brosnahan's memory to change in the few weeks between the newspaper interviews and the hearing. The mystery becomes larger when we realize that Brosnahan never said or did anything in 1962 which implicated Attorney Rehnquist in the slightest in any voting dispute. Moreover the FBI investigation in which Brosnahan was involved did not even mention Rehnquist. Brosnahan failed to come forward in 1971. And finally, even Brosnahan admitted in his testimony and in numerous press accounts that he never saw Rehnquist challenge even a single voter.

The gist of Brosnahan's testimony was that some of the people at Bethune or wherever his inconsistent memory finds it convenient to place the matter, said that Rehnquist was involved in challenging. This would not necessarily be one bit inconsistent with Justice Rehnquist's testimony. After all, Justice Rehnquist said he was present at voting disputes in 1962. It would not be at all unusual for some distant observers to conclude that Attorney Rehnquist was somehow involved when, in fact, he merely appeared at the polling place to settle the dispute caused by Wayne Bentson. This explanation is so logical that it may even solve the mystery of Brosnahan's changing memory.

In any event, newspaper accounts, FBI reports, and police reports all confirm that Attorney Rehnquist was not involved—other than possibly as a legal adviser—in any incident at Bethune in 1962. Even Brosnahan's slippery memory produces no credible evidence to the contrary. One further enlightening view of this incident was provided by Edward Cassidy, the Phoenix police officer who escorted Bentson from the polling place in 1962. He was present at or near Bethune that entire day in 1962. He testified under oath that only Wayne Bentson was involved in the scuffle at Bethune and that no other Republicans were involved in challenging or other unseemly conduct on that occasion.

Anyone who knows Mr. Justice Rehnquist, who knows the passive personality that he has—it is a meek and mild personality—who knows how judicial, of what tremendous judicial temperament he was, would not believe for the slightest that he was there belligerently challenging voters on that day.

Since he said he was not there challenging voters, and that was his recollection, he should be given the benefit of the doubt.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that my discussion regarding the other witnesses be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHARLES PINE

Charles Pine began by telling the committee that the incidents he remembered occurred at Bethune in 1962. His memory seemed to work the opposite of Brosnahan's. Instead of forgetting what he had known a few weeks earlier, Pine remembered what he had not known a few weeks earlier. He told the Nation institute and other reporters in the weeks before the hearing that he could not identify the precinct or the year.

Mr. Pine also remembered complaining to democratic headquarters about Rehnquist, but Judge Maggiore, the 1962 county democratic chairman, testified that he knew Pine well and that neither Pine nor anyone else complained to him about Attorney Rehnquist. Mr. Pine also testified that he had discussed the incident with Judge Hardy who has stated that he knew of no involvement by Rehnquist. Mr. Pine also could not recall how many voters were challenged, but he did recall the exact words Attorney Rehnquist was purported to have said to various voters. He could even remember how Attorney Rehnquist punctuated his sentences over 24 years ago. This mysterious memory principle seems to operate even though all people present, including democratic officials, at Bethune in 1962 during the incident gave testimony in contemporaneous FBI, police, and news reports that Bentson was the only GOP official involved. Moreover, the nonpartisan police officer present at Bethune, Edward Cassidy, also testified that Bentsen alone was responsible for any challenging done at Bethune in 1962.

MELVIN MIRKIN

Mr. Mirkin's testimony was completely consistent with Justice Rehnquist's. He said he saw Attorney Rehnquist, in a normal tone of voice, advise a group of Republican Challengers of the proper procedures for this legal process in 1962. This would have been within Attorney Rehnquist's duties as legal advisor. Mr. Mirkin also noted that he would vote to confirm Justice Rehnquist as Chief Justice if he had a vote.

SYDNEY SMITH

Mr. Smith could not remember the name of the precinct or the year when he purportedly saw Attorney Rehnquist challenging voters. This makes it very difficult to corroborate his story. Although he could not remember the time or place, he could recall with remarkable clarity verbatim quotes from Mr. Rehnquist 24 years after the fact. Unfortunately his memory begins to fail again when he was inconsistent as to the number and race of the people he saw Rehnquist address and as to whether or not any of them left the voting line. Mr. Smith also claimed to have personally called the democratic headquarters to complain, but Judge Maggiore, the county chairman, testifies that he did not even hear a rumor that suggested Rehnquist might have been involved in challenging.

MANUEL PENA

Mr. Manuel Pena was sure that the GOP official with whom he argued over challenging techniques in 1964 was William Rehnquist because he identified him as the man 7 years later on the basis of a newspaper photo. He did not know Attorney Rehnquist from anyone else in 1964, but 7 years later he saw a photograph in a newspaper and identified him as the man at Butler Precinct in 1964.

Besides the improbability of this identification, several other facts make this improbable. First, Judge Thomas Murphy, the Democratic county chairman in 1964, investigated personally complaints of vote harrassment. He said that Rehnquist was simply not involved. Because Attorney Rehnquist had no challenging credentials and was in charge of the massive Ballot Security Program at the GOP headquarters, it is unlikely that he spent around an hour at Butler. Moreover, Pena declared that the man he met at Butler called his headquarters to establish that his challenging procedure was correct. As the head of the Ballot Security Program in 1964, William Rehnquist would not have had to call headquarters to ask about the rules. He was the one answering those calls.

QUINCY T. HOPPER

Mr. Hopper admits in his 1986 affidavit that his memory is not clear and relies instead on his 1971 affidavit. This affadavit claims that he, too, identified Rehnquist as the person he saw in 1964 from a photo shown him in 1971. He further claims that Carl Sims was with him, but Sims was the individual involved in the 1962 altercation with Bentsen at Bethune. The rest of the incident he describes, complete with details about the scuffle and the police escorting the Republican away, is remarkably similar to the 1962, Bethune incident. Judge Thomas Murphy, police records, news accounts, and Republican poll watches at the Bethune Precinct in 1964 report no disturbance whatsoever that year.

JORDAN HARRIS AND ROBERT TATE

Both of these individuals were involved in the 1962 Bethune incident and gave statements to the FBI about the event. In their 1971 affidavits, they repeat a similar story but now say that the event occurred in 1964. Tate also claims that the challenger in question did nor wear glasses. Attorney Rehnquist wore glasses at all times. Finally both of them identified Rehnquist as the challenger on the basis of a photograph shown to them in 1971. Once again there are no independent reports of any similar incident in 1964.

SNELSON MCGRIFF

This account follows a familiar pattern. He describes an incident remarkably similar to the 1962 Bethune problem. He says that the challenger was not wearing glasses at some time during the day. He is not sure that the incident occurred in 1964. And he indentifies Rehnquist from a 1971 photo as the 1964 culprit. And there is still no independent account of any such event in 1964.

NEW AFFIDAVITS

Since the hearing, it has been interesting to note that a few new affidavits have come forth. For instance, Ruth Finn remembers her late husband remarking at the time of the 1971 confirmation that Justice Rehnquist is the "——— (expletive deleted) who tried to close the polls on the black voters." This hearsay is not explained. If it means that Justice Rehnquist participated in the Republican Ballot Security Program to prevent tombstones and vacant lots from voting early and often, it is correct. If it means something else, that meaning passed on with Mr. Finn.

We also hear from Susan B. Perkins who was a booth worker for the Democratic Party at Jackson Precinct in 1964. She remembers a man challenging voters and later returning to the poll at closing time to tell those in line that the time had expired for voting. She did not know him at the time, but * * * you guessed it—she recognized him 7 years later when his picture appeared in the paper as a nominee to the Supreme Court.

Mr. Louis Meyer writes a letter. He says: "* * * While I did not see Mr. Rehnquist at the polling places at which I stopped on election day in 1964, I do recall during the course of the day two people mentioning to me that 'Bill Rehnquist is a part of the voter line slow-down going on' and I understand Attorney Bill Rehnquist was removed from a polling place for harrassing voters.'" Set aside for a moment the miraculous memory of this chairman of the Democratic "get-out-the-vote" drive, this tid-bit does offer some enlightenment. We have all been part of campaigns and know that each side accuses the other of hyjinks, tearing up the other's signs, and so forth. Rumors abound. In this case, the mistaken identity with the Republican challenger removed from the Bethune Precinct in 1962 seems to be part of the rumor mill. In the heat of political campaigns, these things are to be expected. It is another thing altogether, however, to magnify that innuendo through over 20 years of hazy memory and bring it forth in a proceeding of this importance.

All of these accounts are convincing evidence that memory and rumor are elusive and sometimes deceptive—even to ourselves. I have yet to mention most of the testimony of the witnesses who had not heard a single rumor about Attorney Rehnquist's involvement in any challenging or harrassing activities in either 1962 or 1964. Seven individuals, including the Democratic county chairman of 1962, testified that Rehnquist had not challenged any voters and that such activity would have been completely outside his duties as a party official. They also described the challenging procedures and noted that Attorney Rehnquist did not even have the credentials which must be presented at each challenge. Again, it seems to me that the Judiciary Committee in 1971 summarized this well when it said" viewed in its entirety, the incident suggests at the very most a case of mistaken identity."

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I wanted to talk about Mr. Brosnahan for a minute since he got most of the media attention in this country. I will leave, of course, the remainder of this discussion up to our distinguished chairman.

Let me just conclude that I find it pretty incredible for Mr. Brosnahan, who did not appear in 1971 although he could have to suddenly appear and tell facts that he never told to any newspaper even though he had been repeatedly interviewed by them, and to not remember he was at Bethune, even though just a week before he told newspapers he was at Bethune. The reason he did not want to remember that, in my humble opinion, is that he knew if he agreed that when he saw Bill Rehnquist at Bethune School, that there certainly was a cloud over any allegations against Bill Rehnquist at Bethune School. Why? Because there was a man taken out who looked like Rehnquist, who was the same size as Rehnquist, who was named Wayne Bentson, who was a Republican, and who did they feel was disturbing people at the time.

The FBI records and the police report indicate that Mr. Bentson was the individual causing trouble. Frankly, Mr. Brosnahan's testimony and the other witnesses' testimony were refuted by more than adequate witnesses, one of whom was the leading Democrat. He said, "Had anything like what was alleged against Mr. Justice Rehnquist happened we would have known about it," and it simply did not happen.

On that I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, as I read the hearing record on Justice Rehnquist's nomination to be Chief Justice, I conclude that the following are the principal matters to be evaluated.

MINORITY VOTER INTIMIDATION IN PHOENIX

After the oral hearings had been concluded in 1971—this point is very relevant to the point made by Senator HATCH at the very end of his remarks—when Mr. Rehnquist's nomination as Associate Justice was under consideration by the Senate, a matter was raised on a 1-minute-to-midnight basis. Had Mr. Rehnquist harassed or intimidated minority voters in the 1964 elections in Phoenix? His flat out written answer: the hearings had been concluded and the committee had him answer in writing. No.

The same matter was raised more fully in the recent hearings and five witnesses testified under oath that Mr. Rehnquist had intimidated minority voters in the 1964 elections. Again Justice Rehnquist said: No.

Thus, there is credible evidence one way, but there is also doubt. On this matter standing alone, since Justice Rehnquist is a Supreme Court Justice of high reputation, the benefit of the doubt goes to him.

THE PLESSY VERSUS FERGUSON MEMO

In the fall of 1952, while Mr. Rehnquist was a law clerk of Supreme Court Justice Robert Jackson, he wrote a memo opposing Supreme Court intervention to end segregation in public schools by overturning Plessy versus Ferguson, the so-called separate but equal doctrine.

Justice Rehnquist takes the position that he fully supported doing away with the separate but equal doctrine and that the memo expressed not his own views but the tentative views of Justice Jackson.

Historians, legal scholars, Jackson's own secretary hotly dispute that Justice Jackson harbored any such separate but equal views. Justice Rehnquist says Jackson did.

After the most recent hearings were completed, the Washington Post, September 7, 1986, surfaced a 1970 memorandum written by Mr. Rehnquist while he was serving as Assistant Attorney General in the Nixon Justice Department. The memo advanced the idea of a consitutional amendment that would have allowed continued segregation in school districts through the use of freedom of choice plans and neighborhood schools.

The Justice Department dismisses the Rehnquist memo as just something that "addresses what someone in the White House wanted." Really?

There is doubt. In this instance, there is double-header doubt. But, on these matters, these segregation matters, standing alone, since Justice Rehnquist is a Supreme Court Justice of high reputation, the benefit of the doubt, strained as it may be, goes to him.

TATUM VERSUS LAIRD

During his days as Assistant Attorney General in the Nixon years, Mr. Rehnquist was deeply involved in the development of a policy of governmental surveillance of civilians by the Army. Some individuals brought a lawsuit claiming that their first amendment rights were violated by this surveillance and the case was known as Tatum versus Laird. Mr. Rehnquist personally knew of the disputed evidentiary facts in the case. In 1971, Mr. Rehnquist testified before the Senate Judiciary Committee, specifically mentioned Tatum versus Laird and specifically supported the Government's position in that specific case.

May I interject at this time. I was interested in the exchange between Senator KENNEDY and Senator HATCH on this Tatum versus Laird point. The point that Senator HATCH missed is as follows:

It is one thing for a lawyer or a trial judge to write a book on a general subject matter of the law, as Charles Evans Hughes had done, as Oliver Wendell Holmes had done, and as many later Justices of the Supreme Court had done, and then become a member of the Supreme Court and write an opinion or participate in a case that addresses the subject matter contained in that treatise or that book. Perfectly understandable.

The same is true for a Member of the U.S. Senate—and several Members of the U.S. Senate have gone up to the U.S. Supreme Court. Senator HATCH mentioned Justice Black; Mr. Truman appointed Sherman Minton; many have gone to the Court through the years.

It is one thing for a Senator of the United States to vote on a piece of legislation, a generic piece of legislation, and then to go up to the Supreme Court and there participate in the deliberation of an issue that is an outgrowth of that generic piece of legislation. It has happened before and it will happen again.

But it is a much different thing, Mr. President, it is a much different thing, for a lawyer to take a position in a specific case—Tatum versus Laird—and to stake out where that lawyer stands in that specific case while it is pending in a court of law—and that is what Mr. Rehnquist did—and then, having stated and declared a position in a specific case in controversy, a specific justiciable issue, go up to the U.S. Supreme Court and there sit in judgment on that same specific case. Indeed, he not only sat in judgment, but he cast the deciding vote, 5 to 4, in that case.

That is a far, far different thing than that which was described by Senator HATCH in terms of writing a book, writing a law review article or voting on a piece of generic legislation in the U.S. Senate, whether it be the Wage and Hour Act or the Norris-La Guardia Act or any other act. It is a far different thing to stake out a specific position in a specific case that is in litigation in court and then to rule on it "in an evenhanded and fair basis" as a member of the highest appellate court of the United States.

That just is not fair. And that is the test. One could go through the various canons of ethics or rules of conduct as set forth, for example, in section 455 of title 28 of the U.S. Code. They all provide the same standard—a judge is required to disqualify himself "in any proceeding in which his or her impartiality might reasonably be questioned."

I ask you, Mr. President, suppose you were on the losing side of Tatum versus Laird. Suppose you were either the attorney on the losing side or you were one of the parties to the proceeding, but you were on the losing side and you knew that a lawyer over there in the Justice Department named Rehnquist was dead set against your position in the case that was pending.

You would say, "Well, OK. He is an assistant attorney general over there and he testified before a committee and he is against our position in that case. It is pending in court. So be it. That is it."

Then a couple of years later or so, your case is being argued before the Supreme Court and you are sitting out there in the audience—and the litigants do come and sit there very anxiously while the Court is hearing oral arguments—and you look up and you say:

> My God. Look who is sitting there! Why, there is old Bill Rehnquist. He's the guy that already stated specifically where he stands in my case. I thought I was supposed to get impartiality. I thought I was supposed to get a situation where the judge's impartiality might not be open to reasonable question. How can a judgment be impartial if sitting up there amongst the nine is one who has already decided the specific case argued before the Court?

And then think, a few months later when hand-down day comes—and some of the litigants come back to the Court figuring that is the day their case is going to be handed down. Hand-down day comes and each of the nine Justices is permitted—and most of them avail themselves of the opportunity—to orally summarize his or her views as the opinion of the Court is announced. You sit there and you learn that the deciding vote against you was cast by the Justice that had already predetermined the case long, long ago.

Impartial justice? I wonder. Fair and evenhanded justice? I wonder.

So there is a lot of doubt, lots of doubt. Despite what Senator HATCH may have said about writing law books and law review articles and participating in statutory deliberations, there is a lot of doubt on this issue.

But one could argue, standing alone, since Justice Rehnquist is a Supreme Court Justice, and has a generally high reputation, one could argue the benefit of the doubt should go to him.

Judicial philosophy. There is not one iota of doubt that the Senate has the right under the Constitution to consider a judicial nominee's philosophical approach to important constitutional and legal questions. There is just no doubt about that. Presidents do so when they nominate a candidate. Roosevelt did it. Reagan does it. George Washington did it. Birds do it, bees do it—everybody does it.

Understandably, Presidents seek to place philosophically compatible individuals on the High Court. And the Senate, Mr. President, has no less a judgmental right when it exercises its duty to confirm. Justice Rehnquist himself, before he went on the Court, wrote an article urging the Senate to "restore its practice of thoroughly informing itself of the judicial philosophy of a Supreme Court nominee before voting to confirm him. * * *"

That is the one major writing by Justice Rehnquist with which I totally agree.

It is not difficult to formulate an amorphous, pleasant sounding "test" relating to judicial philosophy. It is very difficult, however, to apply such a "test."

I went through this "test" business when I was a new Senator, back in the days when the Haynsworth nomination was before us and in the first Rehnquist nomination.

□ 1550

During the debate on the Haynsworth nomination, I uttered these historic words:

> The Senate has the right and duty to consider the views of Supreme Court nominees on vital national issues. However, we should not seek a uniformity of opinion on the Court, and I believe a nominee should be rejected on this ground only if his views are so extreme as to place him outside the mainstream of American political and legal discourse.

I thought that was pretty nice—what I wrote back 15 or more years ago.

In 1971, in the debate on Rehnquist, I liked that quote so much I stated it again and then I added this footnote. I said:

> Once again, our quest is not an identity or conformity of philosophy between nominee and Senator. Rather, we ask, are his views so patently irregular as to be outside the rationally debatable judicial mainstream?

And I liked that, too, by the way.

I found, based on such evidence then at hand, that both Haynsworth and Rehnquist passed the "test." I voted to confirm Rehnquist, but voted against Haynsworth on other grounds (which probably on reflection is one of my less spectacular votes).

We now know a great deal more about Justice Rehnquist's judicial philosophy—lots more, volumes more.

In common vernacular, Justice Rehnquist is a conservative—a very staunch conservative, indeed, the most conservative Justice on the Court.

Here's what I take to be the cutting edge of his judicial philosophy.

Whenever a challenge to Government action affecting individual rights is before him, Justice Rehnquist, as a conservative, almost always comes down on the side of Government. That is it really it in capsule form.

I find it ironic that conservatives who in their political and private lives profess the virtues of rugged individualism and who are the most outspoken opponents of an activist government role, end up being the most pro government, anti-individual in their judicial opinions. It takes more than a black robe to make this metamorphosis.

In any event, when Justice Rehnquist was distinguishing himself as a student at Stanford Law School, he took a course in Constitutional law. Undoubtedly, the first two cases considered in that course were Marbury versus Madison and McCulloch versus Maryland. These are the landmark, bedrock decisions of Chief Justice Marshall which set forth the role of the Supreme Court as the guardian of the Federal Constitution.

Marbury confirmed the power of the Court as the final arbiter of the Federal Constitution. McCulloch established that national interests must predominate, are supreme over State choices in areas of national constitutional concern.

One comes away from a reading of Justice Rehnquist's opinions with considerable doubt about his commitment to these fundamental constitutional precepts. It seems he would upset the judicial bedrock of the Nation on which rests nearly 200 years of our Nation's constitutional heritage. This is conservatism run amok.

One can steadfastly believe in States' rights without denying the precepts of Marbury and McCulloch. Rehnquist seems to believe so fervently in the authority of State action as to deny virtually any constitutionally protected individual or Federal interest that conflicts with State interests. He would, it seems, abrogate Marbury and McCulloch, he would sharply constrict the role of the Supreme Court; he would radically narrow the scope of the Constitution, converting it from a living statement of liberty to a narrow, almost sterile document.

So it may seem. Yet, perhaps there is doubt. Even on this matter, standing alone, since Justice Rehnquist is a Supreme Court Justice of high reputation and recognized intellect, the benefit of the doubt goes to him.

Thus, on each item, standing alone, Justice Rehnquist can be given the benefit of doubt and, on that basis, he probably will be confirmed by the Senate.

But these matters do not stand alone. They stand in the aggregate. They stand as a portrait of the personality and judicial philosophy of William Rehnquist. But, there is a deeply disquieting sense arising from the Rehnquist record that compels me to conclude that he is not entitled to inexhaustible benefit of all doubts.

Remember, we are not considering a Cabinet nominee where the term of office is limited and a mistake, once made, can be remedied. We are not considering a Federal District Court nominee where if we make a mistake it is but one of 575; or a Circuit Court nominee where if we make one mistake it is but one of 168.

We are considering the Chief Justice of the United States. The one—the only. We are voting on the individual who may well serve in that mighty and powerful position into the 21st century.

About a nominee for Chief Justice, we cannot harbor an array of disquieting doubts. About a nominee for Chief Justice our minds and consciences must be clear and unhesitating.

About William Rehnquist I have no such certainty. I have no such confidence. I can give Mr. Rehnquist the benefit of the doubt on each of the issues raised against him at his hearing. But I cannot erase from my mind the doubt which the totality of that record creates about his fitness for this high position.

Therefore, I will vote against the confirmation of William Rehnquist.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

□ 1600

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER [Mr. CHAFEE]. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I think over the course of the past several hours, the areas of principal concern for those of us who must cast our vote on this nomination have been brought to the attention of the Senate. I commend my colleagues—our ranking minority member, Senator BIDEN; my good friend from Ohio, Senator METZENBAUM, and the distinguished Senator from Missouri, Senator EAGLETON, on their excellent presentations. Senator EAGLETON really captured the essence of case against elevating Mr. Rehnquist to be Chief Justice of the United States.

Over the period of the next few days, we will have a chance to further develop the case against Justice Rehnquist.

One of the areas which the Senator from Missouri analyzed with great insight and persuasion was the role of Justice Rehnquist in the Laird versus Tatum case.

At the outset of this debate, I want to point out to our colleagues the representations that were made in the committee's report really do a disservice to the Members misconstruing the heart of the issue, which was so eloquently explained by the Senator from Missouri. It is a basic and fundamental point, that Mr. Rehnquist had prejudged the case, had actually testified before a Senate committee on that particular case, indicating that the plaintiffs did not have a cause of action and then ultimately participated in the case when it reached the Supreme Court and cast the key vote to decide the case against the plaintiffs.

This is basically the heart of the issue. One could not really draw that conclusion from examining the report of the committee. I refer to page 13, which concerns the Laird versus Tatum analysis, and which is very brief because it basically just reprints the memorandum that was written by Justice Rehnquist in support of his position.

In the introductory paragraphs on page 13, the report states:

> The first issue raised is the contention that by virtue of his testimony as Assistant Attorney General during the time the case was in the lower courts, Justice Rehnquist, after having been appointed to the Supreme Court, should have recused himself from considering Laird v. Tatum when it came before the Supreme Court, because of his knowledge of the disputed evidentiary facts. Second, his detractors suggest that Justice Rehnquist was not candid with the committee in 1971, when he stated that he did not have personal knowledge of the disputed evidentiary facts in the case.

□ 1610

That is not the issue. They say the first issue raised was that contention. That is not the issue. The issue is he was asked about his view by Senator Ervin at a Senate hearing and he indicated that the plaintiffs would not have a cause of action; therefore, he had basically made his decision that there was not a cause of action. He had decided the case, so to speak.

It is well understood how he could reach that since he was the architect, when he was in the Justice Department, of the policy that was being questioned.

The majority says the major question concerned Justice Rehnquist's knowledge of the disputed evidentiary facts. That is not so.

Second, his detractors suggest that Justice Rehnquist was not candid with the committee in 1971, when he stated that he did not have personal knowledge of the disputed evidentiary facts in the case.

Again, this is not the only issue.

Professor Hazard's letter succinctly states all the issues posed by Justice Rehnquist's participation in Laird versus Tatum, and I ask unanimous consent that the full letter by Mr. Hazard be printed in the RECORD. I want to refer to particular provisions of it at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See Exhibit 1)

Mr. KENNEDY. The letter outlines the particular fact situation and the actions that were taken by Mr. Rehnquist. Then it points out:

When Laird v. Tatum came before the Supreme Court, a motion to recuse Justice Rehnquist was filed by the plaintiffs. They argued that Justice Rehnquist was disqualified by reason of his prior relationship to the case, in that he had expressed opinions on issues in the case and that he had presented the Justice Department's position before a Senate Committee hearing. Responding to the motion, Justice Rehnquist rejected these contentions as insufficient to require his disqualification. In doing so he relied extensively on the analysis in Frank, Disqualification of Judges: In Support of the Bayh bill, 35 Law & Contemp. Prob. 43 (1970), which in my opinion correctly summarized the law of disqualification as it then stood.

In recent testimony before the Senate concerning his participation in the transaction out of which Laird v. Tatum arose, Justice Rehnquist stated, "I have no recollection of any participation in the formulation of policy on use of the military to conduct surveillance or collect intelligence concerning domestic civilian activities."

Mr. President, one of the key documents and memorandums that were made available to the Senate Judiciary Committee was a detailed memorandum of Mr. Justice Rehnquist on that very subject matter about the use of the Federal Bureau of Investigation as well as Army intelligence to be targeted against the individuals and groups back in the late 1960's. But evidently, that knowledge about his activities had been forgotten.

From other evidence, chiefly the testimony of Mr. Robert Jordan, General Counsel of the Army at the time that the surveillance policy was formulated, it appears that Mr. Rehnquist, as he then was, had a relationship to the surveillance program beyond that disclosed in his opinion in Laird v. Tatum or revealed in his testimony before the Senate last month.

I imagine Mr. Hazard's comments would be much more targeted if he had had the access to the memorandums that we did. He is right on point. He has reached the obvious conclusion that those of us who had the chance to examine the material reached without benefit of the memorandum.

Now, talking about the general counsel, Robert Jordan—

According to this evidence, the surveillance policy was formulated in the early months of 1969. At that time Mr. Rehnquist was Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Office of Legal Counsel. On behalf of the Justice Department that Office negotiated with the Army in formulating the surveillance policy. The negotiations were extensive. The circumstances strongly suggest that Mr. Rehnquist was personally and substantially involved in them.

That is correct, too. We can say that unequivocally.

These circumstances are that the subject was highly important, the Office is small in size, and Mr. Rehnquist himself sent a key transmittal memorandum. The negotiations resulted in a policy statement that was then adopted by President Nixon, and which in turn was the basis of the Government action complained of in the litigation in Laird v. Tatum.

First, in my opinion Justice Rehnquist's position as head of the Office of Legal Counsel constituted grounds of disqualification from participating in Laird v. Tatum, unless the significance of that relationship were overcome by additional evidence showing that he in fact was not involved in the matter while it was in the office. In a matter of such substance and complexity as the surveillance policy, it is implausible that the head of the government office responsible for development of its legal aspects would not be personally involved in considerable detail concerning the facts and issues going into the policy and its formulation. On that basis, Mr. Rehnquist was the responsible counsel in the matter in question, and as well a potential witness concerning any factual issues regarding the policy. Each of these two relationships is independently a ground for disqualification.

Each of them, Mr. President; each of them.

A lawyer directly involved in a transaction cannot properly later sit as a judge in a case in which that transaction is in dispute. As stated in the article by Mr. Frank which Justice Rehnquist cited: "Justice disqualify in government cases when they have been directly involved in some fashion in the particular matter, and not otherwise."

The letter continues to support that thesis. It goes on:

In his opinion in Laird v. Tatum, Justice Rehnquist stated that "I never participated, either of record or in any advisory capacity . . . in the government's conduct of the case of Laird v. Tatum." But that statement is irrelevant if he was counsel in the transaction out of which the case arose, a basis for disqualification that was well recognized then as now.

Well recognized then as a basis of disqualification as now:

Justice Rehnquist appears also disqualified because he was a potential witness, at least at the discovery stage in Laird v. Tatum.

No question that had the plaintiffs been successful in the circuit court, there would have been discovery. Justice Rehnquist's involvement in the development of that policy would have been made a part of the record. So he is a potential witness. The Hazard memorandum indicates another reason why he should have disqualified himself

He continues:

In his testimony before the Senate, he denied having knowledge of "evidentiary facts." The standard relevant to the question is not "evidentiary facts" but facts relating to the "subject matter" of the litigation.

Second, when the case of Laird v. Tatum was before the Supreme Court it was Justice Rehnquist's responsibility on his own initiative to address and resolve all issues concerning his disqualification.

□ 1620

We have to remember that Justice Rehnquist only responded to the question of whether he was going to participate after the plaintiff requested that he recuse himself. He did not bring this up voluntarily. It was only in response to the motion to recuse himself.

Professor Hazard makes the point that in a case such as Laird versus Tatum, it was his—responsibility on his own initiative to address and resolve all issues concerning his disqualification. It was not the parties' responsibility to raise such matters, although they had a right to do so if they had access to the necessary facts. In his opinion in Laird v. Tatum, Justice Rehnquist referred, first, to the fact that he had not been counsel in the "case," i.e., the litigation that ensued after his involvement in the transaction, and, second, to his statements in public and as spokesman for the Justice Department before the Senate. Thus, Justice Rehnquist addressed only his publicly known involvements and omitted any reference to an involvement, as counsel in the transaction.

Remember, he was architect of the military surveillance program.

It was simply his duty to resolve both the publicly known possible bases of disqualification and those arising from an involvement that was confidential. Indeed, it is even more vital to fairness in adjudication that a judge resolve grounds or recusal which arise from confidential facts, for the parties ordinarily are helpless to raise such grounds.

That is an important tenet of judicial ethics that was completely overlooked and dismissed, not even referenced by Justice Rehnquist in this case.

Justice Rehnquist's addressing the publicly known grounds of recusal, but omitting reference to the confidential ones, would have been proper only if he had forgotten that his office in the Justice Department had handled the surveillance policy negotiations and that he himself was involved to a substantial extent.

For Justice Rehnquist to have forgotten his involvement, given the evidence that has been made available to our committee, would be extraordinary.

If when writing his opinion in Laird v. Tatum, Justice Rehnquist has not forgotten his involvement in the surveillance policy negotiations, then his opinion constituted a misrepresentation to the parties and to his colleagues on the Supreme Court. In such a matter, a lawyer or judge is expected to give the whole truth.

Professor Hazard is an architect of the standards, the ethics, selected by the American Bar Association. He is one of the very outstanding, thoughtful individuals in the world of academia who is responding to a request of a Member of this body to comment on this particular issue. He has provided a very important and significant service. He has nothing obviously to gain from responding to the request of the Senator from Maryland. He concludes:

[Finally, Justice Rehnquist had a duty of candor to the Senate in answering questions concerning Laird v. Tatum. The Senate hearing was an evidentiary inquiry into his qualifications for the office of Chief Justice. In making statements before such a tribunal, whether sworn or not, a lawyer or judge has an obligation to be fully truthful. Justice Rehnquist complied with duty only if his statement is accepted that he had "no recollection of any participation in the formulation of policy on the use of the military to conduct surveillance." Whether that statement should be accepted is a matter of judgment. It was made by a lawyer of the highest intelligence concerning sensitive state policy over which his office had direct responsibility early in his service in government, and about which he had been asked to search his recollection on three official occasions.]

We are not talking about some incidental matter that anyone reasonably could have forgotten about. Justice Rehnquist remembers, people in this country remember the turmoil of the period the series of demonstrations against the war here in this city, hundreds of thousands of people pouring into the city, the threat to close down the city of Washington with individuals lying down at the airport and across railroad tracks and over the boulevards.

That was the atmosphere and climate. It was a crisis climate and atmosphere and Justice Rehnquist was the author of the memoranda advising what was permissible and what was not. And yet as Professor Hazard points out, on three different occasions, even though he was told he would be asked about these questions and he had an opportunity to refresh his recollection going back and examining any of this material which existed in the Justice Department, we were unable to get the Justice to comment.

Mr. President, we will have a chance to continue review of not only that matter but others, but I want to point out again to the Members we did not have the opportunity in 1971 to go over this case. I heard my friend and colleague from Utah saying earlier, when I tried to engage in an exchange with him on the Laird case, that we have gone over this a long time ago.

That is not correct, Mr. President. Laird versus Tatum was decided when the Justice was on the Supreme Court. The only time we have had an opportunity to go over it is during the course of these hearings. It related to actions of the Justice from some time ago but we only had the opportunity to examine this in light of our recent hearings. So even though these matters related to actions that were taken some time ago, they are very significant and current and important in terms of the Justice's qualifications to sit as the Chief Justice of the United States. I see my good friend and colleague from Ohio, who I believe wants to address the Senate. I yield the floor at this time.

EXHIBIT 1

YALE LAW SCHOOL,
401A YALE STATION,
New Haven, CT, September 8, 1986.

Senator CHARLES MATHIAS,
U.S. Senate, Senate Russell Office Building, Washington, DC

DEAR SENATOR MATHIAS: You have asked my opinion about the propriety of the conduct of Justice William Rehnquist in regard to Laird v. Tatum.

The essential facts as I have been given them are as follows: Laird v. Tatum was a suit to enjoin a certain Government information gathering and surveillance program that was adopted in 1969. The case was brought to the Supreme Court by the Government's appeal from a decision of the Court of Appeals, which had held that the lawsuit was maintainable. The effect of the Court of Appeals' decision was that the plaintiffs could have proceeded to the discovery stage and perhaps then on to the merits. The Supreme Court reversed, holding that the plaintiffs' lacked standing and hence that the suit should be dismissed without going into the merits. Justice Rehnquist participated in that decision and, since the decision was 5-4, cast a vote necessary to the result.

When Laird v. Tatum came before the Supreme Court, a motion to recuse Justice Rehnquist was filed by the plaintiffs. They argued that Justice Rehnquist was disqualified by reason of his prior relationship to the case, in that he had expressed opinions on issues in the case and that he had presented the Justice Department's position before a Senate Committee hearing. Responding to the motion, Justice Rehnquist rejected these contentions as insufficient to require his disqualification. In doing so he relied extensively on the analysis in Frank, Disqualification of Judges: In Support of the Bayh Bill, 35 Law & Contemp. Prob. 43 (1970), which in my opinion correctly summarized the law for disqualification as it then stood.

In recent testimony before the Senate concering his participation in the transaction out of which Laird v. Tatum arose, Justice Rehnquist stated, "I have no recollection of any participation in the formulation of policy on use of the military to conduct surveillance or collect intelligence concerning domestic civilian activities." From other evidence, chiefly the testimony of Mr. Robert Jordan, General Counsel of the Army at the time that the surveillance policy was formulated, it appears that Mr. Rehnquist, as he then was, had a relationship to the surveillance program beyond that disclosed in his opinion in Laird v. Tatum or revealed in his testimony before the Senate last month. According to this evidence, the surveillance policy was formulated in the early months of 1969. At that time Mr. Rehnquist was Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Office of Legal Counsel. On behalf of the Justice Department that Office negotiated with the Army in formulating the surveillance policy. The negotiations were extensive. The circumstances strongly suggest that Mr. Rehnquist was personally and substantially involved in them. These circumstances are that the subject was highly important, the Office is small in size, and Mr. Rehnquist himself sent a key transmittal memorandum. The negotiations resulted in a policy statement that was then adopted by President Nixon, and which in turn was the basis of the Government action complained of in the litigation in Laird v. Tatum.

First, in my opinion Justice Rehnquist's position as head of the Office of Legal Counsel constituted grounds of disqualification from participating in Laird v. Tatum, unless the significance of that relationship were overcome by additional evidence showing that he in fact was not involved in the matter while it was in the office. In a matter of such substance and complexity as the surveillance policy, it is implausible that the head of the government law office responsible for development of its legal aspects would not be personally involved in considerable detail concerning the facts and issues going into the policy and its formulation. On that basis, Mr. Rehnquist was the responsible counsel in the matter in question, and as well a potential witness concerning any factual issues regarding the policy. Each of these two relationships is independently a ground for disqualification.

A lawyer directly involved in a transaction cannot properly later sit as a judge in a case in which that transaction is in dispute. As stated in the article by Mr. Frank which Justice Rehnquist cited:

"Justice disqualify in government cases when they have been directly involved in some fashion in the particular matter, and not otherwise."

Mr. Rehnquist's relationship to the transaction was essentially the same as if he had been involved as legal counsel for the Internal Revenue Service in working up a tax investigation program and then sat as judge in a case challenging the program, or while in the Justice Department passed upon corporate merger or electoral districting policy and then sat in a case involving the policy.

In his opinion in Laird v. Tatum, Justice Rehnquist stated that "I never participated, either of record or in any advisory capacity . . . in the government's conduct of the case of Laird v. Tatum." But that statement is irrelevant if he was counsel in the transaction out of which the case arose, a basis of disqualification that was well recognized then as now.

Justice Rehnquist appears also disqualified because he was a potential witness, at least at the discovery stage in Laird v. Tatum. In his testimony before the Senate, he denied having knowledge of "evidentiary facts." The standard relevant to the question is not "evidentiary facts" but facts relating to the "subject matter" of the litigation.

Second, when the case of Laird v. Tatum, was before the Supreme Court it was Justice

Rehnquist's responsbility on his own initiative to address and resolve all issues concerning his disqualification. It was not the parties' responsibility to raise such matters, although they had a right to do so if they had access to the necessary facts. In his opinion in Laird v. Tatum, Justice Rehnquist referred, first, to the fact that he had not been counsel in the "case," i.e., the litigation that ensued after his involvement in the transaction, and, second, to his statements in public and as spokesman for the Justice Department before the Senate. Thus, Justice Rehnquist addressed only his publicly known involvements and omitted any reference to an involvement, as counsel in the transaction, that was at least as significant but which was not publicly known. It was his duty to resolve both the publicly known possible bases of disqualification and those arising from an involvement that was confidential. Indeed, it is even more vital to fairness in adjudication that a judge resolve grounds of recusal which arise from confidential facts, for the parties ordinarily are helpless to raise such grounds.

Justice Rehnquist's addressing the publicly known grounds of recusal, but omitting reference to the confidential ones, would have been proper only if he had forgotten that his office in the Justice Department had handled the surveillance policy negotiations and that he himself was involved to a substantial extent. If when writing his opinion in Laird v. Tatum, Justice Rehnquist had not forgotten his involvement in the surveillance policy negotiations, then his opinion constituted a misrepresentation to the parties and to his colleagues on the Supreme Court. In such a matter, a lawyer or judge is expected to give the whole truth.

Finally, Justice Rehnquist had a duty of candor to the Senate in answering questions concerning Laird v. Tatum. The Senate hearing was an evidentiary inquiry into his qualifications for the office of Chief Justice. In making statements before such a tribunal, whether sworn or not, a lawyer or judge has an obligation to be fully truthful. Justice Rehnquist complied with duty only if his statement is accepted that he had "no recollection of any participation in the formulation of policy on the use of the military to conduct surveillance." Whether that statement should be accepted is a matter of judgment. It was made by a lawyer of the highest intelligence concerning sensitive state policy over which his office had direct responsibility early in his service in government, and about which he had been asked to search his recollection on three official occasions.

Sincerely,

GEOFFREY C. HAZARD, Jr.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who seeks recognition?

Mr. KENNEDY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

□ 1640

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, Professor Geoffrey Hazard of the Yale Law School has raised an ethics question concerning Justice Rehnquist in connection with the Laird versus Tatum case.

I would like to make a few remarks on that facet of this hearing.

LAIRD VERSUS TATUM

Opponents of Justice Rehnquist have raised two main issues with respect to Laird versus Tatum. This case involved surveillance activities by the Department of the Army in connection with attempts to control civil disorder in the late 1960's. This was a class action suit brought against the Government on the grounds that the Army's activities had a chilling effect on the first amendment rights of the individuals being observed by the Army. During the time the case was progressing through the lower courts Justice Rehnquist was the Assistant Attorney General for the Office of Legal Counsel. In 1971 he testified before the Senate Judiciary Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights chaired by Senator Sam Ervin. He testified as an expert witness for the Department of Justice on the subject of statutory and constitutional law dealing with the authority of the Executive Branch to gather information on private citizens.

The first issue raised against Justice Rehnquist is the contention that by virtue of his testimony as Assistant Attorney General during the time the case was in the lower courts, Justice Rehnquist after having been appointed to the Supreme Court should have recused himself from considering Laird versus Tatum when it came before the Supreme Court, because of his knowledge of the disputed evidentiary facts. Second, his detractors suggest that Justice Rehnquist was not candid with the committee when he stated that he did not have personal knowledge of the disputed evidentiary facts in the case.

While the controversy arising out of Justice Rehnquist's participation in the case is couched in terms of whether he had personal knowledge of the disputed evidentiary facts, the real issue was, what constituted disputed facts. Thus, both accusations are really the same.

Some opposed to the nomination, have attached great significance to a memorandum dated March 25, 1969, from the Office of Legal Counsel, Department of Justice, dealing with intelligence-gathering assignments within the Department of Justice and the Department of the Army. This memorandum has been cited as showing personal knowledge on the part of Justice Rehnquist of the facts in Laird versus Tatum. Also, cited as supporting this view is testimony given by Justice Rehnquist to Senator Ervin's Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights in 1971. In his testimony before Senator Ervin, Justice Rehnquist referred to a computer printout of intelligence material. He stated that the information pertaining to the computer printout was provided to him or his staff by the office of the Deputy Attorney General for use in preparing his testimony before Senator Ervin.

Neither the memorandum nor the reference to the printout provides any objective basis for concluding that Justice Rehnquist had any particular knowledge of the facts in Laird versus Tatum.

Both Justice Rehnquist and his opponents agree to the facts of his testimony. What they disagree on is its legal significance—whether it constitutes having "personal knowledge of disputed evidentiary facts." What is apparent here is that his critics disagree with his legal analysis. At the time Justice Rehnquist was Assistant Attorney General, he repeatedly made it clear in testimony before Senator Ervin's Subcommittee on the Constitution that his prepared testimony did not rest on personal knowledge of any ongoing case. The following excerpts from Mr. Rehnquist's testimony before Senator Ervin's subcomittee provide examples of this fact in referring to Army intelligence-gathering activities which, as stated, was the issue in the Laird case.

Justice Rehnquist stated:

As you might imagine, the Justice Department, in selecting a witness to respond to your inquiries, had to pick someone who did not have personal knowledge in every field. So I can simply give you my understanding * * *.

Next,

The office of the Deputy Attorney General * * * advised me or one of my staff as to the arrangement with respect to the computer printout from the Army data bank, and it was incorporated into the prepared statement that I read to the subcommittee. I had then and have now no personal knowledge of the arrangement, nor so far as I know have I ever seen or been apprised of the contents of this particular printout.

Next,

While it is not altogether clear to me, certainly not from personal knowledge * * * the extent the Army guidelines were actually carried out and practiced, it should be apparent that the data base used by internal security is much more restricted * * * than were the guidelines printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Accordingly, it seems convincingly clear that Justice Rehnquist did not have any personal knowledge of the disputed facts in the Laird versus Tatum case.

Justice Rehnquist in responding to questions from Senator LEAHY on the subject of his analysis of the pertinent statute affecting a judge's disqualification from the Laird versus Tatum case and any second thoughts he might have today on that position stated:

I realize people might disagree with me but that was the position I took in that case

* * *. I never thought of it again until these hearings, to tell the truth. I have gone back and read the opinion, and I think under the statute as it was changed after Laird v. Tatum; I think there would be probably a very strong ground for disqualification. But I didn't feel dissatisfied with the way I had behaved under the statute as it then stood.

This was a forthright statement by Justice Rehnquist concerning his views on the controlling statute in effect at the time as applied to the facts of the case. Additionally Justice Rehnquist acknowledges that subseqent amendments to the law could prossibly require a different conclusion.

In summary, the issue raised was one of legal analysis, upon which reasonable jurists could differ; however, in no way should Justice Rehnquist's actions be construed as being improper.

Mr. President, another incident concerning this matter is one that was alleged to have occurred at the Phoenix polling place.

The allegation that Justice Rehnquist challenged or harassed minority voters at a polling place in Phoenix during the 1960's again found itself an issue during the confirmation hearings in 1986. Similar allegations were raised in 1971 during his consideration for the position of associate justice. It should be noted at this juncture that the challenging of voters in Arizona at the time was a lawful election procedure. I repeat, the challenging of voters in Arizona at the time was a lawful election procedure. A challenger was an individual legally appointed as a representative by both Republican and Democratic Parties. The primary duty of a challenger was to observe for irregularities at the polling place. The conclusion reached by the committee in 1971 was that the allegations had been thoroughly investigated and found "to be wholly unsubstantiated" and, viewed in its entirety, the committee felt that the incident suggested at the very most a case of mistaken identity.

The allegation of voter harassment was originally made by the Southwest Conference of the NAACP in a resolution presented for the record at Justice Rehnquist's hearing in 1971. This resolution alleged that Justice Rehnquist had harassed black voters in 1968. In 1971 Justice Rehnquist categorically denied this charge and stated that he had nothing to do with polling activities in 1968.

At the same time in 1971 it was alleged by two witnesses before the committee that Justice Rehnquist had engaged in voter harassment in Phoenix, AZ in 1962. There was, in fact, an incident of voter harassment at the Bethune polling place in Phoenix, AZ during the 1962 elections, and the FBI investigated the matter. The FBI investigative report of that incident dated November 1962 was made available to the Judiciary Committee in 1971, as well as 1986. Justice Rehnquist's name was not mentioned in the 1962 FBI investigative report as either a participant in or a witness to the incidents under investigation. Mr. Carl Muecke, U.S. attorney for the district of Arizona, and A Mr. Carl Sims, who had spent a great deal of time campaigning for the Democratic Party, both, when interviewed in 1962 by the FBI, specifically identified the individual involved in voter harassment at the Bethune polling place as Mr. Wayne C. Bentson. Mr. Bentson when interviewed by the FBI—in 1962, 1971 and 1986—admitted that he was the individual involved in an incident at the Bethune polling place in the 1962 general election.

During the course of the 1962 investigation one of the individuals interviewed by the FBI was Mr. Robert Tate. Mr. Tate, when interviewed described the incident involving voter harassment which occurred at the Bethune polling place in 1962. In 1971, Mr. Tate and another individual, Mr. Jordan Harris, who was not interviewed by the FBI in 1962, sent affidavits to the Judiciary Committee, alleging that Justice Rehnquist had taken part in voter harassment at the Bethune polling place on November 3, 1964, as opposed to 1962. The incident described by Messrs. Tate and Harris in their 1971 affidavit is remarkably similar to Mr. Tate's own recollection when interviewed by the FBI in 1962 regarding the incident which took place at the Bethune polling place that same year, 1962; with the exception that Mr. Tate did not name Justice Rehnquist in his 1962 statement.

Judge Charles L. Hardy was the Democratic Party attorney in charge of the Election Advisory Committee and arbitrator with respect to voter challenges and disputes during the 1960's. Judge Hardy in 1971, after being informed that testimony before the committee that same year indicated that Justice Rehnquist was involved in voter harassment in 1964, wrote the committee:

> I am informed . . . the events in question occurred during the general election of 1964. It is my recollection and the recollection of a number of others, both Democrats and Republicans, that actually 1962 was the correct year . . . I never observed Mr. Rehnquist attempting to challenge voters at any polling place. I understand that there was testimony that he had challenged voters at Bethune and Granada precincts. I can state unequivocally that Mr. Rehnquist did not act as a challenger at Bethune precinct.

In a November 1971 letter to Senators BAYH, HART, and KENNEDY, regarding his election activities during the 1960's, Justice Rehnquist wrote:

> I did speak at the school for challengers in 1962, I believe, in much the same manner as in 1960. On election day, my recollection is that I spent most of the day in Republican county headquarters; however, I think that on several occasions in 1962, just as in 1960, I went to precincts where disputes had arisen in an effort to resovle them.

Justice Rehnquist's responses in 1971, are totally consistent with the information available to the committee then and now in 1986. The FBI's investigative report and eyewitness accounts are totally supportive of Justice Rehnquist's rendition of his election activities in the 1960's.

Now in 1986, individuals have come forward with essentially the same allegations against Justice Rehnquist. That is, sometime in the 1960's, and at some polling place, that Justice Rehnquist challenged, harassed or intimidated voters.

Individuals who claimed to have information concerning the allegation of voter harassment were invited to testify before the Judiciary Committee in 1986. Each of these witnesses were interviewed by the FBI prior to testimony before the committee. Thirteen individuals came before the committee in 1986 and testified on the voter intimidation matter. Five of these individuals were called by those opposed to Justice Rehnquist. All five who testified that Justice Rehnquist had in some manner harassed or challenged voters failed to make any such allegations against him during his confirmation hearing in 1971 to be Associate Justice.

Some of those who testified that Justice Rehnquist had harassed voters, as well as others interviewed by the FBI, did not know Justice Rehnquist at the time of the alleged incident and identified him based on photographs which they saw 7 to 9 years after the fact.

The following cases in point will support the conclusion that Justice Rehnquist at no time challenged or harassed voters at the polling place in the 1960's or at any other time.

James J. Brosnahan, former assistant U.S. attorney in 1962, testified before the committee in 1986 that Justice Rehnquist had challenged voters in 1962. However, prior to his testimony Mr. Brosnahan stated publicly that he never saw Justice Rehnquist actually challenge any voters at a polling place. He also stated publicly that the precinct where he saw Justice Rehnquist and where he made an appearance in his official capacity as assistant U.S. attorney to investigate complaints, was in 1962 at the Bethune polling place. However, when Mr. Brosnahan appeared before the Judiciary Committee in 1986 he was unable to recall the precinct in question. In fact, he informed Senator HATCH that "the name of the precinct is not that clear to me. The stories talk about Bethune." He now remembered investigating several disturbances at various precincts. Mr. Brosnahan also stated that he was accompanied by an FBI agent during his election day investigations in 1962. As previously mentioned, there was an incident at the Bethune polling place in 1962 and it involved an individual by the name of Wayne C. Bentson.

A search of FBI's files fail to reveal any report filed by Mr. Brosnahan, or the FBI agent that allegedly accompanied him on election day 1962, regarding voter harassment by Justice Rehnquist. Although the FBI files do reveal that the Bureau received phone calls concerning complaints at various precincts in 1962 and 1964. There is no mention of Justice Rehnquist's name in any FBI report or complaint concerning this matter at that time.

Justice Rehnquist's role in the elections during the 1960's was that of legal advisor to the Maricopa County Republican Party. In this position he was required, on occasion, to visit precincts where disturbances occurred in order to mediate disputes and advise challengers.

Mr. Brosnahan's testimony that Justice Rehnquist was present at some precinct, in 1962, is completely consistent with Justice Rehnquist's statement in 1971 and to the Judiciary Committee in 1986.

One of the witnesses that testified before the committee on the subject of voter harassment, was Judge Vincent Maggiore, former Democratic Party chairman for Maricopa County. Judge Maggiore told the committee:

As a precinct committeeman, in the latter part of 1960, I was elected by the committee as the county chairman, the Maricopa County chairman. I was reelected in 1962, and I was the county chairman that was in office at the time all of the problems that you are facing came into being. I stayed county chairman until 1963.

At the time, I was county chairman in 1962, I was the culprit that caused all of your problems today. I have been a lifetime Democrat, and at the time of the problems as to voting with minorities, and Bethune was caused by me. I thought, as a matter of fact at that time that there was a little too much activity in the precincts, and I was the one that called the U.S. Attorney's Office . . . I am the one that caused the action that was taken by the U.S. Attorney's Office.

During this period of time, and I appreciate the seriousness of this today, at no time did anybody come to me and state that Justice Rehnquist had committed any of the acts that I have heard for 2 of 3 days. I feel that I was the party leader . . . and, for sure, all of these things should have come to me.

After the incident at Bethune, I realized that I was not going to get anything done as far as action by the U.S. Attorney's Office or action by the sheriff and the police were called also . . . I hope you realize that after 25 years it is very difficult to recollect each and every thing that occurred at that time. Too many things have passed.

But what I do recollect was that after Wayne Bentson was taken care of—and there was a little battle,—I hope the statute of limitations is broadened, because I may be the one that caused that battle to take place. I told some of my assistants to go and help out, to clear up the situation in Bethune.

I was at Bethune two or three times that day, and I was at other precincts where I thought this activity was not in accordance with the law. During all of this time, I never saw Justice Rehnquist there. I never saw him at any of the other precints either . . . A couple of days after the election and the incident in Bethune, I stopped Justice Rehnquist in the street. I told Justice Rehnquist that I was a little disturbed. Because I felt that there were some deprivation of certain people's rights.

Justice Rehnquist—and I'm paraphrasing it—stated at that time he agreed with me, that there should be something done in regards to protecting people's voting rights, that they were very important.

□ 1710

Judge Thomas Murphy was another individual knowledgeable of election activities in the 1960's. Judge Murphy, presently a judge for American Samoa, and the 1964 Democratic county chairman of Maricopa County, informed the FBI in 1986 that he personally, in 1964, investigated complaints which were made about activities at the polling places. He stated that the allegations being made about Justice Rehnquist were totally unfounded.

Finally, Mr. Ed Cassidy, former police officer with 29 years' service on the Phoenix Police Department testified in 1986 before the Judiciary Committee. Mr. Cassidy's statement to the committee, also corroborated by the FBI's 1962 investigation, utterly refutes the allegation that Justice Rehnquist was involved in voter challenging or harassment in Phoenix.

It is clear that a Republican challenger was involved in an incident at the Bethune polling place in 1962, and that this challenger was consequently escorted out of the polling place by a police officer. This person, the only person involved in the improper challenging in 1962, was Mr. Wayne C. Bentson.

In 1986 the committee expanded its investigative effort and also invited numerous witnesses to testify regarding the allegation. On completion of this investigation the committee came to essentially the same conclusion as that reached in 1971, Justice Rehnquist, although a legal advisor at the time, did not participate in any voter challenging or harassment. In fact, when all the evidence was reviewed it gave a more definitive and favorable impression of Justice Rehnquist's activities and duties as a legal advisor.

Mr. DENTON. Mr. President, I rise to urge my colleagues to give their wholehearted support to confirm William Rehnquist as Chief Justice of the United States.

Justice Rehnquist has served with distinction in the U.S. Supreme Court for the last 15 years. His keen intellect and deep understanding of law and precedent have quickly established William Rehnquist as one of the great jurists of our time.

It is significant to review some of the extraordinary information presented to this committee by the American Bar Association's standing committee on the Federal judiciary. After interviewing 50 law school professors, 70 lawyers, and 180 State and Federal judges, that committee gave William Rehnquist a well qualified rating, which is the committee's highest evaluation of a nominee for the Supreme Court. Furthermore, the committee found unanimous support on the Court for the elevation of William Rehnquist to the position of Chief Justice. Justice Rehnquist's colleagues characterized him as one who would pull the Court together. There was, in fact "a unanimous feeling of joy" expressed by Justice Rehnquist's colleagues.

With regard to his personal integrity, Justice Rehnquist has lived up to his word delivered to this committee in 1971 during his nomination hearing. There he spoke of Justice Frankfurter's famous adage that, "if putting on the robe does not change a man, there is something wrong with the man." Justice Rehnquist went on to say:

When you put on the robe, you are not there to enforce your own notions as to what is desirable public policy. You are there to construe as objectively as you possibly can the Constitution of the United States, the statutes of Congress, and whatever relevant legal materials there may be in the case before you.

I would like to note, Mr. President, that Justice Rehnquist was straightforward in answering questions put to him by the Judiciary Committee. Furthermore, he showed the utmost of integrity by raising no objection to this committee's review of the memos he authored while serving in the Justice Department's Office of Legal Counsel.

In terms of professional competence, Justice Rehnquist has demonstrated that he is second to none. Any Rehnquist opinion is a profound, clear and rightly worded text. The Wall Street Journal recently said that, "His opinions are famous for going to the heart of issues. There is rarely any doubt among lower courts about what a Rehnquist opinion means."

Mr. President, it is a special privilege and a keen honor to support a man who wholly adheres to these qualities of personal integrity, professional competence, and fidelity to the Constitution. I urge my colleagues to give him their strongest support and approve his nomination as the 16th Chief Justice of the United States.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I will now yield the floor.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, has the Senator from South Carolina concluded?

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I am very pleased that the distinguished

Senator from Arizona will now speak in behalf of this nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCCONNELL). The Senator from Arizona.

LIBERAL BIGOTRY AND JUSTICE REHNQUIST

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, we are about to act on the nomination of a new Chief Justice of the United States, the 16th person to sit in that position. There is no question in my mind about the qualifications of the nominee, Justice William Rehnquist, to serve as a Chief Justice.

He possesses an outstanding intellect, a solid record of experience on the bench, and the highest reputation among his colleagues on the Court and in the legal community. He is known for excellence in every category of importance to the eminent office for which he was selected.

Justice Rehnquist is recognized as being a legal scholar in and of himself, steeped in the Court's history and precedents and holding a phenomenal memory for cases. He has twice received the American Bar Association's top rating of professional competence, judicial temperament and integrity.

Yet a small minority has mounted a personal attack on the nominee's credibility and his alleged insensitivity to the rights of minorities and women. He has not decided cases the way they would have wished and it is supposedly "insensitive" for anyone to disagree with their liberal agenda. A person becomes a racist or sexist because his reasoned judgments guide him to a different outcome from the tenets of liberal philosophy.

This is not "Advice and Consent." It is what the Arizona Republic has called "Liberal Bigotry."

What we are witnessing is an attempt to turn the clock back, to reverse the general practice of recent decades when judicial nominees were confirmed on the basis of fitness for the office, not the shade of their philosophy.

In 30 years of service in this body, I have guided my decision on judicial nominations according to three general standards, regardless of whether the President who makes the nomination is a Democrat or Republican:

First, is the nominee professionally able and of sound mind and health?

Second, is the nominee free of any significant conflict of interest?

Third, is the nominee a person of high moral character and integrity?

Professional fitness for the office has been the threshold criterion of judicial appointment ever since the Magna Carta of 1215 which decreed:

> We will not make Justices . . . except from those who know the law of the land and are willing to keep it.

Under these standards, I would agree that a nominee should be rejected who holds a strong racial or religious bias against other races or creeds than his own, because such a person is lacking in integrity and character. But where I part company with the opponents of Justice Rehnquist is their reliance on judicial philosophy as a measure of an individual's devotion to values of equality and justice.

The accusers of Justice Rehnquist are themselves out of the mainstream of contemporary American values. I thought it was a principle of our basic values of fairness that a person is not to be labeled as inflexible or unfair, or hostile to other groups, solely because of his reasoned conclusions on complex and controversial issues.

The judicial philosophy test which is at the heart of the opposition to Justice Rehnquist's nomination is a faulty concept unworthy of consideration in this Chamber. In the first place many issues cannot accurately be pegged as conservative or liberal. I have voted together with some of my liberal colleagues on certain questions of social morality and I have never considered the subject to be one that falls in the liberal or conservative camp.

My primary objection to using a philosophical measure for every nominee is that this is an abuse of the power conferred upon us by the framers of the Constitution. I believe there is an attempt here to convert the confirmation power into an open license to reject nominees at will whenever some faction of the Senate disagrees with the nominee's past writings or statements.

The road we are asked to take would distort the powers the framers of the Constitution have conferred upon us in article II, section 2, by using it as a weapon for confrontation and open collision with the President's appointment power.

Instead, I believe the framers contemplated that the Chief Executive of the United States should be given broad discretion in making appointments. Alexander Hamilton stated in the Federalist Paper No. 76 that it is "not very probable" that the President's nomination would often be overruled.

Let us remember that the President is chosen in the only nationwide election held in our country. The will of all the people, expressed in their most recent choice of President, should be given due respect when acting on his nominations. This is particularly true when there is a nominee of such impeccable credentials for the office as Mr. Justice Rehnquist.

According to this morning's newspaper, the latest attack on Justice Rehnquist centers on his decision not to withdraw himself from consideration of Laird versus Tatum, involving a challenge to the role of the military to conduct surveillance during the 1971 May Day demonstrations. But Justice Rehnquist has elaborated his reasons and the correctness of his decision in a lengthy memorandum interpreting the applicable statute and precedents at the time.

He has pointed out that a Federal judge has a duty to sit where not disqualified. In his words;

> There is no way of substituting Justices on this Court as one judge may be substituted for another in the district courts. There is no higher court of appeal that may review an equally divided decision of this Court and thereby establish the law for our jurisdiction.

The quarrel of his critics is not over the ethics of Justice Rehnquist's decision to participate in this case. They are disappointed with the way he ruled in the case. If he had decided against the Government, he would now be hailed as a hero by the same people who are making such a controversy about a matter of judgment on which informed and wise men can disagree.

Mr. President, not too many weeks ago, the Senate was told that it should insist on the standard of excellence for all members of the Federal judiciary. William Rehnquist is eminently qualified under this standard or under any other rational test.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of an editorial published in the Tucson Citizen may be printed in the RECORD. The article is written by Gary Born, associate professor of law at the University of Arizona. Professor Born served as a law clerk to Justice Rehnquist and, based on his first hand knowledge of the Justice's character and record, he strongly recommends the confirmation of William Rehnquist as Chief Justice.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SENATE SHOULD GIVE PROMPT APPROVAL TO REHNQUIST

(By Gary Born)

During 1982 and 1983 I served as a law clerk to U.S. Supreme Court Justice William Rehnquist. I developed a deep admiration and respect for the justice during my clerkship. As a result, I applauded President Reagan's appointment of Rehnquist as the next chief justice. I strongly believe that Rehnquist's appointment should be promptly confirmed by the Senate.

After graduating first in his class at Stanford Law School, Rehnquist clerked for Justice Jackson on the Supreme Court. He went on to become a respected and successful lawyer in Arizona and later in the U.S. Department of Justice. For the past 15 years, Rehnquist has served as an associate justice of the Supreme Court. His numerous opinions are acclaimed for their brilliant analysis and scholarship. The American Bar Association recently awarded Rehnquist the highest possible endorsement for the chief justice job.

These achievements are compelling reasons for confirming Rehnquist's appointment. An equally important—although less publicized—reason for Rehnquist's confirmation is the justice's personal commitment to the Supreme Court. Rehnquist has consistently, albeit quietly, devoted exceptional effort to the work of the court. He invariably carries an unusually large proportion of the court's heavy case-load. During the year that I clerked for him, he authored 20 of the clerk's 160 opinions—more than any other judge.

Rehnquist also devotes special attention to building consensus for opinions of the court and encouraging collegiality among its members. He frequently visits the chambers of other justices, either to discuss cases or simply to chat. Likewise, he maintains warm personal relations with other members of the court, and he is keenly aware of the personal interests and sensitivities of his fellow justices. These personal qualities will go far toward preventing the internal divisiveness that sometimes has beset the court.

Despite Rehnquist's obvious qualifications, a few senators have voiced opposition to his appointment. Most stridently, Sen. Edward Kennedy has charged that Rehnquist is "outside the mainstream of American constitutional law and American values."

Kennedy's charge is simply wrong. While Rehnquist is obviously a conservative jurist, his voting record and judicial philosophy place him well toward the center of contemporary American constitutional values. His opinions plainly show his commitment to contemporary American constitutional values. A large proportion of Supreme Court cases involve criminal justice issues, and many of Rehnquist's opinions deal with this subject. As most Americans would hope, Rehnquist has steadfastly refused to give criminal suspects unfair procedural advantages or to permit the release of convicted wrong-doers because of unrelated police misconduct.

Likewise, Rehnquist has been careful to ensure that law enforcement officials have adequate powers under the Constitution to protect ordinary citizens from violent crime. None of Rehnquist's critics have sought to explain how these views depart from mainstream American values.

Opposition to Rehnquist's appointment boils down to a single complaint: Rehnquist's critics wish that he would more frequently invoke the U.S. Constitution to overturn state and federal laws that they disagree with. Rehnquist's refusal to interfere with the democratic process in this way reflects his commitment to the most basic principles of the American Constitution—not his rejection of them. Rehnquist believes judges are bound by the Constitution to respect the policy choices made by the democratically-elected representatives of the people; as the Constitution's framers intended, the Justice responds with caution when litigants ask unelected, life-tenured judges to overturn democratically-enacted laws.

Charges that Rehnquist is insensitive to the interests of women and minorities are equally unfounded. During the year I clerked for him the justice unequivocally wrote that the "prohibitions against discrimination contained in the Civil Rights Act of 1984 reflected an important national policy." He has made similar statements in a number of other cases and has frequently voted to uphold claims by minorities and women. Although Rehnquist's cautious approach to the judiciary's power has often led him to reject constitutional claims by women and minorities, it is misleading and unfair to suggest that these decisions reflect insensitivity to the rights of such groups. Rather, his decisions simply reflect deeply held views about the limited powers of the federal judiciary.

Some critics have seized on accounts that Rehnquist challenged the literacy of prospective Arizona voters in the 1960s. If these accounts were true, Rehnquist could quite properly have responded that he did challenge voters—just as existing Arizona law permitted. Instead, Rehnquist forthrightly explained that he does not recall personally challenging voters on any occasion, although he candidly admits that the 30-year lapse in time may have dimmed his recollection.

One of Rehnquist's personal qualities that struck me most is his lack of guile or pretension. In his dealings with justices, law clerks, and others at the court, Rehnquist was invariably open, honest, and forthcoming. With this background, suggestions that the justice concealed—for no purpose—his involvement in long-past Arizona elections are simply implausible. The Senate plainly shares this view and almost certainly will confirm Rehnquist's appointment.

The Rehnquist critics can only be motivated by the hope of challenging the substance of Rehnquist's constitutional principles and wrongly impugning his personal integrity and authority. Questioning with this motivation amounts to a misuse of the Senate's power of confirmation and undermines the president's constitutional power to appoint federal judges.

Justice Rehnquist entered the Senate confirmation hearing with an unblemished record of service on the court. His forthright performance in the Senate hearings should only enhance his record. The Senate should promptly confirm Rehnquist's appointment and disown efforts to misuse the confirmation process.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, a lot has been made of the activities of Justice Rehnquist in an election held in Arizona a number of years ago in which he was acting as a pollwatcher. I was acting as a pollwatcher in the same election. So were many Democrats. We did not have, at the time, adequate laws to cover the discrepancies and dishonesties which might occur in the election booths and both parties had pollwatchers for the sole purpose of determining whether a man or a woman was eligible to vote under the then existing laws of the State, which required literacy. Justice Rehnquist did nothing—I know, because I worked with him—he did nothing that was not done by many others of us acting as pollwatchers, and by many Democrats acting as pollwatchers.

I am not going to go into the rather screwy laws Arizona had at that time about elections, but I can remember the day when the Democrats, if you went up to register as a Republican, would say, "Republican? We cannot even spell it." That is what we had to put up with for many, many years.

Now people are seeking something to hold against Justice Rehnquist and they have come up with this little item that has been gone over and over by local people, Federal people, by the newspapers, by everybody concerned. There is absolutely nothing to it, as there is nothing to what the opponents of the Justice are trying to bring up on this floor.

I yield the floor, Mr. President.

Mr. GORTON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, I hope that I may bring to this debate a somewhat different perspective than that of other Members who have spoken on the subject or who are likely to speak on the subject before the confirmation vote takes place.

We deal in this nomination with an issue quite different, in my opinion, from that which attends the debate over the lion's share of nominees for the Supreme Court of the United States.

Only on a handful of occasions have sitting Associate Justices been nominated by a President to sit as Chief Justice of the United States. In the case of that handful of nominations, however, we have not simply a prediction, an attempt to judge what kind of Justice the nominee will make; we have a record. In the case of Mr. Justice Rehnquist, we have a record of well over a decade, participation in literally hundreds of decisions, votes one way or another, authoring the decisions of the Court on a number of occasions.

It is for precisely that reason that I think the overwhelming direction of this debate should be based not on what Mr. Rehnquist's attitudes, whether political or legal, were before he became an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, or, for that matter, even his personal life since that time. I believe that the consideration of the Senate should be directed primarily but not solely on whether or not the record of Justice Rehnquist as an Associate Justice of the United States is attended by a degree of personal intelligence, discipline, and commitment to the law and the the Constitution sufficient to allow him to become Chief Justice of the United States.

He is, of course, a member of the Court at the present time. A change in his title will not affect his vote on the Supreme Court in any respect whatsoever.

He will gain certain modest additional duties and perhaps a great more prominence with respect to his decisions. But the fact is that he is a member of the Supreme Court of the United States for life at the present time. An appropriate question may very well be whether or not Mr. Justice Rehnquist's decisions over the period of time during which he has served on the Court fall within what I consider to be the broad parameters of acceptability with respect to an interpretation of the statutes and the Constitution of the United States. That it seems to me is a legitimate inquiry. It is not, however, an inquiry which is answered simply by a determination on the part of each individual Senator as to whether or not he or she agrees with each of those opinions or even agrees with the general philosophical bent of a Justice's actions. If a nominee falls within the parameters of a reasonable interpretation of the Constitution and the laws of the United States, it is my view that that nominee ought to be confirmed.

I stated at the beginning of these remarks that I had an insight into Mr. Justice Rehnquist which was not shared by any of my colleagues. That insight stems from the fact that for 12 years before I was sworn into this body I served as attorney general of the State of Washington. During the last 8 of those years, Mr. President, I argued 14 cases before the Supreme Court of the United States. I am certain that that is more cases than any other Members of this body has argued in that Court. It is likely that it is more than all other Members of this body combined have argued before that Court. I found during those arguments, 13 of which Mr. Justice Rehnquist attended—in one he took no part—without exception Justice Rehnquist was well prepared for argument of counsel. It was obvious that he had read and digested the serious legal or constitutional points which were at issue. That is something which a number of judges regrettably do not do at the time of argument by counsel. On the other hand, I must say that most members of the Supreme Court of the United States meet that qualification and that test. In any event, I do not know of any member of the Supreme Court during that 8-year period whom I regarded as better prepared for argument by counsel, the last action before the Court makes it decision on any case.

Second, Mr. President, Mr. Justice Rehnquist almost without exception played a major role in those oral arguments. He was and is a frequent and an aggressive questioner of counsel. His questions were without exception directly to the points at issue, were stated firmly, occasionally indicating a point of view on his part but always evidencing a desire to learn as much as he could about both the facts and the law applicable to those facts.

I had felt when I began to prepare these remarks, Mr. President, that I perhaps might have my testimony questioned on the ground that Mr. Justice Rehnquist voted for my side in those cases more than most other members of the Supreme Court. I find by a careful examination of those 13 decisions that that was not necessarily true. I won more than I lost in that Court. Justice Rehnquist voted with me more often than he voted on the other side but was not remarkably different from other Justices. In 9 of the 14 cases which I argued, Mr. Justice Rehnquist was in full and complete agreement with the majority of the opinion. In two of those cases he wrote the opinion of the Court. One of them was a win for me; one of them was a loss. The win was a rather important case having to do with whether or not Indian tribal sovereignty is sufficient so that Indian tribal courts can try and impose criminal penalties on non-Indians for offenses committed on reservations.

The second case, the loss, simply permitted the State of Idaho to sue the State of Washington in the original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, a case in which Washington was eventually primarily triumphant.

Mr. Justice Rehnquist in three of the cases was in partial ageement with the majority but like other Justices he seemed to go through the opinion of the Court paragraph by paragraph and on occasion would dissent with only one or two paragraphs or one or two points. He took no part in the decision of the single case which I considered to be my most signal triumph. I am sorry that he did not do so, but he was absent in that connection. He was in pure dissent with the rest of the Court in only one of those 14 cases, one in which I may say he dissented on my side, on the side of the State of Washington.

The fact that Mr. Justice Rehnquist was very much a mainstream Justice in dealing with issues important enough for the Supreme Court to decide which related to the State of Washington, my impression of his service on the Court, which included times about which we have more recently learned a considerable amount in connection with his physical disabilities, was that on every single occasion on which I argued before him he was well prepared, asked intelligent questions, and reached objective and highly defensible answers. I must admit, Mr. President, that with one or two exceptions I was not arguing before the Court issues of profound constitutional implications as we seem to judge those questions here, that is to say, questions relating to civil rights and the like. When the State had constitutional questions before the Court, they were more likely to apply to the commerce clause than they were to the Bill of Rights. There was one exception, Mr. President. The second case which I argued before the Supreme Court was entitled DeFunis versus Odegaard. It was the first affirmative action/reverse discrimination case. It arose out of the law school of the University of Washington.

I was very disappointed when Mr. Justice Rehnquist joined with seven of the nine Justices, after we had, proceeded all the way to the Supreme Court, in dismissing the appeal on the grounds that it was moot because the young man who had brought the case and been admitted to a law school pending a decision was about to finish law school. When a few years later, the Bakke decision came down, I decided that I was rather fortunate that the case had been mooted, since it became quite evident that as counsel for the law school I would have lost had the case been decided on its merits.

In any event, Mr. President, I believe that with all of the rather heated oratory to which we have been subjected in connection with this nomination on both sides of the issue, it may be of some interest to Members of this body to share this experience. Mr. Justice Rehnquist in my opinion has acquitted himself well and honorably as a member of the Supreme Court of the United States. He has judged cases with which I have had firsthand experience objectively, soberly, and, when he has written the opinion of the Court or a dissenting opinion, intelligently and fashioned in a way that the lawyers and the parties could understand not only the decision but the reasons leading to that decision, I find Mr. Justice Rehnquist's philosphy of the law and of the Constitution to be one with which I differ on occasion but to be well within appropriate parameters of judicial and constitutional decisionmaking, and under those circumstances, because in my view his record has been a good one, I believe that we should confirm the nomination of the President of the United States and permit Mr. Justice Rehnquist to take the position of Chief Justice of this country.

Mr. President, I see another Senator on the floor, ready to speak, and I yield the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The distinguished Senator from Kentucky.

□ 1730

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, as a member of the Senate Judiciary Committee, I rise in enthusiastic support of Justice William Rehnquist's nomination to be Chief Justice of the United States.

As a personal observation at the outset, I might say that I first met Justice Rehnquist back in 1969. At that time I was a legislative assistance to a Senator from Kentucky who was assigned to the Judiciary Committee. As luck would have it, that particular Senator ended up being very much involved in the nomination to the U.S. Supreme Court of Judge Clement Haynsworth, of South Carolina, and subsequently G. Harold Carswell of Florida.

The Senator for whom I worked, Marlow Cook, was very active in support of Judge Hanesworth. In my capacity as his assistant, I worked with not only the Senator but also then Assistant Attorney General William Rehnquist, who was at that time Assistant Attorney General in the Office of Legal Counsel of the Justice Department.

So, while I did not have an opportunity to argue cases before the Supreme Court, as my distinguished collegue from Washington has just outlined, I did have an opportunity to work with Justice Rehnquist, on an almost daily basis, during those confirmation hearings, and to get a chance to observe his intellect, skill, and ability firsthand.

Ironically, I was not always on the same side as Justice Rehnquist. The Senator for whom I worked supported Haynsworth and opposed Carswell. So I had a chance during that period of controversial Supreme Court nominations to be on the same side as Justice Rehnquist and in opposition to Justice Rehnquist.

I subsequently wrote a law journal article about the issue of Supreme Court appointments by the President—what are the appropriate criteria for the Senate to apply to such nominations—and with a bit of nostalgia, I suppose, I ask unanimous consent that that law journal article be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HAYNSWORTH AND CARSWELL: A NEW SENATE STANDARD OF EXCELLENCE

(By A. Mitchell McConnell, Jr.*)

(All politicians have read history; but one might say that they read it only in order to learn from it how to repeat the same calamities all over again.—Paul Valery.)

With the confirmation of Judge Harry A. Blackman by the United States Senate on May 12, 1970, the American public witnessed the end of an era, possibly the most interesting period in Supreme Court history. In many respects, it was not a proud time in the life of the Senate or, for that matter, in the life of the Presidency. Mistakes having a profound effect upon the American people were made by both institutions.

The Supreme Court of the United States is the most prestigious institution in our nation and possibly the world. For many years public opinion polls have revealed that the American people consider membership on the Court the most revered position in our society. This is surely an indication of the respect our people hold for the basic fabric of our stable society—the rule of law.

To the extent that it has eroded respect for this highest of our legal institutions, the recent controversial period has been unfortunate. There could not have been a worse time for an attack upon the men who administer justice in our country than in the past year, when tensions and frustrations about our foreign and domestic policies literally threatened to tear us apart. Respect for law and the administration of justice has, at various times in our history, been the only buffer between chaos and order. And this past year this pillar of our society has been buffeted once again by the winds of both justified and unconscionable attacks. It is time the President and the Congress helped to put an end to the turmoil.

The President's nomination of Judge Harry Blackmun and the Senate's responsible act of confirmation is a first step. But before moving on into what hopefully will be a more tranquil period for the High Court, it is useful to review the events of the past year for the lessons they hold. It may be argued that the writing of recent history is an exercise in futility and that only the passage of time will allow a dispassionate appraisal of an event or events of significance. This may well be true for the author who was not present and involved in the event. However, for the writer who is a participant the lapse of time serves only to cloud the memory. Circumstances placed a few individuals in the middle of the controversies of the past year. In the case of the author the experience with the Supreme Court nominees of the past year was the direct result of Senator Marlow W. Cook's election in 1968 and subsequent appointment to the powerful Senate Judiciary Committee. This committee appointment by the Senate Republican leadership, and Supreme Court nominations by President Nixon, brought about an initial introduction to the practical application of Article II, section 2 of the Constitution which reads, in part, that the President shall "nominate and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint . . . judges of the Supreme Court."

The purpose of this article is to draw upon the events of the past year in suggesting some conclusions and making some recommendations about what the proper role of the Senate should be in advising and consenting to Presidential nominations to the Supreme Court. The motivations of the Executive will be touched upon only periferally.[1]

Initiated by Senator Robert P. Griffin, Republican of Michigan, the senatorial attack upon the Johnson nomination of Justice Abe Fortas to be Chief Justice which resulted in blocking the appointment had set a recent precedent for senatorial questioning in an area which had largely become a Presidential prerogative in the twentieth century. The most recent period of senatorial assertion had begun. But there had been other such periods and a brief examination of senatorial action on prior nominations is valuable because it helps put the controversial nominations of the past two years in proper perspective.

Joseph P. Harris, in his book, the Advice and Consent of the Senate, sums up the history of Supreme Court nominations by pointing out that approximately one-fifth of all appointments have been rejected by the Senate. From 1894 until the Senate's rejection of Judge Haynsworth, however, there was only one rejection. In the preceding 105 years, 20 of the 81 nominees had been rejected. Four of Tyler's nominees, three of Fillmore's, and three of Grant's were disapproved during a period of bitter partisanship over Supreme Court appointments. Harris concludes of this area:

"Appointments were influenced greatly by political consideration, and the action of the Senate was fully as political as that of the President. Few of the rejections of Supreme Court nominations in this period can be ascribed to any lack of qualifications on the part of the nominees; for the most part they were due to political differences between the President and a majority of the Senate." [2]

The first nominee to be rejected was former Associate Justice John Rutledge, of South Carolina. He had been nominated for the Chief Justiceship by President George Washington. The eminent Supreme Court historian Charles Warren reports that Rutledge was rejected essentially because of a speech he had made in Charleston in opposition to the Jay Treaty. Although his opponents in the predominantly Federalist Senate also started a rumor about his mental condition, a detached appraisal reveals his rejection was based entirely upon his opposition to the Treaty. Verifying this observation, Thomas Jefferson wrote of the incident:

The rejection of Mr. Rutledge is a bold thing, for they cannot pretend any objection to him but his disapprobation of the treaty. It is, of course, a declaration that they will receive none but tories hereafter into any department of Government.[3]

On December 28, 1835, President Andrew Jackson sent to the Senate the name of Roger B. Taney, of Maryland, to succeed John Marshall as Chief Justice. As Taney had been Jackson's Secretary of the Treasury and Attorney General, the Whigs in the Senate strongly opposed him. Daniel Webster wrote of the nomination: "Judge Story thinks the Supreme Court is gone and I think so, too."[4] Warren reports that

". . . the Bar throughout the North, being largely Whig, entirely ignored Taney's eminent legal qualifications, and his brilliant legal career, during which he had shared . . . the leadership of the Maryland Bar and had attained high rank at the Supreme Court Bar, both before and after his service as Attorney General of the United States."[5]

Taney was approved, after more than two months of spirited debate, by a vote of 29 to 15 over vehement opposition including Calhoun, Clay, Crittenden, and Webster. He had actually been rejected the year before but was re-submitted by a stubborn Jackson.[6]

*AUTHOR'S NOTE.—This article represents the thoughts and efforts of over a year's involvement in the Senate with three Presidential nominations to the Supreme Court. The experiences were possible only because of the author's association with the Junior Senator from Kentucky, Marlow W. Cook, and the conclusions drawn and suggestions made, many of which may be found in a speech by the Senator of May 5, 1970, represent, in large part, a joint effort by the two of them to evolve a meaningful standard by which the Senate might judge future Supreme Court nominees.

Only rarely does a staff assistant to a Member of Congress receive the opportunity to express himself by publication or speech on an issue of public significance. For the freedom and encouragement to do so in this instance, the author is grateful to Senator Cook.

*Chief Legislative Assistant to Marlow W. Cook, United States Senator from Kentucky; B.A., cum laude, 1961, University of Louisville; J.D., 1967, University of Kentucky. While attending the College of Law he was President of the Student Bar Association, a member of the Moot Court Team, and winner of the McEwen Award as the Outstanding Oral Advocate in his class. He was admitted to the Kentucky Bar in September of 1967 at which time he became associated with the Louisville, Kentucky law firm of Segal, Isenberg, Sales and Stewart.

History has judged Chief Justice Taney as among the most outstanding of American jurists, his tribulations prior to confirmation being completely overshadowed by an exceptional career. A contrite and tearful Clay related to Taney after viewing his work on the Court for many years:

"Mr. Chief Justice, there was no man in the land who regretted your appointment to the place you now hold more than I did; there was no Member of the Senate who opposed it more than I did; but I have come to say to you, and I say it now in parting, perhaps for the last time—I have witnessed your judicial career, and it is due to myself and due to you that I should say what has been the result, that I am satisfied now that no man in the United States could have been selected more abundantly able to wear the ermine which Chief Justice Marshall honored."[7]

It is safe to conclude that purely partisan politics played the major role in Senate rejections of Supreme Court nominees during the nineteenth century. The cases of Rutledge and Taney have been related only for the purpose of highlighting a rather undistinguished aspect of the history of the Senate.

No implication should be drawn from the preceding that Supreme Court nominations in the twentieth century have been without controversy because certainly this has not been the case. However, until Haynsworth only one nominee had been rejected in this century. President Woodrow Wilson's nomination of Louis D. Brandeis and the events surrounding it certainly exhibit many of the difficulties experienced by Judges Haynsworth and Carswell as Brandeis failed to receive the support of substantial and respected segments of the legal community. William Howard Taft, Elihu Root, and three past presidents of the American Bar Association signed the following statement:

"The undersigned feel under the painful duty to say . . . that in their opinion, taking into view the reputation, character and professional career of Mr. Louis D. Brandeis, he is not a fit person to be a Member of the Supreme Court of the U.S."[8]

Hearings were conducted by a Senate Judiciary subcommittee for a period of over four months, were twice-reopened, and the record of the hearings consisted of over 1500 pages.[9]

The nomination of Brandeis, like the nomination of Haynsworth, Carswell and to some extent Fortas (to be Chief Justice) quickly became a cause celebre for the opposition party in the Senate. The political nature of Brandeis' opposition is indicated by the fact that the confirmation vote was 47 to 22; three Progressives and all but one Democrat voted for Brandeis and every Republican voted against him.[10]

The basic opposition to Brandeis, like the basic opposition to Haynsworth and Carswell, was born of a belief that the nominee's views were not compatible with the prevailing views of the Supreme Court at that time. However, the publicly stated reasons for opposing Brandeis, just as the publicly stated reasons for opposing Carswell and Haynsworth, were that they fell below certain standards of "fitness."

Liberals in the Senate actively opposed the nominations to the Court of Harlan Fiske Stone in 1925 and Charles Evans Hughes five years later, for various reasons best summed up as opposition to what opponents predicted would be their conservatism. However, it was generally conceded by liberals subsequently that they had misread the leanings of both nominees, who tended to side with the Progressives on the Court throughout their tenures.[11]

No review of the historic reasons for opposition to Supreme Court nominees, even as cursory as this one has been, would be complete without mention of the Parker nomination. Judge John J. Parker of North Carolina, a member of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit, was designated for the Supreme Court by President Hoover in 1930. Harris reports that opposition to Parker was essentially threefold. He was alleged to be anti-labor, unsympathetic to Negroes, and his nomination was thought to be politically motivated.[12]

Opposition to Haynsworth and Carswell followed an almost identical pattern except that Judges Parker and Carswell were spared the charges of ethical impropriety to which Judge Haynsworth was subjected. All three nominees, it is worthy of note for the first time at this point, were from the Deep South.

As this altogether too brief historical review has demonstrated, the Senate has in its past, virtually without exception, based its objections to nominees for the Supreme Court on party or philosophical considerations. Most of the time, however, Senators sought to hide their political objections beneath a veil of charges about fitness, ethics and other professional qualifications. In recent years, Senators have accepted, with a few exceptions, the notion that the advice and consent responsibility of the Senate should mean an inquiry into qualifications and not politics or ideology. In the Brandeis case, for example, the majority chose to characterize their opposition as objecting to his fitness not his liberalism. So there was a recognition that purely political opposition should not be openly stated because it would not be accepted as a valid reason for opposing a nominee. The proper inquiry was judged to be the matter of fitness. In very recent times it has been the liberals in the Senate who have helped to codify this standard. During the Kennedy-Johnson years it was argued to conservatives in regard to appointments the liberals liked that the ideology of the nominee was of no concern to the Senate. Most agree that this is the proper standard, but it should be applied in a nonpartisan manner to conservative southern nominees as well as northern liberal ones. Even though the Senate has at various times made purely political decisions in its consideration of Supreme Court nominees, certainly it could not be successfully argued that this is an acceptable practice. After all, if political matters were relevant to senatorial consideration it might be suggested that a constitutional amendment be introduced giving to the Senate rather than the President the right to nominate Supreme Court Justices, as many argued during the Constitutional Convention.

A pattern emerges running from Rutledge and Taney through Brandeis and Parker up to an including Haynsworth and Carswell in which the Senate has employed deception to achieve its partisan goals. This deception has been to ostensibly object to a nominee's fitness while in fact the opposition is born of political expedience.

In summary, the inconsistent and sometimes unfair behavior of the Senate in the past and in the recent examples which follow do not lead one to be overly optimistic about its prospects for rendering equitable judgments about Supreme Court nominees in the future.

CLEMENT F. HAYNSWORTH, JR.: INSENSITIVE OR VICTIMIZED

(For the great majority of mankind are satisfied with appearance, as though they were realities, and are often more influenced by the things that seem than by those that are.—Author unknown.)

The resignation of Justice Abe Fortas in May of 1969 following on the heels of the successful effort of the Senate the previous Fall in stalling his appointment to be Chief Justice, (the nomination was withdrawn after an attempt to invoke cloture on Senate debate was defeated) intensified the resolve of the Senate to reassert what it considered to be its rightful role in advising and consenting to presidential nominations to the Supreme Court.

It was in this atmosphere of senatorial questioning and public dismay over the implications of the Fortas resignation that President Nixon submitted to the Senate the name of Judge Clement F. Haynsworth, Jr., of South Carolina, to fill the Fortas vacancy. Completely aside from Judge Haynsworth's competence, which was never successfuly challenged, he had a number of problems from a political point of view, given the Democrat-controlled Congress. Since he was from South Carolina his nomination was immediately considered to be an integral part of the so-called southern strategy which was receiving considerable press comment at that time. His South Carolina residence was construed as conclusive proof that he was a close friend of the widely-criticized senior Senator from that state, Strom Thurmond, whom, in fact, he hardly knew. Discerning Senators found offensive such an attack against the nominee rather than the nominator, since the southern strategy would be only in the latter's mind, if it existed. Nevertheless, this put the nomination in jeopardy from the outset.

In addition, labor and civil rights groups mobilized to oppose Judge Haynsworth on philosophical grounds. Some of the proponents of the Judge, including their acknowledged leader Senator Cook expressed the proper role of the Senate well in a letter to one of his constituents, a black student at the University of Louisville who was disgruntled over his support for the nominee. It read in pertinent part as follows:

". . . First, as to the question of his [Haynsworth's] view on labor and civil rights matters, I find myself in essential disagreement with many of his civil rights decisions—not that they in any way indicate a pro segregationist pattern, but that they do not form the progressive pattern I would hope for. However, as Senator Edward Kennedy pointed out to the conservatives as he spoke for the confirmation of Justice Thurgood Marshall.

"I believe it is recognized by most Senators that we are not charged with the responsibility of approving a man to be Associate Justice of the Supreme Court only if his views always coincide with our own. We are interested really in knowing whether the nominee has the background, experience, qualifications, temperament and integrity to handle this most sensitive, important, responsible job.

"Most Senators, especially of moderate and liberal persuasion, have agreed that while the appointment of Judge Haynsworth may have been unfortunate from a civil rights point of view, the ideology of the nominee is the responsibility of the President. The Senate's judgment should be made, therefore, solely upon grounds of qualifications. As I agree with Senator Kennedy and others that this is the only relevant inquiry, I have confined my judgment of this nominee's fitness to the issue of ethics of qualifications?" [13]

The ethical questions which were raised about Judge Haynsworth were certainly relevant to the proper inquiry of the Senate into qualifications for appointment. Also distinction and competence had a proper bearing upon the matter of qualifications, but Judge Haynsworth's ability was, almost uniformly, conceded by his opponents and thus was never a real factor in the debate. A sloppy and hastily drafted document labelled the "Bill of Particulars" against Judge Haynsworth was issued on October 8, 1969, by Senator Birch Bayh of Indiana, who had become the de facto leader of the anti-Haynsworth forces during the hearings on the nomination before the Judiciary Committee the previous month. This contained, in addition to several cases in which it had been alleged during the hearings that Judge Haynsworth should have refused to sit, several extraneous and a few inaccurate assertions which were swiftly rebutted two days later by Senator Cook in a statement aptly labelled the "Bill of Corrections." This preliminary sparring by the leaders of both sides raised all the issues in the case but only the relevant and significant allegations will be discussed here, those which had a real impact upon the Senate's decisions.[14]

First, it was essential to determine what, if any, impropriety Judge Haynsworth had committed. For the Senator willing to make a judgment upon the facts this required looking to those facts. The controlling statute in situations where federal judges might potentially disqualify themselves is 28 U.S.C. § 455 which reads:

"Any Justice or Judge of the United States shall disqualify himself in any case in which he has a substantial interest, has been of counsel, is or has been a material witness, or is so related to or connected with any party or his attorney as to render it improper, in his opinion for him to sit on the trial, appeal, or other proceeding therein." [Emphasis added.]

Also pertinent is Canon 29 of the American Bar Association Canons of Judicial Ethics which provides:

"A judge should abstain from performing or taking part in any judicial act in which his personal interests are involved."

Formal Opinion 170 of the American Bar Association construing Canon 29 advises that a judge should not sit in a case in which he owns stock in a party litigant.

The first instance cited by Judge Haynsworth's opponents as an ethical violation was the much celebrated labor case, Darlington Manufacturing Co. v. NLRB,[15] argued before and decided by the Fourth Circuit in 1963. The Judge sat in this case contrary to what some of his Senate opponents felt to have been proper. The facts were that Judge Haynsworth had been one of the original incorporators, seven years before he was appointed to the bench, of a company named Carolina Vend-A-Matic which had a contract to supply vending machines to one of Deering Millikin's (one of the litigants) plants. In 1957, when Judge Haynsworth went on the bench, he orally resigned as Vice President of the Company but continued to serve as a director until October, 1963, at which time he resigned his directorship in compliance with a ruling of the U.S. Judicial Conference. During 1963, the year the case was decided, Judge Haynsworth owned one-seventh of the stock of Carolina Vend-A-Matic.

Suffice it to say that all case law in point, on a situation in which a judge owns stock in a company which merely does business with one of the litigants before him, dictates that the sitting judge not disqualify himself. And certainly the Canons do not address themselves to such a situation. As John P. Frank, the acknowledged leading authority on the subject of judicial disqualification testified to the Judiciary Committee:

"It follows that under the standard federal rule Judge Haynsworth had no alternative whatsoever. He was bound by the principle of the cases. It is a Judge's duty to refuse to sit when he is disqualified, but it is equally his duty to sit when there is no valid reason not to . . . I do think it is perfectly clear under the authority that there was virtually no choice whatsoever for Judge Haynsworth except to participate in that case and do his job as well as he could." [16]

This testimony by Mr. Frank was never refuted as no one recognized as an authority on the subject was discovered who held a contrary opinion.

The second situation of significance which arose during the Haynsworth debate concerned the question of whether Judge Haynsworth should have sat in three cases in which he owned stock in a parent corporation where one of the litigants before him was a wholly owned subsidiary of the parent corporation. These cases were Farrow v. Grace Lines, Inc.,"[17] Donohue v. Maryland Casualty Co.,[18] and Maryland Casualty Co. v. Baldwin.[19]

Consistently ignored during the outrage expressed over his having sat in these cases were the pleas of many of the Senators supporting the nomination to look to the law to find the answer to the question of whether Judge Haynsworth should have disqualified himself in these situations. Instead, the opponents decided, completely independent of the controlling statutes and canons, that the Judge had a "substantial interest" in the outcome of the litigation and should, therefore, have disqualified himself. Under the statute, 28 U.S.C. § 455, Judge Haynsworth clearly had no duty to step aside. Two controlling cases in a situation where the judged actually owns stock in one of the litigants, not as here where the stock was owned in the parent corporation, are Kinnear Weed Corp. v. Humble Oil and Refining Co.[20] and Lampert v. Hollis Music, Inc.[21] These cases interpret "substantial interest" to mean "substantial interest" in the outcome of the case, not "substantial interest" in the litigant. And here Judge Haynsworth not only did not have a "substantial interest" in the outcome of the litigation, he did not even have a "substantial interest" in the litigant, his stock being a small portion of the shares outstanding in the parent corporation of one of the litigants. There was, therefore, clearly no duty to step aside under the statute. It is interesting to note that joining in the Kinnear Weed decision were Chief Judge Brown and Judge Wisdom of the Fifth Circuit whom Joseph Rauh, a major critic of the Haynsworth nomination, had stated at the hearings on the nomination "would have been heroic additions to the Supreme Court." [22]

But was there a duty to step aside in these parent-subsidiary cases under Canon 29? The answer is again unequivocally No. The only case law available construing language similar to that of Canon 29 is found in the disqualification statute of a state. In Central Pacific Railroad Co. v. Superior Court,[23] the state court held that ownership of stock in a parent corporation did not require disqualification in litigation involving a subsidiary. Admittedly, this is only a state case, but significantly there is no federal case law suggesting any duty to step aside where a judge merely owns stock in the parent where the subsidiary is before the court. Presumably, this is because such a preposterous challenge has never occurred even to the most ingenious lawyer until the opponents of Judge Haynsworth created it. Therefore, Judge Haynsworth violated no existing standard of ethical behavior in the parent-subsidiary cases except that made up for the occasion by his opponents to stop his confirmation.

There was one other accusation of significance during the Haynsworth proceedings which should be discussed. It concerned the Judge's actions in the case of Brunswick Corp v. Long.[24] The facts relevant to this consideration were as follows: on November 10, 1967, a panel of the Fourth Circuit, including Judge Haynsworth, heard oral argument in the case and immediately after argument voted to affirm the decision by the District Court. Judge Haynsworth, on the advice of his broker, purchased 1,000 shares of Brunswick on December 20, 1967. Judge Winter, to whom the writing of the opinion had been assigned on November 10, the day of the decision, circulated his opinion on December 27. Judge Haynsworth noted his concurrence on January 3, 1968, and the opinion was released on February 2. Judge Haynsworth testified that he completed his participation, in terms of the decision-making process, on November 10, 1967, approximately six weeks prior to the decision to buy stock in Brunswick. Judge Winter confirmed that the decision had been substantially completed on November 10.[25] Therefore, it could be strongly argued that Judge Haynsworth's participation in Brunswick terminated on November 10. However, even if it were conceded that he sat while he owned Brunswick stock it is important to remember that neither the statute nor the canons require an automatic disqualification, although Opinion 170 so advises. And the facts show that his holdings were so miniscule as to amount neither to a "substantial interest" in the outcome of the litigation under 28 U.S.C. § 455 or to a "substantial interest" in the litigant itself. Clearly, once again, Judge Haynsworth was guilty of no ethical impropriety.

As mentioned earlier there were other less substantial charges by Haynsworth opponents but they were rarely used by opponents to justify opposition. These which have been mentioned were the main arguments used to deny confirmation. It is apparent to any objective student of this episode that Haynsworth violated no existing standard of ethical conduct, just those made up for the occasion by those who sought to defeat him for political gain. As his competence and ability were virtually unassailable, the opponents could not attack him for having a poor record of accomplishment or for being mediocre (an adjective soon to become famous in describing a subsequent nominee for the vacancy). The only alternative available was to first, create a new standard of conduct; second, apply this standard to the nominee retroactively making him appear to be ethically insensitive; third, convey the newly-created appearance of impropriety to the public by way of a politically hostile press (hostile due to an aversion to the so-called southern strategy of which Haynsworth was thought to be an integral part); and fourth, prolong the decision upon confirmation for a while until the politicians in the Senate reacted to an aroused public. Judge Haynsworth was defeated on November 21, 1969, by a vote of 55-45. Appearance had prevailed over reality. Only two Democrats outside the South (and one was a conservative—Bible of Nevada) supported the nomination, an indication of the partisan issue it had become, leading the Washington Post, a lukewarm Haynsworth supporter, to editorially comment, the morning after the vote:

"The rejection, despite the speeches and comments on Capitol Hill to the contrary, seems to have resulted more from ideological and plainly political considerations than from ethical ones. It is impossible to believe that all Northern liberals and all Southern conservatives have such dramatically different ethical standards."

CARSWELL: WAS HE QUALIFIED?

(Even if he was mediocre, there are a lot of mediocre judges and people and lawyers. They are entitled to a little representation, aren't they, and a little chance? We can't have all Brandeises and Cardozos and Frankfurters and stuff like that there.—Senator Roman Hruska, March 16, 1970.)

The United States Senate began the new year in no mood to reject another nomination of the President to the Supreme Court. It would take an incredibly poor nomination, students of the Senate concluded, to deny the President his choice in two successive instances. Circumstances, however, brought forth just such a nomination.

Subsequent to the defeat of Judge Haynsworth, President Nixon sent to the Senate in January of 1970 the name of Judge G. Harrold Carswell, of Florida and the Fifth Circuit. Judge Carswell had been nominated to the Circuit Court by President Nixon the year before, after serving 12 years on the U.S. District Court for the Northern District of Florida at Tallahassee to which he had been appointed by President Eisenhower.

He, too, faced an initial disadvantage in that he came from the south and was also considered by the press to be a part of the southern strategy. This should have been, as it should have been for Haynsworth, totally irrelevant to considerations of the man and his ability, but it was a factor and it immediately mobilized the not insignificant anti-south block in the Senate.

Many were troubled at the outset of the hearings about reports of a "white supremacy" speech Carswell had made as a youthful candidate for the legislature in Georgia in 1948, and later by allegations that he had supported efforts to convert a previously all-white public golf course to an all-white private country club in 1956, thus circumventing Supreme Court rulings.[26] There were other less substantial allegations including lack of candor before the Senate Judiciary Committee (which had also been raised against Judge Haynsworth) but all of these were soon supplanted by what became the real issue—that is, did Carswell possess the requisite distinction for elevation to the High Court.

In attempting to determine by what standards Judge Carswell should be judged, some who had been very much involved in the Haynsworth debate attempted to define the standards which had been applied to the previous nominee. Kentucky's Marlow Cook called his standard the "Haynsworth test" and subsequently defined it as composed of essentially five elements, (1) competence; (2) achievement; (3) temperament; (4) judicial propriety and (5) non-judicial record.

Judge Haynsworth himself would not have passed this test had he in fact been guilty of some ethical impropriety—that is, if his judicial integrity had been compromised by violations of any existing standard of conduct. His record of achievement was only attacked by a few misinformed columnists and never really became an issue. And his competence, temperament and the record of his life off the bench was never questioned, but a breakdown in any of these areas might have been fatal also.

The judicial integrity component of the "Haynsworth test," previously described as a violation of existing standards of conduct for federal judges, was never in question in the Carswell proceedings. It was impossible for him to encounter difficulties similar to those of Judge Haynsworth because he owned no stocks and had not been involved in any business ventures through which a conflict might arise. Certainly, his non-judicial record was never questioned, nor was it a factor raised against any nominee in this century. Disqualifying non-judicial activities referred to here could best be illustrated by examples such as violations of federal or state law, or personal problems such as alcoholism or drug addiction—in other words, debilitating factors only indirectly related to effectiveness on the bench.

However, all the other criteria of the "Haynsworth test" were raised in the Carswell case and caused Senators seeking to make an objective appraisal of the nominee some difficulty. First, as to the question of competence, 1 Ripon Society Report and a study of the nominee's reversal percentages by a group of Columbia law students revealed that while a U.S. District Judge he had been reversed more than twice as often as the average federal district judge and that he ranked sixty-first in reversals among the 67 federal trial judges in the south. Numerous reversals alone might not have been a relevant factor; he could have been in the vanguard of his profession some argued. This defense, however, ignored simple facts about which even a first year law student would be aware. A federal district judge's duty in most instances is to follow the law as laid down by higher authority. Carswell appeared to have a chronic inability to do this. No comparable performance was ever imputed to Judge Haynsworth even by his severest critics.

Second, in the area of achievement, he was totally lacking. He had no publications, his opinions were rarely cited by other judges in their opinions, and no expertise in any area of the law was revealed. On the contrary, Judge Haynsworth's opinions were often cited, and he was a recognized expert in several fields including patents and trademarks, habeas corpus cases, and labor law. In addition, his opinions on judicial administration were highly valued; he had been called upon to testify before Senator Tydings' subcommittee on Improvements in Judicial Machinery on this subject in June of 1969.

In addition to his lack of professional distinction, Judge Carswell's temperament was also questionable. There was unrebutted testimony before the Judiciary Committee that he was hostile to certain classes of litigants—namely, those involved in litigation to insure the right to vote to all citizens regardless of race pursuant to the Voting Rights Act of 1965. There had been testimony that Judge Haynsworth was anti-labor and anti-civil rights, but these charges alleged not personal antipathy but rather philosophical bias in a certain direction such as Justice Goldberg might have been expected to exhibit against management in labor cases. Such philosophical or ideological considerations, as pointed out earlier, are more properly a concern of the President and not the Senate, which should sit in judgment upon qualifications only.

And finally, a telling factor possibly revealing something about both competence and temperament was Judge Carswell's inability to secure the support of his fellow judges on the Fifth Circuit. By contrast, all Fifth Circuit judges has supported Judge Homer Thornberry when he was nominated in the waning months of the Johnson presidency, even though that was not considered an outstanding appointment by many in the country. All judges of the Fourth Circuit had readily supported Judge Haynsworth's nomination. Therefore, it was highly unusual and significant that Judge Carswell could not secure the support of his fellow judges, especially when one considers that they must have assumed at that time that they would have to deal with him continually in future years should his nomination not be confirmed. His subsequent decision to leave the bench and run for political office in Florida seeking to convert a wave of sympathy over his frustrated appointment into the consolation prize of a United States Senate seat only tended to confirm the worst suspicions about his devotion to being a member of the Federal Judiciary.

Judge Carswell, then, fell short in three of the five essential criteria evolving out of the Haynsworth case. This compelled a no vote by the junior Senator from Kentucky and he was joined by several other Senators who simply could not, in good conscience, vote to confirm despite the wishes of most of their constituents. Of the southern Senators who had supported Haynsworth, Spong, of Virginia, and Fulbright, of Arkansas, switched. Gore, of Tennessee and Yarborough, of Texas, voted no again and the only Democrat outside the south of liberal credentials who had supported the Haynsworth nomination, Gravel, of Alaska, joined the opponents this time.

Judge Carswell was defeated 51-45 on April 8, 1970 by essentially the same coalition which had stopped Judge Haynsworth. The justification for opposition, however, as this article seeks to demonstrate, was much sounder. Some undoubtedly voted in favor of Carswell simply because he was a southern conservative. Others, no doubt, voted no for the same reason. The key Senators who determined his fate, however, clearly cast their votes against the Hruska maxim that mediocrity was entitled to a seat on the Supreme Court.

HARRY M. BLACKMUN: CONFIRMATION AT LAST

(The political problem, therefore, is that so much must be explained in distinguishing between Haynsworth and Blackmun, and when the explanations are made there is still room for the political argument that Haynsworth should have been confirmed in the first place.—Richard Wilson, Washington, Evening Star, April 20, 1970.)

President Nixon next sent to the Senate to fill the vacancy of almost one year created by the Fortas resignation of a childhood friend of Chief Justice Warren Burger, his first court appointment, Judge Harry A. Blackmun, of Minnesota and the Eighth Circuit. Judge Blackmun had an initial advantage which Judge Haynsworth and Carswell had not enjoyed—he was not from the South. Once again, in judging the nominee it is appropriate to apply Senator Cook's "Haynsworth test."

Judge Blackmun's competence, temperament, and non-judicial record were quickly established by those charged with the responsibility of reviewing the nomination,[27] and were, in any event, never questioned, as no one asked the Judiciary Committee for the opportunity to be heard in opposition to the nomination.

In the area of achievement or distinction, Judge Blackmun was completely satisfactory. He had published three legal articles: "The Marital Deduction and Its Use in Minnesota";[28] "The Physician and His Estate";[29] and "Allowance of In Forma Pauperis in Section 2255 and Habeas Corpus Cases."[30] In addition, at the time of his selection he was chairman of the Advisory Committee on the Judge's Function of the American Bar Association Special Committee on Standards for the Administration of Criminal Justice. Moreover, he had achieved distinction in the areas of federal taxation and medico-legal problems and was considered by colleagues of the bench and bar to be an expert in these fields.

The only question raised about Judge Blackmun was in the area of judicial integrity or ethics. Judge Blackmun, since his appointment to the Eighth Circuit by President Eisenhower in 1959, had sat in three cases in which he actually owned stock in one of the litigants before him: Hanson v. Ford Motor Co.,[31] Kotula v. Ford Motor Co.,[32] and Mahoney v. Northwestern Bell Telephone Co.[33] In a fourth case, Minnesota Mining and Manufacturing Co. v. Superior Insulating Co.[34] Judge Blackmun acting similarly to Judge Haynesworth in Brunswick, bought shares of one of the litigants after the decision but before the denial of a petition for rehearings.

As previously mentioned, Judge Haynsworth's participation in Brunswick was criticized as violating the spirit of Canon 29 and the literal meaning of Formal Opinion 170 of the ABA, thus showing an insensitivity to judicial ethics, but Judge Blackmun acted similarly in the 3M case and was not so criticized. Except as it could be argued in Brunswick, Judge Haynsworth never sat in a case in which he owned stock in one of the litigants but, rather, three cases in which he merely owned stock in the parent corporation of the litigant-subsidiary, a situation not unethical under any existing standard, or even by the wildest stretch of any legal imaginations, except those of the anti-Haynsworth leadership.

Judge Blackmun, on the other hand, committed a much more clear-cut violation of what could be labelled the "Bayh standard." Senator Bayh, the leader of the opposition in both the Haynsworth and Carswell cases, ingored this breach of the Haynsworth test with the following interesting justification:

"He [Blackmun] discussed his stock holdings with Judge Johnson, then Chief Judge of the Circuit, who advised him that his holdings did not constitute a "substantial interest" under 28 USC 455, and that he was obliged to sit in the case. There is no indication that Judge Haynsworth ever disclosed his financial interest to any colleague or to any party who might have felt there was an apparent conflict, before sitting in such case."[35] [Emphasis added.]

Judge Haynsworth did not inform the lawyers because under existing Fourth Circuit practice he found no significant interest and, thus, no duty to disclose to the lawyers. In any event, Judge Blackmun did not inform any of the lawyers in any of the cases in which he sat, either. Judge Blackmun asked the chief judge his advice and relied upon it. Judge Haynsworth was the chief judge.

Chief Judge Johnson and Chief Judge Haynsworth both interpreted that standard, as it existed, not as the Senator from Indiana later fashioned it. That interpretation was, as the supporters of Judge Haynsworth said it was, and in accord with Chief Judge Johnson who described the meaning of 28 U.S.C. § 455 to be "that a judge should sit regardless of interest, so long as the decision will not have a significant effect upon the value of the judge's interest."[36]

In other words, it is not interest in the litigant but interest in the outcome of the litigation which requires stepping aside. But even if it were interest in the litigant, the interests of Blackmun were de minimis, and the interests of Haynsworth were not only de minimis, but were one step removed—that is, his interest was in the parent corporation where the subsidiary was the litigant. Furthermore, the case law, what little there is, and prevailing practice dictate that in the parent-subsidiary situation there is no duty to step aside.

As John Frank pointed out to the Judiciary Committee during the Haynsworth hearings, where there is no duty to step aside, there is a duty to sit. Judge Haynsworth and Judge Blackmun sat in these cases because under existing standards, not the convenient ad hoc standard of the Haynsworth opponents, they both had a duty to sit. But it is worth noting that if one were to require a strict adherence to the most rigid standard—Formal Opinion 170, which states that a judge shall not sit in a case in which he owns stock in a party litigant—Judge Haynsworth whom Senator Bayh opposed had only one arguable violation, Brunswick, while Judge Blackmun who Senator Bayh supported had one arguable violation, 3M, and three clear violations, Hanson, Kotula and Mahoney.

The Senator from Indiana also argued that since Judge Blackmun stepped aside in Bridgeman v. Gateway Ford Truck Sales,[37] arising after the Haynsworth affair, a situation in which he owned stock in the parent Ford which totally owned one of the subsidiary-litigants, he "displayed a laudable recognition of the changing nature of the standards of judicial conduct."[38] Of course, Judge Blackmun stepped aside after seeing what Judge Haynsworth had been subjected to. Haynsworth did not have an opportunity to step aside in such situations since this new Bayh rule was established during the course of his demise. Certainly Judge Haynsworth would now comply with the Bayh test to avoid further attacks upon his judicial integrity just as Judge Blackmun wisely did in Bridgeman.

It is clear, then, to any objective reviewer, that the Haynsworth and Blackmun cases, aside from the political considerations involved, were virtually indistinguishable. If anything, Judge Blackmun had much more flagrantly violated that standard used to defeat Judge Haynsworth than had Judge Haynsworth. However, Judge Blackmun violated no existing standard worthy of denying him confirmation and he was quite properly confirmed by the Senate on May 12, 1970 by a vote of 88 to 0.

A NEW TEST: CAN ONE BE CONSIDERED?

(Bad laws, if they exist, should be repealed as soon as possible, still, while they continue in force, for the sake of example they should be religiously observed.—Abraham Lincoln.)

It has been demonstrated that Judge Haynsworth and Blackmun violated no existing standards worthy of denying either of them confirmation. Judge Carswell's defeat, like Judge Haynsworth's, was also due in part to the application of a new standard—it having been argued that mediocre nominees had been confirmed in the past, a fortiori Carswell should be also. Yet, certainly achievement was always a legitimate part of the Senate's consideration of a nominee for confirmation just as ethics had always been. The Senate simply ignored mediocrity at various times in the past and refused to do so in the case of Carswell. And in the case of Haynsworth it made up an unrealistic standard of judicial propriety to serve its political purposes and then ignored those standards later in regard to Judge Blackmun because politics dictated confirmation.

Possibly, new standards should be adopted by the Senate but, of course, adopted prospectively in the absence of a pending nomination and not in the course of confirmation proceedings. In this regard, Senator Bayh has now introduced two bills, The Judicial Disqualification Act of 1970 and the Omnibus Disclosure Act which, if enacted, would codify the standards he previously employed to defeat Judge Haynsworth. This legislative effort is an admission that the previously applied standards were nonexistent at the time. Those bills are, however, worthy of serious consideration in a continuing effort to improve judicial standards of conduct. Some standards have been suggested here and will be recounted again but first some observations about the body which must apply them.

First, it is safe to say that anti-southern prejudice is still very much alive in the land and particularly in the Senate. Although this alone did not cause the defeats of Haynsworth and Carswell, it was a major factor. The fact that so many Senators were willing to create a new ethical standard for Judge Haynsworth in November, 1969, in order to insure his defeat and then ignore even more flagrant violations of this newly established standard in May of 1970, can only be considered to demonstrate sectional prejudice.

Another ominous aspect of the past year's events has been that we have seen yet another example of the power of the press over the minds of the people. As Wendell Phillips once commented, "We live under a government of men and morning newspapers." Certainly, one should not accuse the working press of distorting the news. The reporters were simply conveying to the nation the accusations of the Senator from Indiana and others in the opposition camp. These accusations were interpreted by a misinformed public outside the south (as indicated by prominent public opinion polls) as conclusive proof of Judge Haynsworth's impropriety and Judge Carswell's racism, neither of which was ever substantiated. The press should remain unfettered, but public figures must continue to have the courage to stand up to those who would use it for their own narrow political advantage to destroy men's reputations, and more importantly, the aura of dignity which should properly surround the Supreme Court.

Some good, however, has come from this period. Senatorial assertion against an all-powerful Executive, whoever he may be, whether it is in foreign affairs or in Supreme Court appointments, is healthy for the country. Such assertions help restore the constitutional checks and balances between our branches of government, thereby helping to preserve our institutions and maximize our freedom.

In addition, the American Bar Association has indicated a willingness to review its ethical standards and has appointed a Special Committee on Standards of Judicial Conduct, under the chairmanship of Judge Traynor, which issued a Preliminary Statement and Interim Report which would update the ABA Canons of Judicial Ethics. This report was discussed in public hearings on August 8th and 10th, 1970 at the Annual Meeting of the ABA in St. Louis and may be placed on the agenda for consideration at the February, 1971, mid-year meeting of the House of Delegates. Both supporters and opponents of Judge Haynsworth agreed that a review and overhaul of the ABA's Canons of Judicial Ethics was needed. This should be valuable and useful to the Senate as the Judiciary Committee under Senator Eastland has made a practice of requesting reports on Presidential nominees to the Supreme Court by the Standing Committee on the Federal Judiciary of the ABA. This practice probably should be continued as the Senate has not, in any way, delegated its decision upon confirmation to this outside organization. Rather, it seeks the views of the ABA before reporting nominees to the Judiciary to the floor of the Senate just as any committee would seek the views of relevant outside groups before proposing legislation.

Although not central to the considerations of this article, it should be noted what the Executive may have learned from this period. President Johnson undoubtedly discovered in the Fortas and Thornberry nominations that the Senate could be very reluctant at times to approve nominees who might be classified as personal friends or "cronies" of the Executive. It was also established that the Senate would frown upon Justices of the Supreme Court acting as advisors to the President as a violation of the concept of separation of powers. This argument was used very effectively against the elevation of Justice Fortas to the Chief Justiceship as he had been an advisor to President Johnson on a myriad of matters during his tenure on the Court. President Nixon learned during the Carswell proceedings that a high degree of competence would likely be required by the Senate before it approved future nominees. He also learned during the Haynsworth case that the Senate would likely require strict adherence to standards of judicial propriety.

Unfortunately, as a result of this episode, the administration has adopted a very questionable practice in regard to future nominations to the Supreme Court. Attorney General John N. Mitchell announced on July 28, 1970 that the Justice Department would adopt a new procedure under which the Attorney General will seek a compete investigation by the ABA's Standing Committee on the Federal Judiciary before recommending anyone to the President for nomination to the Supreme Court. This Committee has already enjoyed virtually unprecedented influence in the selection of U.S. District and Circuit Judges as this Administration has made no nominations to these Courts which have not received the prior approval of this twelve man Committee. In effect, the Administration, after delegating to this Committee veto power over lower federal court appointments, has now broadened this authority to cover its selections to the Supreme Court. Complete delegation of authority to an outside organization of so awesome a responsibility as designating men to our federal District and Circuit Courts is bad enough, but such a delegation of authority to approve, on the Supreme Court level, is most unwise. Far from representing all lawyers in the country, the ABA has historically been the repository of "big-firm," "defense-oriented," "corporate-type lawyers" who may or may not make an objective appraisal of a prospective nominee, if President Wilson had asked the ABA for prior approval of Brandeis, the Supreme Court and the nation would never have benefitted from his great legal talents. The presumption that such an outside organization as the American Bar Association is better able to pass upon the credentials of nominees for the federal courts and especially the Supreme Court than the President of the United States who is given the constitutional authority is an erroneous judgment which the passage of time will hopefully see reversed.[39] This is not to imply that ABA views would not be useful to the Executive in its considerations just as they are useful to but not determinative of the actions of the Senate (the Senate having rejected ABA approved nominees Haynsworth and Carswell).

What standard then can be drawn for the Senate from the experiences of the past year in advising and consenting to Presidential nominations to the Supreme Court? They have been set out above but should be reiterated in conclusion. At the outset, the Senate should discount the philosophy of the nominee. In our politically centrist society, it is highly unlikely that any Executive would nominate a man of such extreme views of the right or the left as to be disturbing to the Senate. However, a nomination, for example, of a Communist or a member of the American Nazi Party, would have to be considered an exception to the recommendation that the Senate leave ideological considerations to the discretion of the Executive. Political and philosophical considerations were often a factor in the nineteenth century and arguably in the Parker, Haynsworth and Carswell cases also, but this is not proper and tends to degrade the Court and dilute the constitutionally proper authority of the Executive in this area. The President is presumably elected by the people to carry out a program and altering the ideological directions of the Supreme Court would seem to be a perfectly legitimate part of a Presidential platform. To that end, the Constitution gives to him the power to nominate. As mentioned earlier, if the power to nominate had been given to the Senate, as was considered during the debates at the Constitutional Convention, then it would be proper for the Senate to consider political philosophy. The proper role of the Senate is to advise and consent to the particular nomination, and thus, as the Constitution puts it, "to appoint." This taken within the context of modern times should mean an examination only into the qualifications of the President's nominee.

In examining the qualifications of a Supreme Court nominee, use of the following criteria is recommended. First, the nominee must be judged competent. He should, of course, be a lawyer although the Constitution does not require it. Judicial experience might satisfy the Senate as to the nominee's competence, although the President should certainly not be restricted to naming sitting judges. Legal scholars as well as practicing lawyers might well be found competent.

Second, the nominee should be judged to have obtained some level of achievement or distinction. After all, it is the Supreme Court the Senate is considering not the police court in Hoboken, N.J. or even the U.S. District or Circuit Courts. This achievement could be established by writings, but the absence of publications alone would not be fatal. Reputation at the bar and bench would be significant. Quality of opinions if a sitting judge, or appellate briefs if a practicing attorney, or articles or books if a law professor might establish the requisite distinction. Certainly, the acquisition of expertise in certain areas of the law would be an important plus in determining the level of achievement of the nominee.

Third, temperament could be significant. Although difficult to establish and not as important as the other criteria, temperament might become a factor where, for example in the case of Carswell, a sitting judge was alleged to be hostile to a certain class of litigants or abusive to lawyers in the courtroom.

Fourth, the nominee, if a judge, must have violated no existing standard of ethical conduct rendering him unfit for confirmation. If the nominee is not a judge, he must not have violated the Canons of Ethics and statutes which apply to conduct required of members of the bar. If a law professor, he must be free of violations of ethical standards applicable to that profession, for example plagiarism.

Fifth and finally, the nominee must have a clean record in his life off the bench. He should be free from prior criminal conviction and not the possessor of debilitating personal problems such as alcoholism or drug abuse. However, this final criterion would rarely come into play due to the intensive personal investigations customarily employed by the Executive before nominations are sent to the Senate.

In conclusion, these criteria for Senate judgment of nominees to the Supreme Court are recommended for future considerations. It will always be difficult to obtain a fair and impartial judgment from such an inevitably political body as the United States Senate. However, it is suggested that the true measure of a statesman may well be the ability to rise above partisan political considerations to objectively pass upon another aspiring human being. While the author retains no great optimism for their future usage, these guidelines are now, nevertheless, left behind, a fitting epilog hopefully to a most unique and unforgettable era in the history of the Supreme Court.

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, I have had a chance to observe Justice Rehnquist over a period of 15 years. While I would not in any way assert that I have studied all his writings and opinions, I have a sense of his distinguished career on the Supreme Court; and I can say that there is no person—not one, anywhere in the country—the President could have selected who would have been a better choice for Chief Justice of the United States than Bill Rehnquist.

So, Mr. President, I rise today in wholehearted support of the nomination of William Rehnquist to be Chief Justice of the United States. As a member of the Judiciary Committee, it is with great pride that I join the majority of my colleagues on that committee in recommending confirmation of Justice Rehnquist without reservation.

While I respect the opinions of my colleagues who disagree with the choice of Mr. Rehnquist, and who would have made a different choice, I believe that a heavy burden must be met by those who would have this nominee rejected. Under the Constitution, our duty is to provide advice and consent to judicial nominations, not to substitute our judgment for what are reasonable views for a judicial nominee to hold. I believe that if consideration of this nomination proceeds on the merits, William Rehnquist will be quickly confirmed as our next Chief Justice of the United States.

The Members of this body have a solemn, constitutional duty to rigorously scrutinize the qualifications of judicial nominees, especially those of nominees to this high office. But, I might add, we have a corresponding obligation to do so with civility and fairness, both out of a sense of respect for the nominee and a sense of dignity for this institution. I regret to say that this obligation has been honored more in the breach in recent months.

It has been asserted, dogmatically, by Members of this body, and by certain segments of the media, that candidates such as Justice Rehnquist and Judge Scalia are too "extreme" in their judicial philosophy. Regretfully also, attempts were made to cast doubts on Mr. Rehnquist's character. Mr. President, such characterizations, to be blunt, are nonsense.

Mainstreet America has spoken clearly and unequivocally throughout the decade of the eighties in articulating a new set of priorities for this Nation. Part of the mandate that the citizens of 49 of these United States entrusted to President Ronald Reagan has been to reign in the extreme activism of our Federal judiciary.

I would respectfully submit that those who maintain that the President's nominees are outcasts from the mainstream of contemporary judicial thought, are themselves so far adrift on the fringes that they have lost contact with the prevailing currents of American society. Justice Rehnquist's credentials and qualifications place him squarely on the crest of this new wave.

Mr. President, numerous attempts were made during the hearings in the Judiciary Committee and are being made now on the Senate floor to cast doubt on Mr. Rehnquist's character. Let me make clear that the "evidence" brought forward to date has failed to raise a doubt in this Senator's mind. Sadly, these allegations speak more to the politics of the confirmation process than to the personal integrity and professional competence of the nominee. Concerns raised about Justice Rehnquist's participation in Laird v. Tatum, 408 U.S.C. 1 (1972), fall particularly in this category.

The Laird versus Tatum case involved surveillance activities by the Department of the Army in connection with attempts to control civil disorder during the late 1960's. Justice Rehnquist, then Assistant Attorney General, Office of Legal Counsel, testified before the Senate Judiciary Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights in 1971. He testified as an expert witness for the Department of Justice in regard to the statutory and constitutional authority of the executive branch to gather information on private citizens. Opponents of this nomination have questioned Justice Rehnquist's refusal to recuse himself in the Laird versus Tatum case.

The only statute directly governing the recusal of Supreme Court Justices is section 455 of the judicial code, 28 U.S.C. section 455. That statute provides that:

> Any justice or judge of the United States shall disqualify himself in any case in which he has a substantial interest, has been of counsel, is or has been a material witness, or is so related to, or connected with any party of his attorney as to render it improper, in his opinion, for him to sit on the trial, appeal, or other proceeding therein.

This statute operates on two levels, one mandatory and one discretionary. Of the mandatory grounds, Justice Rehnquist clearly had no "substantial interest," was not "of counsel," nor was a "material witness." This is not in dispute. The discretionary level of the statute presents a closer question. As an Associate Attorney General, Mr. Rehnquist was a public spokesman for the Justice Department, and appeared before a Senate Judiciary Subcommittee in that capacity. The statute premises discretionary recusal on an appearance of impropriety. Other standards of conduct, although not directly binding on Justice Rehnquist, are also couched in terms of the appearance of impropriety.

I would commend Justice Rehnquist's comprehensive memorandum detailing his reasons for declining to recuse himself to my colleagues' attention. In that memorandum, Justice Rehnquist concluded that:

> Based upon the foregoing analysis, I conclude that the applicable statute does not warrant my disqualification in this case. Having so said, I would certainly concede that fair-minded judges might disagree about the matter.

This is the crux of the matter. As Justice Rehnquist recognized 15 years ago, this was not an easy call. Perhaps his decision not to recuse himself, viewed in the harsh glare of hindsight, was not wise. However, I would remind my colleagues that hindsight would give each and every one of us cause to rethink actions and decisions made, in good faith, in the past.

□ 1750

Justice Rehnquist is not the first nor will he be the last Justice to be confronted with this discretionary decision. Indeed, one of the principle authors of the "Black-Connery Fair Labor Standards Act" later sat on the case which upheld the constitutionality of the act, United States versus Darby. Chief Justice Hughes, 2 years before he was appointed to that position, discussed at length Adkins versus Children's Hospital in a book about the court. Nine years later, he authored the West Coast Hotel Co. versus Parrish decision which overruled Adkins. In each case, these respected members of the Court determined that there was a stronger public obligation to participate in the case, than to take the easy out and recuse himself.

After careful consideration of those factors I believe ought to be weighed in evaluating Presidental nominations to the Supreme Court, I have come to the conclusion that Mr. Justice Rehnquist is professionally, exceptionally well-qualified to lead our Nation's highest court. Furthermore, I am pleased to add my personal endorsement of this nominee as well, as a man of great integrity, wisdom, and foresight. I can assure my colleagues that Justice Rehnquist will not only serve the Court to the utmost of his vast abilities, but also perform those duties with distinction. Thus, Mr. President, it is without reservation that I can confidently go on record today as supporting the confirmation of Justice Rehnquist to be Chief Justice of the United States.

As I said earlier as someone who has known and worked with Justice Rehnquist in the past, I can say that I do not think the President could have picked a more outstanding nominee for Chief Justice than William Rehnquist.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, I would like to ask my colleagues to join me in supporting Justice William H. Rehnquist who has been nominated by President Reagan to serve as the 16th Chief Justice of the U.S. Supreme Court. Justice Rehnquist meets every test of qualification for service as Chief Justice of the U.S. Supreme Court. He is a man of superior intelligence and proven excellence.

During his past 15 years of service as Associate Justice on the Supreme Court, Justice Rehnquist has demonstrated continued excellence in bringing balanced and scholarly opinion to Supreme Court rulings. His decisions, whether dissenting or concurring, have consistently reflected a keen perception and thorough understanding of constitutional law and issues. The American Bar Association described Chief Justice-designate Rehnquist as a "true scholar . . . unbelievably brilliant . . . a very capable individual in every respect." The ABA also notes that Justice Rehnquist is highly respected by fellow Associate Justices on the Court. He has twice received the American Bar Association's highest rating of professional competence, judicial temperament and integrity.

His history of dedicated service on the Court and his independent legal activities and honors prove Justice Rehnquist perfectly suited to lead the highest court in our judicial system. Before nomination to the Supreme Court, Justice Rehnquist served as Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Office of Legal Counsel at the Department of Justice. Between 1953 and 1969, while he practiced law in Phoenix, AZ, Justice Rehnquist served as president and member of the board of directors of the Maricopa County Bar Association in Phoenix. He also acted as chairman of the Arizona State Bar Continuing Legal Education Committee, and from 1963-69 was elected to the council of administrative law section of the American Bar Association. Justice Rehnquist has written articles published by U.S. News & World Report, the American Bar Association Journal, and the Harvard Law Record.

Prior to his 16-year private legal practice, Justice Rehnquist served as law clerk to Justice Robert H. Jackson on the Supreme Court. His education includes a bachelor of arts from Stanford University where he was elected to membership in Phi Beta Kappa and a master's degree from Harvard University in history. Justice Rehnquist attended Stanford University Law School where he graduated first in his class in 1952, and was a member of the Stanford Law Review.

Mr. President and fellow colleagues, we have in Justice Rehnquist a uniquely qualified candidate. I extend my wholehearted endorsement of his nomination and I urge you to join me today in my vote for confirmation.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for 5 minutes as though in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCCONNELL). Without objection, it is so ordered.

VISIT BY CARDINAL KROL

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, on the coming Sunday history of sorts will be made in northeast Minneapolis. For the first time in 50 years a cardinal of the Roman Catholic Church will visit the Twin Cities when Father Frank Decowski hosts Cardinal John Krol at the Church of the Holy Cross. The last visit—in 1936—was by an Italian Cardinal named Eugenio Pacelli who later became better known as Pope Pius XII.

Having enjoyed the celebration of Mass at Holy Cross just a year ago after my return from Poland, I now take pleasure in recognizing the honor which Cardinal Krol does the largest Polish parish west of Chicago and congratulating the parishoners who make Holy Cross possible.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an article in the Minneapolis Tribune describing this occasion be printed in the RECORD in full.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Minneapolis Star and Tribune, Sept. 6, 1986]

PASTOR, FLOCK TO OBSERVE CENTENNIAL OF POLISH PARISH CHURCH

(By Neal Gendler)

From the window of his study at Church of the Holy Cross in northeast Minneapolis, the Rev. Frank Decowski can look down the alley at the house in which he grew up.

At 53, Decowski is a little more than half the age of the church in which he grew up, and he has a lot in common with the folks in his flock.

"I've known 90 percent of these people all my life," Decowski said Thursday. "A lot of people still call me Frankie."

Decowski and most of the 1,300 households in Holy Cross share a Polish heritage, and many members have grown up near the church, 1621 University Ave. NE., in a neighborhood with about a dozen churches on as many blocks. Many families have belonged to Holy Cross since they arrived in Minneapolis sometime in the last century.

Decowski and the families that comprise the largest Polish parish between Chicago and the West Coast will celebrate the church's centennial a week from Sunday, with a mass of thanksgiving and a dinner featuring the nation's ranking Polish-American priest, Cardinal John Krol of Philadelphia.

Krol is to preside over the noon mass and speak at the dinner that afternoon at the Prom Center in St. Paul. Decowski believes that Krol's public appearance will be the first by a cardinal in the Twin Cities since the late Eugenio Pacelli, who later became Pope Pius XII, celebrated mass at the St. Paul Cathedral in 1936.

Decowski first invited the pope, although he didn't really expect John Paul to attend. The pope—who Decowski met in 1979, when both were guests of Vice President Mondale—sent a photo of himself inscribed in Polish with good wishes to Holy Cross on its centennial. Decowski wanted Krol to attend "to honor the people of our parish," a number of whom had arrived under difficult circumstances since 1945. "I wanted to honor our community."

The genial Decowski had thought of driving Krol from the church to the Prom in a horse-drown carriage, but dropped fancy ideas when he learned that the cardinal was returning from a trip to Poland and would be tired. Still, plans call for a lively day.

The mass, which Archbishop John Roach will celebrate, will be held in a church bedecked in the Polish national colors, with red-and-white banners with the white Polish eagle and white keys for the pope. Two pieces include the opening words of the Polish anthem that translate loosely as "Poland has not died."

If he can get the city to close the street, Decowski will have traditional Polish dancing in front of the church before the service.

It is such traditions, coupled with family ties, that have helped people maintain connections to Holy Cross even if they have moved to suburbs, Decowski said. His own parents met and married there, and two of his brothers still belong.

Their father died five weeks before he was born, Decowski said, and his mother supported her five children by scrubbing floors during the week and cooking for church weddings on weekends.

"I did not speak a word of English until kindergarten," he said. His Polish grew rusty over years serving other Minneapolis churches, and when he returned to Holy Cross, he was tutored by immigrant high-school students so he could lead Polish masses. He doesn't preach in Polish, he said, but he hears confessions in Polish—and understands what he's being told.

The church in which Decowski grew up was built in 1927 and is the congregation's third. The first was the original building of nearby St. Anthony parish, a structure 28 by 46 feet built in 1851 as the city's first Catholic church. The people who started Holy Cross bought it for $25 and moved it to what now is a church-school playground across the street from Holy Cross.

The second church was built for about 500 people and began use in 1892. It was a period of great immigration from Eastern Europe to America, and, for many, work in the flour mills of Minneapolis.

The present church was built in 1927 and, the church history says, "has parishioners who have lived in the parish and sometimes on the same block or even in the same house all their lives." Decowski said that the sense of continuity is one of the church's great attractions.

"People stick together here," he said "They're related to everybody around here . . . they just like what we do, I suppose. We carry on a lot of the traditions that their parents and grandparents brought from Poland."

For example, families take home oplatki, or holy bread, that is eaten at Christmas-Eve dinner as a symbol of unity, peace and love. At Easter, people bring their food to church for a special blessing.

"Easter Sunday morning, we have what is called the resurrection mass," he said. "We have a procession around the church several times singing the traditional Polish hymns of the resurrection. After mass they go home—again as a family—to eat the blessed food." The dinner includes sharing an egg as a sign of unity and resurrection. Other churches also bless the food, he said, but Holy Cross does it five times at masses scheduled so all can attend.

Two of each Sunday's five masses are in Polish. One of Decowski's two assistants, the Rev. Antoni Bury, came from Poland 14 years ago. The other, the Rev. Gerard Dvorak, grew up in the community. The congregation includes a number of young immigrants who have arrived since martial law was declared in Poland in 1981, he said, and Holy Cross has the only Polish masses in Minneapolis. St. Adalbert's Church in St. Paul has Polish masses, too.

Decowski said that in his neighborhood, about 90 percent of the people are in church over a weekend. Although about 40 percent of his congregation is over 60, with the rest divided rather evenly by age group, a number of young families are moving back into the area. The school serves a number of parishes, but about 150 of its 450 students are from Holy Cross.

Decowski is the "native son" to be pastor, according to a church history.

"Everybody would love to come back to his own parish," Decowski said, but when the archbishop asked him to come to Holy Cross, Decowski had some mixed emotions, wondering if people would open up to him in time of need.

But it's been just the opposite, he said. "Especially in time of illness, time of death," he said, "it's somebody they've known all their life who is there."

LEE KNEIP'S BIRTHDAY HIGH

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, on the 50th anniversary of my birth I had a large party under an elaborate canopy with hundreds of well-wishers who came to gloat at my aging. I obliged them by acting 50.

On the second anniversary of my 50th birthday, my sister's husband, Lee Kneip, celebrated the 50th anniversary of his birth. He too did it under a canopy. But, he said, "anybody can have a party." And so he went out and made his first ever jump from higher than 6 feet. He went out of an airplane 3,500 feet over Menomonee Falls, WI, under an appropriate canopy, acting as though he were half his age.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an article on Lee's birthday "party" in the Sussex Sun be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BIRTHDAY CELEBRATION 3,500 FEET UP IN AIR

(By Fred H. Keller)

When you hit 50 years old, the family usually has a special party for you, the aged one, be it a house warming, a surprise party, or what have you. But Lee Kneip, W253 N9342 Bittersweet Dr., Blue Huron Subdivision, in the Town of Lisbon, didn't have any of the above events for his 50th. Oh, he was the center of attention, but he got that attention by what he did on his 50th, not what others did for him. He did something he had never done before, something he always wanted to do . . . he made his first-ever parachute jump from an airplane.

Prior to his jump Tuesday evening, Aug. 19, at Aero Park in Menomonee Falls, he said, "This is something I always wanted to do. Everyone else has parties. Anybody can have a party, but we are going to have a party, too . . . after I jump."

A lot of his friends, relatives and neighbors showed up to see Lee make his first jump. He said to them, "This is something to do . . . something different. I'm still young . . . at least I'm at the dividing line between young and old age. Now with all these people here to see me jump I don't dare back out."

He got a final kiss from his wife Connie, and almost a funeral, tearful, goodbye from his young daughter. He had to tell her that he knew what he was doing, and it wasn't going to be that bad. His last words to his wife was a reassuring, "It was a nice 24 years."

As he was putting his suit and parachute on, he commented. "I think this is kind of neat. My mother even thinks it is neat, but she can't make it to the field today."

To be able to jump, Lee had to go through a five hour special schooling that cost $90. He winked when he said that he had to pay an extra $30 for a set of rubber pants.

Lee walked to the plane waving and disappeared down the Aero Park runway. The plane made a couple of circles of the field and at 3,500 feet dumped Lee out into the wild blue yonder. His friends had gone to the landing circle that all parachutists aim for. Their comments while Lee floated down were that he was too far east, that they hoped he didn't land in the high tension wires a mile east, and a little later they said they hoped he didn't land in the golf course and trees a quarter mile west.

However, Lee turned his parachute at almost a right angle and came screaming in towards the landing circle. At the last possible moment he applied his brakes so that when he touched the ground it was almost like taking one step off the curb. He landed standing up and walked slowly missing the target circle by 60 feet.

Asked how it was, he said, "I'm going again as soon as I raise the $25 fee for the second jump. What the worst part was, was opening that door up there, and climbing out. The pilot only said go twice. You really feel it in the crotch when that chute opens. I made three circles of the field in the chute and at the end you have got to land into the wind. I had no embarrassment."

Asked what his biggest jump prior to the parachute jump, he said, "Six feet."

A big party followed, with a cake that had a miniature parachutist plunged head first into the center of the cake.

RECENT EVENTS IN CHILE

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, today the people of Chile mark the 13th anniversary of an authoritarian government that is characterized by restrictions on civil liberties, including the suspension of political activities. I take this occasion to deplore recent events in Chile and to express my firm hope that the momentum for democratic change can survive.

Mr. President, as I speak today, I am struck by the contrasts between two Southern Cone nations: Chile and Brazil. This morning I listened to the elected, civilian leader of Brazil, President Jose Sarney. After many years of military rule, Brazil has emerged as a healthy democracy. President Sarney knows what he is talking about when he says, "Only he who has lost his freedom knows its true value. And how difficult it is to regain it."

But while Brazil has embarked on the road of democracy, Chile is today in a state of siege under a military dictatorship. The democratic winds of change have swept across most of Latin America in recent years. The path of Brazil, as exemplified by President Jose Sarney, stands in stark contrast to the path of Chile.

Today marks a crucial juncture for the future of Chile. The attempted assassination of Gen. Augusto Pinochet and the government's reaction considerably dims the prospects for a democratic future in Chile.

Since 1980 elements of the extreme left in Chile have conducted a terrorist campaign that plays directly into the hands of those who wish to forestall a transition to democracy. The Movimiento Izquierdista (Iz-key-air-deé-sta) Revolucionaria [MIR] and the Manuel Rodriguez Patriotic Front [FPMR], both linked to the pro-Soviet Chilean Communist Party, have embraced the strategy and tactics of terror in pursuit of their extremist vision for Chile. The September 7, 1986, assassination attempt represents an escalation in the terrorists' tactics and deserves the strongest condemnation.

The assassination attempt severely damages the evolving, and as yet fragile, efforts of democratic elements within Chile. I strongly supported the signing of the National Accord for the Transition to Full Democracy by 22 leading democratic politicians representing 11 parties on August 26, 1985. The signing of the national accord was a watershed in Chilean history. All who support a peaceful road to democracy in Chile were heartened by its' announcement. Thereupon I introduced Senate Concurrent Resolution 68 on September 23, 1985.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee reported an identical resolution, Senate Concurrent Resolution 82, which was placed on the Senate Calendar on October 23, 1985. What has been the response of Pinochet's government to these expressions of support for democracy?

Unfortunately, the events of the past week have greatly complicated the chances for democratic progress in Chile.

□ 1800

The attack on General Pinochet was launched by at least 30 heavily armed men and killed 5 members of his escort. This action can only strengthen Pinochet's claim that his continued rule is the only alternative to Communist-inspired chaos. Violence of this type, long advocated by the MIR and FPMR, polarizes the political atmosphere. And it benefits those who oppose a return to democracy in Chile but only temporarily. Sooner or later the democratization of all the Americas will be completed.

The reaction of the Chilean Government to the assassination attempt illustrates how the terrorists' strategy of provocation works.

It is tragic. But it is also predictable. The commission of violent acts leads to government repression that alienates moderate elements, thereby leaving the political field open to the extremists. The predictable repression that follows acts of terrorism strengthens the terrorists' claim that armed struggle is the only alternative to continued authoritarian rule. Government repression targets the overt, and therefore vulnerable, political center rather than the much more elusive terrorist infrastructure. This tragic cycle has been played over and over again in Latin America.

In my time in the Senate, we have seen it in El Salvador and Nicaragua despite the neighboring example of Costa Rica. But now we watch Guatemala and Honduras try to emulate Costa Rica to avoid the bloodshed of El Salvador and Nicaragua.

The reimposition of a state of siege in Chile is a lamentable response by Pinochet. The murders of Jose Carrasco Tapia, Gaston Vidarrauzaga, and Felipe Segundo Rivera represent a further increase in the Chilean cycle of violence.

The arrest of religious and political figures, including the moderate Socialist Ricardo Lagos, and the closing of six opposition publications, including the Christian Democrat's Hoy, is a significant regression in Chilean political development. Both the Socialists and the Christian Democrats are members of the Democratic Alliance and signed the National Accord on Transition to Full Democracy. Governmental actions further restricting the political center strengthens the appeal of the radical left just as terrorism increases the appeal of the right and provides a justification for increased repression.

The recent history of Chile is marked by an escalating cycle of violence. But that cycle can be broken as the experience of Brazil has illustrated. Today's speech by civilian President Jose Sarney of Brazil shows just how far Brazil has traveled along the democratic path.

Sarney distilled the essence of democracy: "This is the belief of the true democrat: to respect the opinions of others. Democracy has survived because it does not live by dogma, absolute truths or inquisitions of faith. It is nurtured by the creative power of freedom of opinion, of initiative, of having working, informing, believing, not believing, loving, dreaming."

Sarney also understands how foes of democracy fear the democratic idea. Today, Sarney spoke about an episode from the early history of Brazil's struggle for democracy. He said;

> In 1787, the young Brazilian Jose Joaquim Maia sought out Thomas Jefferson, then Minister Plenipotentiary in Paris, to ask his support for our independence. Two years later, our hero, Tiradentes, who dreamed of a free and republican Brazil, was hanged, drawn and quartered, his severed body hung for all to see, in the streets and the roads, as a cruel example to smother the dream of freedom, and to declare that it would not come forth in our land.
> Do you know what the King's agents found among the papers that had set the heart of our martyr afire with the holy madness of independence? The Constitution of the United States of America.

This brief episode illustrates the importance of the American role in setting an example for and assisting the efforts of democrats around the world. The triumph of democracy in Brazil is one of the many examples the forces of democratic change in Chile can look to in the difficult days ahead.

Continued faith by moderate political figures in an eventual transition to democracy through peaceful means is essential if Chile is not to be plunged into turmoil that will serve the goals of extremists. The Catholic Church in Chile, under the brave leadership of Cardinal Juan Francisco Fresno, continues to work as a moderating force within Chile. Cardinal Fresno played the central role in the formulation of the National accord. His efforts to encourage moderation in Chile deserve greater support.

I join with others in expressing the value of the appointment of a papal envoy to assist in mediating the current situation. The importance of the Catholic Church in Chile would impart great credibility to such a mediation effort.

The solutions of the radical left in Chile are not the solutions of the Chilean people. I call on the democratic leaders in Chile, the signatories of the National accord, to meet with representatives of the Popular Democratic Movement [MDP] on neutral ground to discuss the future of Chile.

The MDP must be encouraged to denounce political violence and terrorism, and to enter the evolving Chilean dialogue as a responsible actor.

I strongly urge the signers of the National accord to continue their courageous course of working for the restoration of a democratic order that satisfies the aspirations of the Chilean people. To achieve this goal, the large political center in Chile must make its' presence felt through nonviolent but resolute social pressure.

Only broad-based expressions of popular support for a moderate political course can undermine the attraction of the extremist alternatives.

Chile is in the throes of a crisis with very high stakes for the Chilean people, for the United States, and for the entire hemisphere. It is imperative that the violence of the past week does not lead to a further spiral of extremism. Strong United States support for the democratic forces laboring within Chile must continue.

The moderate voices in Chile must not let themselves be drowned out by those who wish to encourage an escalation of violence. On the 13th anniversary of authoritarian rule in Chile, the world must look to the future as well as the past.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues over the next 3½ weeks to give some attention to the opportunity that this body and this country has to begin the process of democracy for the Chilean people. Senate Concurrent Resolution 82 is at the desk and can be called up at any time and ought to be acted on by this body before we conclude the business of this 99th Congress.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DURENBERGER). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to speak in morning business for a period not to exceed 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

CHILE

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I rise to comment on the subject that I have not spoken to previously, but I have heard two of my colleagues speak on the subject today—one was the distinguished Senator from Iowa, Senator HARKIN, and the other was the distinguished Senator from Minnesota, Senator DURENBERGER—on the situation as it exists in Chile.

I wish to commend both of them for addressing themselves to the subject. I do not know of a more repressive regime that exists anywhere in this world than that which exists in Chile. It is an administration that has no respect whatsoever for human rights, for democracy, for freedom.

On this 13th anniversary, instead of moving more in the direction of a democratic regime, we find that they are engaged in the most repressive of tactics for those who have spoken out, including murders of those in the media, the press. I just rise to say that I am glad that two of my colleagues have seen fit to speak to the subject today. I want to be identified with the position that they have taken.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, on September 11, 1973, the Chilean people came under the grip of one of the most repressive, intolerant, and systematic military dictatorships in Latin America. Today, 13 years later, the Chilean people still are suffering under the yoke of President Augusto Pinochet as brutal violations of human rights occur, as political freedoms are restricted, and the prospect of a peaceful transition to democracy seems as remote as ever.

Brutal and severe reaction on the part of Chilean military and security forces against popular demands for political and economic justice have intensified in the past months. The principal targets of government sponsored abuse have been those in the poor working class neighborhoods in Santiago. Also targets of this repression are student and labor leaders, the press and members of the clergy and others considered human rights activists. Just last week Amnesty International released a report revealing that the military government is using clandestine forces, which include members of the security forces acting under cover, to kidnap, torture, and kill those identified as opposition activists. According to Amnesty, these forces have intensified their operations since 1983 as mass arrests have become more common. Since May, mass roundups of people, especially those from the poor neighborhoods, have pushed arrest figures to the highest since the days following the coup in 1973. The Vicariate of Solidarity, a church-run human rights organization as well as the Chilean Commission on Human Rights have documented increasing cases of torture. The brutal burning of Washington resident Rodrigo Rojas and his companion by the Army this past July brought the stark reality faced by the people of Chile close to us.

The assassination attempt against President Pinochet this past weekend underscores the polarization which is taking place in Chile. The call for violence from the extreme left is as deplorable as the violence perpetrated by the security forces. The Government's response to the attempt on Pinochet's life is resulting in even more government repression as the state of siege was expanded, six opposition magazines were closed, and some political opposition leaders were jailed. An editor of one of the banned opposition magazines was found murdered after he had been taken from his home by armed men in civilian clothes. Several leaders of the democratic opposition in Chile, including members of the clergy, sent messages or visited the Presidential Palace to repudiate violence as a means to change the government.

The democratic opposition in Chile, representing a wide political spectrum of political parties from left to right, through the church-sponsored National Accord plan, is actively working for a peaceful transition toward democracy. These responsible political leaders are advocating moderate constitutional changes which would lead to free and democratic elections. The military government ignores the democratic opposition movement, seeing it as an obstacle to the perpetuation of Pinochet in political power through the end of this century.

Mr. President, the bloodbath has begun in Chile, but its not too late to stop it, although with each passing day it becomes more difficult. Those outside of Chile who believe in the peaceful transition to democracy should do everything possible to support the democratic movement. Inside Chile, the military itself, with its past proud tradition of supporting democratically elected civilian governments, must be increasingly uncomfortable with the role Pinochet has dictated for them these past 13 years. Moderates have prevailed among the democratic opposition and I would hope that moderates within the military would become more active in working for the transition to democracy. Chile is running out of time. Serious steps toward the restoration of Chilean democracy must take place now.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mrs. Emery, one of his secretaries.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session, the Presiding Officer laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations and a withdrawal which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(The nominations received today are printed at the end of the Senate proceedings.)

INDIANA DUNES NATIONAL LAKESHORE

● Mr. QUAYLE. Mr. President, today, along with my colleague, Senator LUGAR, I am introducing legislation to improve the management of the Indiana Dunes National Lakeshore.

On August 26, I conducted a meeting in Chesterton, IN, with several individuals who are actively concerned about the Indiana Dunes. Thanks to their comments, I came away from that meeting impressed that H.R. 4037, legislation to enhance the Dunes that has been passed by the House, is a balanced bill. At that meeting, participants shared with me their suggestions about particular changes that could improve the House bill. I have found many of these to be worthy, and, thus, I am introducing a new bill in the Senate that incorporates these recommendations.

I believe this bill addresses the management, development and environmental needs of the lakeshore for the foreseeable future. I believe it is a design for the next decade.

Where the House-passed bill provides for expanding the Dunes by 853 acres, our bill would authorize the acquisition of a total of about 1,100 additional acres within the park boundaries, but not all this acreage would be by fee purchase.

In the Heron Rookery, for example, H.R. 4037 proposes two parcels of property for acquisition, one to the south owned by the State of Indiana and one to the north owned by private landowners. Several of these landowners have expressed reservations about selling their lands and concern over the consequent loss to the local tax base. Because the current owners have no plans to use the land for any purpose but agriculture, one the lakeshore finds consistent with protection of the herons, I believe a trigger mechanism is a more appropriate approach to acquiring this parcel than fee purchase. Our bill, therefore, provides that the Park Service would be authorized to negotiate for an agricultural easement for this land only in the event a landowner decides not to conduct farming operations on it any longer. Otherwise, landowners could continue their current practice of farming this property, and there would be no loss to the local tax base.

Under our bill, a 267-acre parcel would be included in the lakeshore boundaries but not purchased. This land encompasses the NIPSCO/South Shore Railroad corridor to extend the boundary to U.S. 12. Current statutes prohibit the Park Service from diminishing existing rights-of-way or easements for electrical transmission or railroad operations. I support this current prohibition. Including this corridor within the lakeshore boundaries would both give the Park Service management responsibility for trails along this strip and enable the Park Service to coordinate better its development of a system of trails within the Dunes.

This bill also includes three parcels that were included in the original House bill, but deleted during House committee markup. The most significant of these, I-H, called Woodlake Dune Savannah, is characterized by oak savannah and intermittent wetlands. It was identified by the State of Indiana in the Indiana natural areas inventory and previously considered by both the State and the nature conservancy for acquisition for preservation purposes. It harbors several very rare plant species considered threatened in Indiana.

During my August 26 meeting, there was a consensus for including a few additional acres to the House-passed II-F parcel, generally following the 620' contour line, to establish a corridor along the Salt Creek that could be used to provide access to such recreational activities as fishing and canoeing. I have included this addition in my bill.

Finally, this legislation raises the authorization ceiling for development to $20 million rather than the $25 million provided in the House bill. Because the existing authorization ceiling has been breached, it is necessary to address this matter. However, I believe that a $20 million authorization ceiling will permit adequate development activities to take place within the Lakeshore for the foreseeable future.

To meet other management needs of the park besides acquisition, this legislation incorporates several features of H.R. 4037. Two studies are to be conducted under this legislation. The first would be a study of the feasibility of establishing portions of U.S. 12 as a scenic parkway. The second study would examine linking the west and east units of the Lakeshore. While I certainly believe this needs to be studied, it is my hope the emphasis would be on assessing nonacquisition means of linkage, such as through easements or cooperative agreements, wherever possible.

This legislation also gives the Secretary of the Interior the authority to participate in planning recreational activities along the Little Calumet River and Burns Waterway. This is warranted because any development of recreational facilities outside the park boundaries will have an effect on the number of visitors to the park and the services it provides.

The Indiana Dunes National Lakeshore is an important asset to the northwest Indiana region and to the State as a whole. Already an enhancement to the quality of life in the region, the park can also act as a drawing card for increased economic activity there. I believe this legislation makes improvements to the management, development and environmental quality of the Lakeshore that will carry it forward into the next decade.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2812

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. INDIANA DUNES NATIONAL LAKESHORE.

(a) BOUNDARY CHANGES.—The first section of the Act entitled "An Act to provide for the establishment of the Indiana Dunes National Lakeshore, and for other purposes", approved November 5, 1966 (16 U.S.C. 460u), is amended by striking out "December 1980, and bearing the number 626-91014" and inserting in lieu thereof September 1986, and numbered 626-80033-A".

(b) DEFINITION OF IMPROVED PROPERTY.—Section 4 of such Act is amended by striking out the first sentence and substituting: "As used in this Act, the term 'improved property' means a detached, one-family dwelling which meets each of the following criteria.

"(1) The construction of the dwelling began before the date (shown in the table contained in this section) corresponding to the appropriate map.

"(2) The property is located within the boundaries delineated on the map described in such table which corresponds to such date.

"(3) The property is not located within the boundaries of any other map referred to in such table which bears an earlier date.

The term 'appropriate map' means a map identified as 'Boundary Map-Indiana Dunes National Lakeshore' (or 'A Proposed Indiana Dunes National Lakeshore' in the case of a dwelling the construction of which was begun before January 4, 1985) which is dated and numbered as provided in the following table:

Property Within Boundaries of Map	Construction Began Before
Dated January 1986, #626-80063	February 1, 1986
Dated December 1980, #626-91014	January 1, 1981
Dated September 1976, #626-91007	February 1, 1973
Dated September 1966, #LNPNE-1008-ID	January 4, 1965

The term 'improved property' also includes the land on which the dwelling is situated which meets both of the following criteria:

"(A) The land is in the same ownership as the dwelling.

"(B) The Secretary has designated the land as reasonably necessary for the enjoyment of the dwelling for the sole purpose of noncommercial residential use.

Such term also includes any structures accessory to the dwelling which are situated on the lands so designated. The maps referred to in this section shall be on file and available for public inspection in the Office of the Director of the National Park Service, Department of the Interior. The Secretary shall designate the land referred to in subparagraph (B).".

(c) RETAINED RIGHTS.—Section 5(a) of such Act (16 U.S.C. 460u-5a) is amended as follows:

(1) Strike out "the first section" and inserting in lieu thereof "section 4, dated December 1980, and numbered 626-91004."

(2) Strike out ": Provided, That" and substitute a period followed by "In the case of improved property within the boundaries of the map dated December 1980 and numbered 626-91014".

(3) After "(a)" strike "Except for" and insert "(1) Except for owners described in paragraph (2) and".

(4) Strike "(1)" in each place it appears and substitute "(A)" and strike "(2)" and substitute "(B)".

(5) Add the following at the end thereof: "(2)(A) In the case of property included within the boundaries of the lakeshore after 1980, any owner or owners of record of improved property may retain a right of use and occupancy for noncommercial residential purposes for a term ending at either of the following:

"(i) A fixed term not to exceed beyond September 30, 2010, or such lesser fixed term as the owner or owners may elect at the time of acquisition.

"(ii) A term ending at the death of any owner or of a spouse of any owner, whichever occurs last.

The owner shall elect the term to be reserved.

"(B) The retention of rights under subparagraph (A) shall be available only to individuals who are homeowners of record as of July 1, 1986, who have attained the age of majority as of that date and who make a bona fide written offer not later than July 1, 1991 to sell to the Secretary.".

(d) AUTHORIZATION.—Section 9 of such Act (16 U.S.C. 460u-9) is amended as follows:

(1) In the first sentence strike "$11,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$20,000,000".

(2) Add after the last paragraph "In addition to any other sums authorized for the acquisition of lands and interests in lands pursuant to the provisions of this Act there are authorized to be appropriated an additional $4,350,000 to be used for such purposes. The Secretary shall conduct a feasibility study of establishing U.S. Highway 12 as the 'Indiana Dunes Parkway' under the jurisdiction of the National Park Service. The Secretary shall submit the results of such study to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs of the United States House of Representatives and the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the United States Senate within 2 years after the enactment of this sentence. Effective October 1, 1986, there is authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary for the purposes of conducting the feasibility study.".

"(e) OWNER CONSENT REQUIRED.—Section 13 of such Act (16 U.S.C. 460u-13) is amended by changing "Sec. 13" to "Sec. 13(a)", by striking out "the first section" and inserting in lieu thereof "section 4, dated December 1980 and numbered 626-91014", and by adding a new subsection (b) as follows:

"(b) The Secretary may acquire that portion of Area IV-B in private ownership on the map referred to in section 1 of this Act only with the consent of the owner; Provided, That the Secretary may acquire an agricultural easement should the owner change the use in existence as of September 19, 1986, through eminent domain."

(f) MAP REFERENCE.—Section 16 of such Act (16 U.S.C. 460u-16) is amended by inserting at the end of the first sentence "on the map referred to in section 4, dated September 1976, and numbered 626-9100".

(g) RIGHTS-OF-WAY.—Section 15 of such Act is amended by adding the following at the end thereof: "The Secretary may acquire only such interest in the rights-of-way designating 'Crossing B' and 'Crossing C' on the map dated September 1986 and numbered 626-80033-A as he determines to be necessary to assure public access to the banks of the Little Calumet River and the banks of Salt Creek within 50 feet on either side of the centerline of said river and creek.".

(h) COOPERATIVE AGREEMENT AND STUDY.—Add the following new section at the end of such Act:

"SEC. 24. LITTLE CALUMET RIVER AND BURNS/PORTAGE WATERWAY.

"(a) COOPERATIVE AGREEMENT.—The Secretary may enter into a cooperative agreement with the Little Calumet River Basin Development Commission, the State of Indiana or any political subdivision thereof for the planning, management, and interpretation of recreational facilities on the tract within the boundaries of Indiana Dunes National Lakeshore identified as tract number 09-177 or on lands under the jurisdiction of State of Indiana or political subdivision thereof along the Little Calumet River and Burns Waterway. The cooperative agreement may include provisions for the planning of public facilities for boating, canoeing, fishing, hiking, bicycling, and other compatible recreational activities. Any recreational developments on lands under the jurisdiction of the National Park Service planned pursuant to this cooperative agreement shall be in a manner consistent with the purposes of this Act, including section 6(b).

"(b) STUDY.—The Secretary shall conduct a study regarding the options available for linking the portions of the lakeshore which are divided by the Little Calumet River and Burns/Portage Waterway so as to coordinate the management and recreational use of the lakeshore. The Secretary shall submit the results of the study to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs of the United States House of Representatives and the Committee on Energy and National Resources of the United States Senate within 2 years after the enactment of this section. Effective October 1, 1986, there is authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary for the purposes of conducting the study.".●

● Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I am today introducing with Senator QUAYLE legislation to modify the legislation pertaining to the Indiana Dunes National Lakeshore. This bill would add 13 parcels totaling an estimated 1,140 acres to the Indiana Dunes National Lakeshore. The bill would also increase the authorized limit on development projects in the lakeshore from the current level of $11 million to $20 million and require the National Park Service to complete a study of establishing all or portions of U.S. 12 within the boundaries of the park as a scenic "Indiana Dunes Parkway."

This bill is an authorization bill. Actual amounts of money to be spent at the lakeshore will have to be coordinated annually to comply with Federal budgetary requirements. By passing this bill in a timely fashion, we can ensure better future planning and further enhance the Indiana Dunes National Lakeshore.

This bill is similar to H.R. 4037, which has passed the House of Representatives. But the Senate bill authorizes the acquisition of three high priority areas in Gary, IN and provides for an easement rather than acquisition of a parcel of land near the Heron Rookery, with acquisition provided for only if the current land is altered. it also provides for a somewhat wider corridor at Salt Creek.

This bill is widely supported by citizen groups, local officials, and affected industries in Indiana. It will further improve one of the Nation's outstanding natural areas. I urge the Senate to consider this bill and to enact it into law prior to adjournment.●

By Mr. WILSON:

S.J. Res. 410. Joint resolution to designate the period commencing February 9, 1987, and ending February 15, 1987, as "National Burn Awareness Week"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NATIONAL BURN AWARENESS WEEK

● Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I rise today to speak of a problem little noticed in America—except by those who are its victims. For them, it is literally life-shattering in its implications. I rise to introduce a Senate Joint Resolution designating the week of February 9, 1987, as "National Burn Awareness Week." And in so doing, I would suggest that this is but the first small step on a journey of many miles, a journey which must be taken by all of us who live in a country with the worst burn problem of any industrialized nation in the world.

Burns exact a tremendous toll of human life, suffering, disability and financial loss. Burn injuries continue to be one of the leading causes of death in the United States. Of the 2 million people who are victims of burn injury each year, 70,000 are hospitalized and another 12,000 suffer death as a result of their burns. An even more tragic statistic of this problem is the fact that children, elderly, and the disabled represent a majority of burn victims, with a death rate of five times that of any other group. Finally, the severe psychological impact of burn rehabilitation for the victim cannot be measured in simple economic terms.

Each year millions of dollars are spent trying to remedy the effects of burns and burn-related incidents. Recent studies conclude, however, that approximately 75 percent of all burns could be prevented by proper education of children and adults. For this reason, the resolution provides for a public awareness program designed to familiarize the public with methods of burn prevention.

I ask my colleagues support in this resolution by cosponsoring the establishment of "National Burn Awareness Week."

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the resolution be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 410

Whereas the burn problem in the United States is the worst of any industrialized nation in the world;

Whereas burn injuries are one of the leading causes of accidental death in the United States;

Whereas every year approximately two million people are victims of burn injury in the United States;

Whereas of these injuries, seventy thousand are hospitalized and account for nine million disability days annually;

Whereas approximately twelve thousand people die from burn injuries;

Whereas deaths resulting from burn injuries increased in 1985;

Whereas the rehabilitative and psychological impact of burns are devastating;

Whereas children, the elderly, and the disabled are most likely to suffer serious burns;

Whereas it is estimated that approximately 75 percent of all burns could be prevented by proper education of children and adults; and

Whereas there is a need for an effective national program that deals with all aspects of burn prevention: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the period commencing February 9, 1987, and ending February 15, 1987, is designated as "National Burn Awareness Week" and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States and all Federal, State, and local government officials to observe such week with appropriate programs and activities.●

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMITTEE ON LABOR AND HUMAN RESOURCES

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Select Committee on Intelligence be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on Thursday, September 11, in closed session to hold a hearing on intelligence matters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

THE EFFECT OF DRUG TESTING ON EPILEPTICS

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, all of us are concerned about drugs and what we can do in a meaningful way.

But we're also interested in meeting the problem without doing damage to the civil liberties of our country.

I sense that those in positions of leadership, by and large, have felt some frustration not knowing what to do; and in order to achieve the appearance of doing something, they have looked for simplistic solutions.

The New York Times recently printed an article by Richard Pollak, describing what mandatory drug testing does for victims of epilepsy.

I do not suggest this is the whole picture.

But it is one small insight into why we ought to move with care in this field.

I might add that one of those who has served with great distinction in the Congress of the United States is Congressman TONY COELHO of California who is a victim of epilepsy and is able to control it with drugs.

I don't want to discourage potential TONY COELHO's in Congress or in the private sector or anywhere else.

My colleagues in the Senate, as well as, Members of the House and others who read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD will find the Richard Pollak article of interest, and I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

[From the New York Times, Sept. 3, 1986]

A BITTER PILL FOR EPILEPTICS

(By Richard Pollak)

I have been taking drugs every day of my adult life: phenobarbital and Dilantin in my 20's, Mysoline in my 30's and 40's and now Depakene. They are anticonvulsants that control seizures for me and hundreds of thousand of others who have epilepsy. They also show up in the urine, if tested for.

I am a writer and editor who no longer needs a job in a large organization. But during the many years when I did, I would have been considerably unnerved if, as a condition of employment, I had been required to give a specimen of my urine to satisfy a company's drug abuse program. Would Newsweek, say, have hired me in 1964 if management had discovered from a mandatory drug test that I had phenobarbital in my system, thus forcing me to reveal that I had epilepsy?

I obviously can't answer that question with any certainty, but it is far from academic. The files of the Epilepsy Foundation of America and its local affiliates around the country are filled with cases of men and women who have been unjustly fired, or not hired, because of their epilepsy. And these cases represent only a small fraction of those who face job discrimination because of the disorder.

Despite educational gains in recent years, epilepsy remains among the most misunderstood afflictions; many who suffer from it justifiably fear society's stigma and shrink from drawing attention to themselves and their families by fighting for their job rights. Between 20 and 30 percent of those physically able to work are unemployed, according to the foundation, and among those who are working "many are in jobs well below their levels of education and ability."

The few who do seek justice usually face a prolonged ordeal. Tracy Hammonds is a railroad worker who was dismissed by Conrail because of his epilepsy. Earlier this year, a Michigan circuit court awarded him $150,000 in back pay and ordered Conrail to reinstate him in his job or pay him an additional $225,000 as compensation. It was a clear victory for Mr. Hammond, but his battle, in court and out, took six years.

Mr. Hammond has been seizure-free for 10 years. I have suffered only three serious seizures in the 38 years since my epilepsy was diagnosed at age 14. Happily, such histories are now typical. Of the estimated 2.4 million people in the United States with some form of epilepsy, the seizures of 85 percent are either fully controlled or almost so.

But now the anticonvulsant medication that makes this impressive record possible and gives so many people peace of mind has suddenly also become a bitter pill of forced revelation. The National Institute on Drug Abuse reports that "in the last 3 years the number of Fortune 500 companies screening employees for drug use has risen from 3 percent to nearly 30 percent." The Department of Justice wants more than half the Federal Government's employees tested. President Reagan shows us all the way by proudly submitting to a urine analysis himself.

Well, he has job security, so it wouldn't really matter that much if the test turned up drugs for epilepsy—or depression, diabetes, hypertension or any of the many other illnesses that millions of Americans keep under control daily by taking medication. But it matters greatly to many of them, if only because the "right to be left alone" is, in the words of Justice Louis D. Brandeis, "the most comprehensive of rights and the right most valued by civilized man."

Ten years ago, I wasn't able to discuss epilepsy beyond my immediate family and a few close friends. To do so, I was convinced, would invite all manner of social and professional rejection. Attitudes toward people with epilepsy have improved in recent years, but many of the irrational fears and prejudices remain. Even as I write these words, I can hear my worried father admonishing me as a teen-ager never, ever, to tell anyone that I had epilepsy. "It's none of their business," he warned, his finger urgently at his lips.

He was dead right about that, whatever his misguided motives at the time. That I ignore his stricture now is my decision, my choice. Thousands of others with epilepsy and other disorders would prefer to keep the fact private, many with good reason. That is their right. The so-called "war on drugs" does not justify indiscriminately invading people's privacy by making them submit to the growing enthusiasm for corporate chemical snooping.●

PROPOSED ARMS SALES

● Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, section 36(b) of the Arms Export Control Act requires that Congress receive formal notification of proposed arms sales under that act in excess of $50 million, or in the case of major defense equipment as defined in the act, those in excess of $14 million. Upon receipt of such notification, the Congress has 30 calendar days during which any sale may be reviewed. The provision stipulates that, in the Senate, the notification of proposed sales be sent to the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee.

In keeping with my intention to see that such information is available to the full Senate, I ask to have printed in the RECORD the notifications I have received. The classified annexes referred to in several of the covering letters are available to Senators in the office of the Foreign Relations Committee, SD-423.

The notification follows:

DEFENSE SECURITY ASSISTANCE AGENCY,
Washington, DC, September 8, 1986.

Hon. RICHARD C. LUGAR,
Chairman, Committee on Foreign Relations, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Pursuant to the reporting requirements of Section 36(b)(1) of the Arms Export Control Act, we are forwarding herewith Transmittal No. 86-53 and under separate cover the classified annex thereto. This transmittal concerns the Department of the Navy's proposed Letter(s) of Offer to Japan for defense articles and services estimated to cost $47 million. Soon after this letter is delivered to your office, we plan to notify the news media of the unclassified portion of this Transmittal.

Sincerely,

GLENN A. RUDD,
Acting Director.

[Transmittal No. 86-53]

NOTICE OF PROPOSED ISSUANCE OF LETTER OF OFFER PURSUANT TO SECTION 36(b)(1) OF THE ARMS EXPORT CONTROL ACT

(i) Prospective Purchaser: Japan.

(ii) Total Estimated Value: Major Defense Equipment,[1] $42 million; Other, 5 million; Total, $47 million.

(iii) Description of Articles or Services Offered: Thirty-eight Harpoon missiles with containers, space parts, technical assistance and support equipment.

(iv) Military Department: Navy (AHA).

(v) Sales Commission, Fee, etc., Paid, Offered, or Agreed to be Paid: None.

(vi) Sensitivity of Technology Contained in the Defense Articles or Defense Services Proposed to be Sold: See annex under separate cover.

(vii) Section 28 Report: Case not included in section 28 report.

(viii) Date Report Delivered to Congress: September 8, 1986.

POLICY JUSTIFICATION

JAPAN—HARPOON MISSILES

The Government of Japan has requested the purchase of 38 Harpoon missiles with containers, spare parts, technical assistance and support equipment. The estimated cost is $47 million.

Japan is one of the major political and economic powers in East Asia and the Western Pacific and key partner of the United States in ensuring the peace and stability of that region. It is vital to the U.S. national interests to assist Japan in developing and maintaining a strong and ready self-defense capability which will contribute to an acceptable military balance in the area. This sale is consistent with these U.S. objectives and with the 1960 Treaty of Mutual Cooperation and Security.

These missiles will be placed on destroyers, submarines and P-3C aircraft in accordance with the United States desire that Japan expand its defense role. Japan has harpoon missiles and will have no difficulty absorbing those additional missiles into its armed forces.

The prime contractor will be McDonnell Douglas Astronautics Company of St. Louis, Missouri.

Implementation of this sale will not require the assignment of any additional U.S. Government or contractor personnel to Japan.

UNITED KINGDOM—PHALANX CLOSE-IN WEAPON SYSTEMS

The Government of the United Kingdom has requested the purchase of two PHALANX Close-in Weapon Systems (CIWS) with associated logistics, engineering and technical support. The estimated cost is $22 million.

This sale will contribute to the foreign policy and national security objectives of the United States by improving the military capabilities of the United Kingdom; furthering NATO rationalization, standardization, and interoperability; and enhancing the defense of the Western Alliance.

This equipment will be installed on surface combatants to enhance close-in anti-air warfare self-defense capabilities. The United Kingdom will have no difficulty absorbing these additional PHALANX systems into its armed forces.

The sale of this equipment and support will not affect the basic military balance in the region.

The prime contractor will be the General Dynamics Corporation, Pomona Division of Pomona, California.

Implementation of this sale will not require the assignment of any additional U.S. Government personnel or contractor representatives to the United Kingdom.

There will be no adverse impact on U.S. defense readiness as a result of this sale.

POLICY JUSTIFICATION

AUSTRALIA—HARPOON MISSILES

The Government of Australia has requested the purchase of 28 Harpoon missiles, six Harpoon missile bodies without warheads, two exercise training missiles, associated containers and repair parts. The estimated cost is $47 million.

As an ally under the ANZUS Treaty, Australia plays a major role in assuring the stability of Southeast Asia and the South Pacific and is strategically located with respect to the Indian Ocean. Therefore, the United States has cooperated in improving Australia's military capability through foreign military sales, logistics agreements, and combined exercises. Australia will have no difficulty absorbing these Harpoon missiles into its armed forces.

The prime contractor will be McDonnell Douglas of St. Louis, Missouri.

Implementation of this sale will not require the assignment of any additonal U.S. Government personnel or contractor representatives to Australia.

There will be no adverse impact on U.S. defense readiness as a result of this sale.●

MORATORIUM ON NUCLEAR TESTING

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, while I was a freshman at the University of Oregon, my first job as a journalist was working for the Eugene Register-Guard. Bill Tugman was the editor then, and my immediate boss was the sports editor, Dick Strite. The Baker family published the newspaper.

While the Tugmans and Strites no longer are affiliated with the paper, the Baker family still publishes it.

During the recess, my wife and I took a few days vacation and, among other places, stopped in Eugene, OR, where the Eugene Register-Guard had an editorial urging the United States to do the sensible thing and join the Soviets in a moratorium on nuclear testing.

That editorial of the Eugene Register-Guard makes eminent good sense, as I believe the large majority of those of us in this body would privately acknowledge.

I recognize that it is somewhat easier for a Democrat to stand in opposition to the administration policy than it is for a Republican, but we're talking about something that is far beyond partisan politics. We're talking about survival.

I ask that the editorial which appeared in the Eugene Register-Guard be inserted in the RECORD at this point, and I urge my colleagues to read it.

The editorial follows:

MATCH GORBACHEV ON TEST BAN

Every president since John F. Kennedy has tried to negotiate a nuclear test ban with the Soviet Union. Every president, that is, except Ronald Reagan. Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev suspended his country's testing program a year ago, and on Monday he extended the moratorium until Jan. 1. Reagan should match the Soviets' move, but he steadfastly refuses to do so.

In public, the Reagan administration advances a novel explanation for its desire to continue nuclear tests. The tests are necessary, the explanation goes, because the nation needs to ensure the reliability of its existing stockpile of weapons. No previous administration has made that argument. And there's no sign that Reagan believes the reliability of Soviet weapons has been reduced by a lack of testing.

There is another reason—less openly discussed but far more plausible—for the Reagan administration's firm commitment to continued nuclear testing. An end to testing would mean an end to the development of new weapons systems, notably the X-ray laser. The laser is powered by nuclear explosions and is a cornerstone of the President's cherished Strategic Defense Initiative.

These two lines of reasoning—that testing is needed to make sure old weapons work and to find out whether new ones do—add up to a strong case for a mutual test ban. If both the Soviet Union and the United States lose faith over time in the reliability of their current weapons, neither could be confident of launching a successful attack. At the same time, neither nation would be able to bolster its war-fighting capability with new, tested weapons. The arms race would thereby be slowed.

In making that case, however, it must be assumed that both sides are interested in slowing down or ending the arms race. That is not the case. During the era of clear American nuclear superiority, the Soviet Union was intent on catching up and refused to negotiate a comprehensive test ban treaty. Now that a condition of rough nuclear parity has been achieved, the Soviets are willing to halt testing but Reagan believes it must go on in order to re-establish the United States' strategic edge.

But the idea that a test ban would call a timeout in the arms race while one side was behind—or insufficiently far ahead—is fatally flawed. It ignores the fact that both the Soviet Union and the United States are capable of equaling each other's advances in weaponry. Any advantage is only temporary. If Reagan proceeds to test and develop new nuclear weapons, Gorbachev will soon be forced to follow suit.

On a deeper level, the notion of either nation being ahead or behind in the arms race is itself a dangerous illusion. Both sides crossed the finish line long ago when they gained the ability to destroy each other with a fraction of their nuclear arsenals.

Under such conditions, Reagan should realize that both nations' security would be served by an agreement to limit or stop nuclear arms testing. A good precedent for such an agreement exists in the 1963 partial test ban, which prohibits nuclear testing in the atmosphere, under water and in outer space. That treaty is the most effective arms-control agreement ever negotiated between the Soviet Union and the United States.

Reagan should also acknowledge that unless he takes the initiative toward a test ban, others may take it for him. The House of Representatives voted Aug. 8 to halt all but the smallest nuclear tests provided that the Soviets do likewise and agree to on-the-spot monitoring. The leaders of Argentina, Greece, India, Mexico, Sweden and Tanzania recently called for a test ban and volunteered to verify compliance.

Such pressure ought to induce Reagan to take some steps of his own. As a minimum, he should propose that the number and size of nuclear tests be limited. Better yet, he should stop all testing for as long as the Soviet moratorium lasts. The Soviets would then be responsible for any resumption of testing. Reagan would thereby assure the world of his peaceful intentions and increase hopes for security in the nuclear age.●

ADVANCE NOTIFICATION

● Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, by agreement, section 36(b) of the Arms Export Control Act provides that Congress receive advance notification of proposed arms sales under that act in excess of $50 million or, in the case of major defense equipment as defined in the act, those in excess of $14 million. Upon such notification, the Congress has 20 calendar days to review and consult with the administration on the proposed sale. Section 36(b) requires that Congress then receive a statutory notification of the proposed arms sales and upon such notification, has 30 calendar days to review the sale. The provision stipulates that, in the Senate, the notification of proposed sales shall be sent to the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee.

In keeping with the committee's intention to see that such information is immediately available to the full Senate, I ask to have printed in the RECORD the notification which has been received. A portion of the notification, which is classified information, has been deleted for publication, but is available to Senators in the office of the Foreign Relations Committee, room SD-423.

The notification follows:

DEFENSE SECURITY ASSISTANCE AGENCY,
Washington, DC, September 8, 1986.
In reply refer to I-14027/86ct.

Dr. M. GRAEME BANNERMAN,
Staff Director, Committee on Foreign Relations, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR DR. BANNERMAN: By letter dated 18 February 1976, the Director, Defense Security Assistance Agency, indicated that you would be advised of possible transmittals to Congress of information as required by Section 36(b)(1) of the Arms Export Control Act. At the instruction of the Department of State, I wish to provide the following advance notification.

The Department of State is considering an offer to an East Asian Country tentatively estimated to cost $50 million or more.

Sincerely,

GLENN A. RUDD,
Acting Director.●

REMARKS OF MAYOR DIXON OF DIXON, IL, IN MOROCCO

● Mr. SIMON, Mr. President, Dixon, IL, is the hometown of President Ronald Reagan.

Recently the mayor of Dixon, James E. Dixon, a descendant of the founder of that city, represented the municipalities of the United States and the city of Dixon, in particular, at a national colloquy on local councils in Morocco.

King Hassan has not only shown a willingness to provide leadership on the question of getting Israel and the Arab countries together, but one of the things that pleasantly surprised me when I was in Morocco some years ago was to see the encouragement that he is giving to political diversity.

There is a freedom of speech and expression in Morocco that is uncommon in African countries.

I believe my colleagues will find the statement of Mayor Dixon of interest.

He represented not only his home community but the cities of this Nation well. I ask that the remarks of Mayor Dixon be printed in the RECORD.

The remarks follow:

REMARKS OF MAYOR JAMES E. DIXON, OPENING SESSION OF THIRD NATIONAL COLLOQUY ON LOCAL COUNCILS OF MOROCCO

YOUR MAJESTY, I bring to you, to your ministers and all of your representatives gathered here in Casablanca today warm expressions of friendship and greetings from the people of America.

I am the mayor of Dixon, Illinois a small community, 100 miles west of Chicago, in the central part of the United States. It is a community of small shops and businesses surrounded by fertile farmland. We have one distinction—it is the home town of our President Ronald Reagan. It is the town where he lived as a boy and grew to manhood.

President Reagan spent his formative years in Dixon and we believe he reflects—as President—the values which we hold so dear: small town qualities of Faith in God, love of the family and quiet confidence and courage.

I believe I am here to symbolize the growing friendship between our people and to strengthen that friendship if I am able.

As a representative of President Reagan's hometown, I offer you my support and friendship.

We have already had leadership and encouragement toward this goal. King Hassan and President Reagan have met and formed a personal bond of mutual respect and friendship. Their ministers and ambassadors have worked to bring our countries together in that same spirit of friendship and respect. It is now time for us to bring our communities together following the example of our good leaders.

You have my support and friendship as you begin a difficult, but honorable task. You have been charged by your King to assume greater responsibility as local public officials and to exercise a more independent voice in decisions on local concerns.

Democracy in a city or village is democracy in its most difficult form, but it is democracy at its best. It is most difficult at the local level because local government is the closest to the people. In a democracy, local government is the people.

As local officials we must deal with the most difficult problems in the world: public health and sanitation, violent crime, housing, neighborhood fights and disputes. We must deal with the people themselves: angry people, confused people, sad people, hungry people.

And, because we are one with the people we must deal with them with love, understanding, patience and courtesy—even when they are yelling at you!

We often become angry or frustrated—or just tired of doing what seems to be the same old routine, such as listening to a man angry about his taxes that increased because you bought a new fire truck. (His house never burned down, so he doesn't see the need for another fire truck.)

We don't think of our daily tasks as noble deeds. But, remember—the service you provide your community means Justice to its citizens.

In government, Justice is providing all citizens with the means to lead a decent human life. This is a great responsibility. Justice requires that we not violate a person's natural rights. We must treat everyone fairly, honestly and with respect.

But Justice also requires that we promote the common good. We must work for the general welfare of the whole community. There is often a conflict between individual rights and the general welfare of the community. The criminal must lose his freedom to protect the community.

Justice, in the administration of local government, is bringing harmony between personal liberty and the needs of the community. Justice is not done with a grand gesture. It is done in little decisions day after day. It is done by bringing honesty and fairness to all of your work.

Truth and respect are our guides. If we speak the truth and treat fellow citizens with respect, we will bring justice to our community.

We have important and honorable work, bringing harmony to a community and justice to our people. Because we do not have perfect wisdom we sometimes are unable to find that harmony. But we must see justice as our goal—even in the little daily tasks. We must always listen to our people—even when they do not listen to us. We must always love our people—even when they are angry with us.

Don't get discouraged. It is good work. It is honest work. It is God's work.

Thank you, your Majesty.●

PROPOSED ARMS SALES

● Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, section 36(b) of the Arms Export Control Act requires that Congress receive formal notification of proposed arms sales under that act in excess of $50 million, or in the case of major defense equipment as defined in the act, those in excess of $14 million. Upon receipt of such notification, the Congress has 30 calendar days during which the sale may be reviewed. The provision stipulates that, in the Senate, the notification of proposed sales be sent to the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee.

POLICY JUSTIFICATION

NETHERLANDS—MULTIPLE LAUNCH ROCKET SYSTEMS

The Government of the Netherlands has requested the purchase of 21 armored vehicle mounted Multiple Launch Rocket Systems (MLRS), 2,700 M77 rocket pods, 31 practice rocket rods, 34 rocket pod trainers, which comprise the Multiple Launch Rocket System (MLRS), concurrent spare parts and support equipment. The estimated cost is $192 million.

This sale will contribute to the foreign policy and national security objectives of the United States by improving the military capabilities of the Netherlands; furthering NATO rationalization, standardization, and interoperability; and enhancing the defense of the Western Alliance.

The Netherlands will use these Multiple Launch Rocket Systems to continue an ongoing effort to upgrade its battlefield artillery capabilities. The Netherlands will have no difficulty absorbing these systems into its armed forces.

The sale of these systems will not affect the basic military balance in the region.

The prime contractor will be the LTV Aerospace and Defense Company of Dallas, Texas.

Implementation of this sale will not require the assignment of additional U.S. Government personnel and contractor representatives to the Netherlands.

There will be no adverse impact on U.S. defense readiness as a result of this sale.

POLICY JUSTIFICATION

UNITED ARAB EMIRATES—AN/TRC-170 DIGITAL TROPOSCATTER RADIO SYSTEMS

The Government of the United Arab Emirates (UAE) has requested the purchase of eight AN/TRC-170 Digital Troposcatter Radio Systems, spare parts, tools and test equipment, mobilizing equipment, training, and support. The estimated cost is $40 million.

This sale will contribute to the foreign policy and national security of the United States by helping to improve the security of a friendly country which has been and continues to be an important force for political stability and economic progress in the Middle East.

The United Arab Emirates needs these radio systems to provide a national defense communications system. The AN/TRC-170 system can provide a dedicated interregional communications link and will integrate directly into the regional communications architecture already selected by the UAE Defense Headquarters. The UAE will have no difficulty absorbing these radio systems into its armed forces.

The sale of this equipment and support will not affect the basic military balance in the region.

The prime contractor will be the Raytheon Corporation of Boston, Massachusetts.

Implementation of this sale will not require the assignment of any additional U.S. Government personnel; however, two contractor representatives will be required in the UAE for three years.

There will be no adverse impact on U.S. defense readiness as a result of this sale.●

HUMAN RIGHTS IN CHILE

● Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, soon after his 1970 election, Chilean President Salvador Allende told a national audience: "Our coat of arms says 'By reason or by force,' but it puts reason first." On September 11, 1973—exactly 13 years ago today—that order was reversed: The military took control of Chile and promptly dissolved Congress, suspended the Constitution, declared political parties illegal, and imposed a "state of emergency" which has been in effect for all but 7 months since that bloody day.

President Allende and his administration were not without serious flaws, nor is it our responsibility to judge the history of Chilean politics. But I am concerned, Mr. President, about the status of human rights in Chile. The horrific death of 19-year-old American Rodrigo Andres Rojas de Negri brought the tragedy of Chile to our headlines, Mr. President, but Rodrigo was just one of many men, women, and children who have been subjected to brutal treatment at the hands of Chilean security forces.

All citizens of Chile, Mr. President, deserve and demand our compassion. All too often those of us concerned about human rights abuses condemn only those abuses perpetrated by governments on the right. We must not do that in Chile. Mr. President, the six bodyguards killed in the recent assassination attempt against General Pinochet are also victims of human rights abuses.

That the victims of violence and human rights abuses in Chile are not all victims of their Government, however, does not diminish the fact that the Pinochet government has institutionalized its disregard for human rights. That institutionalized disregard ought to be of great concern for all of us, on both sides of the aisle, who believe in the existence of basic human rights.

As the third state of siege in the 13 years of the Pinochet government now takes hold in Chile, I would like to direct the attention of my colleagues to an Amnesty International report on the emergency laws now in place in Chile. This report, part of Amnesty International's September 1986, briefing on Chile, was issued before the current state of siege was declared. I ask that this brief but unsettling report appear in the RECORD.

The report follows:

EMERGENCY LAWS CURB HUMAN RIGHTS

A number of "states of exception" (emergency laws) are provided for in Chilean law, which, as in most countries' legislation, are intended for application in exceptional and temporary situations, usually involving a clear danger to national security. However, one or more sets of emergency laws have been in force ever since 1973. A "state of emergency" has been in force for all but seven months of the 13 years since the military coup. A "state of siege" was simultaneously in force from 1973 to 1978, and again from November 1984 to June 1985. A new constitution was introduced in March 1981, containing new "temporary" powers, including the declaration of a "state of danger of disturbance of internal peace" which remains in force.

All these emergency laws restrict individual freedoms. Some provisions give the military authorities wide powers which cannot be challenged in the courts. Under the states of exception the military authorities can:

Detain people without charge in their own homes, or in places which are not public buildings officially designated for the detention of common criminals. People can be thus detained indefinitely under the state of siege, and for five days, with a possible extension of up to 20 days, under the "state of danger of disturbance of internal peace."

Transfer people from one part of the country to another (state of siege), or expel them from the country (state of siege), or expel them from the country (state of siege and "state of danger of disturbance of internal peace") and send people into remote parts of the country for up to three months ("state of danger of disturbance of internal peace").

Prohibit the exit from or entry to the country of named individuals (state of siege and state of emergency) and prohibit entry into the country ("state of danger of disturbance of internal peace").

Suspend or restrict the rights of assembly, information and freedom of expression (under all states of exception). Under these regulations, public gatherings cannot be held without prior authorization from the military government.

All three states of exception were in force between 6 November 1984 and 16 June 1985. During this period, many thousands of people were arrested and the opposition press was closed down. Although the state of siege was lifted in 1985, new legislation extended the powers of the administrative authorities under the remaining emergency laws. For example, powers previously invested in the President were delegated to a wide range of military authorities.

Under the 1981 Constitution, which Amnesty International considers contravenes international human rights standards, the courts cannot challenge the grounds for measures taken by the military authorities in the exercise of their broad powers under emergency laws.●

9-1-1 EMERGENCY NUMBER DAY

● Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, I would like to thank my colleagues for passing Senate Joint Resolution 405 last evening, thereby proclaiming today "9-1-1 Emergency Number Day." I am particularly grateful to my 29 colleagues who cosponsored this resolution.

The House of Representatives is expected to take prompt action on this measure. When it does, the U.S. Congress will join communities in Ohio, Illinois, Virginia, Texas, Delaware, New York, Florida, and Missouri in formally recognizing the importance of the 9-1-1 system by issuing a proclamation. This recognition will increase the effectiveness of the 9-1-1 system since it must be brought to people's attention before an emergency arises.

Approximately 40 percent of communities across the country have adopted the 9-1-1 emergency system of dialing as a means of providing immediate emergency services to local residents. The basic 9-1-1 telephone service enables a person to dial just three numbers in an emergency to reach a public safety answering point, such as a police or fire department.

While the 9-1-1 system has saved many lives and enhanced the quality of life in many communities, there are still many areas of the country which do not have a 9-1-1 system. The need for all citizens to summon help rapidly in an emergency situation is essential to community well-being.

The 9-1-1 system has proven its value on numerous occasions. It is my hope that by drawing people's attention to this system today, more lives will be saved in future. I thank my colleagues for joining me, the National Emergency Number Association, and public safety workers across the Nation in recognizing today as "9-1-1 Emergency Number Day."●

PROGRAM FRAUD CIVIL REMEDIES ACT

● Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, last month the Senate unanimously approved legislation I sponsored, S. 1562, the False Claims Reform Act, to enhance the Government's litigative and investigative tools under current law, as well as to increase the fines and penalties assessed against those who cheat the Government.

While I strongly believe that this legislation goes a long way toward bolstering the Government's arsenal in its fight against fraud, I want to emphasize that its passage does not diminish the need for another important piece of legislation, S. 1134, the Program Fraud Civil Remedies Act, which captures "small-dollar" frauds currently falling through the cracks of our judicial system.

My legislation strengthens the Government's ability to litigate false claims cases in court. But for those small-dollar cases under $100,000, the cost of litigation often exceeds the benefits of recovery, thus making it economically impractical for the Justice Department to go to court.

Consequently, even under my bill, the Government may be left without an adequate remedy for many small-dollar cases.

Senator COHEN's legislation, S. 1134, effectively remedies this problem by creating an alternative administrative proceeding for handling those false claim and false statement cases that the Justice Department has declined, as a practical matter, to pursue. I am a cosponsor of this legislation and believe it will provide the Government with an effective and, most important, a fair remedy to recoup taxpayer funds lost to fraud each year.

I have worked closely with Senator COHEN to ensure that the essential elements of our bills—particularly the standard of knowledge and burden of proof—are consistent. In this regard, a person alleged to be liable under S. 1134 would not be subject to any less proof requirements than under a Civil False Claims Act proceeding in court. I would also add that the due process protections provided in S. 1134 are more than sufficient and go well beyond those afforded under the Administrative Procedure Act.

Mr. President, S. 1134, like my legislation, is strongly supported by the Department of Justice, the Packard and Grace Commissions, the inspectors general, and many others.

I would, therefore, urge my colleagues to lend their support to S. 1134, the Program Fraud Civil Remedies Act, so that the Government will have effective remedies for both large and small frauds.●

NICARAGUA

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I spent part of the recess in the Pacific Northwest, and I came across an editorial in the Oregonian of Portland, OR, on the idiocy of our present policy in Nicaragua.

It asks the basic questions about our confusing policy.

I ask that the editorial be printed in the RECORD and I urge my colleagues to read the editorial.

The editorial follows:

[From the Oregonian, Aug. 24, 1986]

ALL CLEAR ON CONTRAS

President Reagan, in one of those rare lapses into clarity on his Central American policy, said Tuesday that the Contras might have to take over Nicaragua. Since the administration, although seeking to provide $100 million more in aid to the Contras, has never before admitted having the objective of overthrowing the Sandinista government, this statement was considered a new departure.

Wednesday, however, the State Department quickly insisted that American policy toward the Contras was unchanged, that it was just what it was before the president's remark to a Mexican newspaper.

This leaves only one question open: What was it then?

Originally, the United States was aiding the Contras to keep the Sandinistas from supplying the rebels in El Salvador. Then, the president explained that the aim was to make the Sandinistas say "uncle."

For the first time, the president said Tuesday that if the Sandinistas did not make the concessions involved in saying "uncle," the "only alternative" would be for the Contras "to have their way and take over."

There are actually two other alternatives, which the course of the war so far makes more likely: the failure of the rebellion because the Contras can draw little Nicaraguan support, or the introduction of American troops, which much of Latin America already expects.

But until then, American policy is unchanged: The United States is supporting a rebellion against a government it recognizes, but not seeking that government's overthrow.

Everything clear?●

REV. CLYDE ADAMS, D.D.

● Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I ask my colleagues in the Senate to join me in honoring Rev. Clyde Adams, D.D., for his 50 years of ministry and his 36 years of service and dedication to members and friends of the Union Baptist Church located in Fort Wayne, IN.

As the pastor of Union Baptist Church, Clyde Adams continues to display superior leadership ability and a deep devotion to correcting the wrongs of our society.

Born in Cherry Valley, AR, Dr. Adams has always been in the forefront of the fight for equal rights for minorities in the economic, legal, education and civic areas. He received an honorary doctorate degree from the Michigan Baptist Theological Seminary and a doctorate of sacred literature from the Ministers Institute and College of West Point, MS. He served 5 years as a member of the Board of Directors of the National Baptist Convention, Inc. Dr. Clyde Adams has shown an unerring ability to motivate others by capturing their enthusiasm and harnessing it for the betterment of this Nation. His leadership and commitment to his fellow man have been a testament to his strength of character as well as a beacon of hope to the city of Fort Wayne and to the State of Indiana. Union Baptist Church was blessed with the arrival of this religious giant; Clyde Adams has truly made a difference in the strive for humans rights.

I ask my fellow colleagues to join me in commending Reverend Adams.●

ABORTION AND INFORMED CONSENT: ALASKA

● Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, this letter from Holly in Alaska, the second in my presentation of letters I have received from women advocating informed consent for abortions, contains testimony representative of the experience of many women who had their abortions years ago. The letter points out that abortion counseling has often been inadequate. In this case, as in others, facile euphemisms like "abortion is safer than childbirth" replace careful explanations of the procedure and its aftereffects.

Women deserve the respect that demands they be informed completely about all surgical procedures, especially one that bears with it the possibility of such severe physical complications as infection, hemorrhage and even sterility. Women must be told before deciding to abort their unborn children that there are various psychological complications which may follow abortion. Alcohol and drug abuse, along with eating disorders, are common aftereffects of abortion. When we examine the emotional and psychological damage done by abortion, we discover what is commonly known as postabortion trauma. It is my belief that informed consent before abortions is a critical preventive measure which should be utilized to reduce the number of incidences of postabortion trauma, and improve the health of American women.

Informed consent for abortion is an urgent need which can no longer be ignored. Today's lack of information will cause tomorrow's cases of postabortion trauma. Thus, we must wonder whether those involved in this conspiracy of silence truly have something to hide. Perhaps the profitability of performing abortions has blinded some to the long-range complications of abortion. I urge my colleagues to read this letter and reflect upon its content. Indeed, there are many women in every State who have suffered, presently suffer, or will suffer as a result of the lack of informed consent before the performance of abortions.

DEAR SENATOR HUMPHREY: I want to thank you for introducing the bill regarding informed consent before abortion.

I had an abortion 14 years ago, at the age of 16. I was pressured to have an abortion by those closest to me at the time. I knew nothing about fetal development or how abortions are performed. I asked the family planning counselor about the possibility of emotional and physical risks and was told women feel relieved after abortion and it was much safer than childbirth. That was all I was told even though I told the doctor I wasn't sure I wanted to have an abortion.

Well, my abortion precipitated years of drug and alcohol abuse, an eating disorder and eventually a serious clinical depression. That supposedly safe procedure has had fourteen years of serious repercussions. I believe if I had had basic information about abortion, I would have resisted the pressure to abort and carried my baby to term. My child would not have lost his or her life and I would have been spared the anguish associated with abortion.

Sincerely,

HOLLY TRIMBLE,
Alaska.●

NAUM AND INNA MEIMAN: RESTRICTED FREEDOM

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, today the Senate was honored by the presence of Father Lawrence Martin Jenco. It was a blessing to have Father Jenco here in the Capitol, released from captivity in Lebanon. There can be no greater restraint on a human being than the restriction of his or her freedom.

Naum and Inna Meiman are two close friends of mine who live in Moscow. Their freedom, too, is restricted. As citizens of the Soviet Union, Naum and Inna lack the precious rights that most of us take for granted. Inna is 54 and dying of cancer. Her only chance for survival is experimental treatment only available to her in the West. Naum is 74 and a professor in physics. He has not been allowed to work in his field for more than 40 years. They desperately wish to be allowed to emigrate to Israel.

I strongly urge the Soviets to allow Naum and Inna Meiman to emigrate to Israel.●

EGYPTIAN-ISRAELI RELATIONS

● Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I would like to take a moment to draw the attention of my colleagues to an important event taking place today: A long-awaited summit meeting between President Hosni Mubarak of Egypt and Prime Minister Peres of Israel, the first meeting between the heads of state of these two countries in 5 years.

Many in Congress have complained over the last several years that relations between Egypt and Israel have not been as cordial as they should be. The negotiations leading to this summit serves to remind us all just how difficult it is to go from a state of war to a state of peace after a generation of hostility and mutual suspicions. But the important thing is that despite the many upheavals in the region since the signing of Camp David, the former enemies have remained at peace.

Better relations between the two countries had been sidetracked by a number of regional events and bilateral concerns. Diligent efforts on both sides over the past 2 years removed the various irritants of concern to both, save one final issue, a 250-acre scrap of desert beach known as Taba, the only part of the Sinai which Israel retained when it returned the rest to Egypt in 1982.

This week, however, perseverance has finally paid off and a Peres-Mubarak meeting is taking place. The summit follows agreement on a broad range of issues including improved trade and tourism, brought about by the determined efforts of both Egypt and Israel, with American assistance, particularly that of Assistant Secretary of State, Richard Murphy.

I think it's important that the U.S. Congress recognize the significance of this agreement and what it demonstrates about the difficulty of achieving peace in the region. We want to tell both sides that we're watching their efforts intently and offer them every possible encouragement.

Both sides have worked diligently, especially in the past year, to resolve the Taba issue and other aspects of their relations, including trade and tourism. President Mubarak and Prime Minister Peres needed to clear up these issues so they could sit down and talk face to face about some of the other pressing issues of conflict in the region.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to tell Mr. Mubarak and Mr. Peres that the U.S. Congress congratulates them on their meeting today and stands behind them in their efforts to forge ahead as the leaders of peace in the region. Working together, Egypt and Israel stand a much better chance of helping to establish a comprehensive peace in the Middle East, for the benefit of all concerned.●

QUESTIONS ON SOUTH AFRICA LEGISLATION

● Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, in response to some questions raised about H.R. 4868, the legislation on South Africa which the Senate passed on August 15, 1985, I would like to make some clarifying remarks.

First, regarding the exception to the ban on new investment in the bill "to enable a controlled South African entity to operate in an economically sound manner, without expanding its operations," the Senate Foreign Relations report on S. 2701 explained that this provision "allows an extension of funds or assets in the event of a flood, fire or other occurrence which would force the operation to shut down or operate at an uneconomical level." Thus, those responsible for administering this provision would be expected to carefully review any such investments in accordance with the above criteria.

Second, the bill exempts from its ban on new loans "normal short-term trade financing, as by letters of credit or similar trade credits" and "sales on open account in cases where such sales are normal business practice." In determining which loans from U.S. banking institutions fall into these categories, we would expect that the administration would be guided by findings from the Federal Reserve Board's country reports which are based on surveys of loans including those falling into the categories contained in this exemption.

Third, the Senate bill prevents, as Senator WEICKER stated on the floor in amending section 306, "South Africans from leasing aircraft or having their aircraft leased for purposes of direct flight to the United States."

Fourth, the bill's provisions for aid to victims of apartheid are intended to support AID's continuing efforts to provide the victims of apartheid with both effective services and opportunities to promote the development of institutions in which the disadvantaged play important leadership roles and to promote an end to racial polarization by encouraging interracial cooperation on these projects.●

NAUM AND INNA MEIMAN: FREEDOM FOR LIFE

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, the movie "Moscow on the Hudson" aired last night on one of the networks. In a humorous and poignant manner, it demonstrated the differences between the Soviet Union and the United States. The story is based on the life of a Soviet musician who defected to New York City. What touched me was how desperately he wanted to leave the Soviet Union.

Professor and Inna Meiman, two very good friends of mine, have been dreaming of this same opportunity for a long time. Terminally ill with cancer, Inna's only chance for survival is treatment which is available only in the West. The character from "Moscow on the Hudson" fought for his freedom, Inna Meiman is fighting for her life. To the Meimans, freedom and life are one in the same. We must not take our freedom for granted and must fight to protect the right to medical treatment and freedom.

I implore the officials of the Soviet Union to allow the Meimans to emigrate to Israel.●

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

□ 1810

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, in the spirit of accommodating the Democratic leader I have a statement to make with regard to Justice Rehnquist. It will not be over 10 minutes or so in length. I will make that statement after we conclude.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to proceed as if in legislative session for a period of 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

NATIVE AMERICAN PROGRAMS AMENDMENTS

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate turn to consideration of H.R. 3247.

□ 1820

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 3247) to amend the Native American Programs Act of 1974 to authorize appropriations for fiscal years 1987 through 1990.

The bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I rise today in support of H.R. 3247, a bill to reauthorize and amend the Native American Programs Act of 1974 for fiscal years 1987 through 1990.

Section 806 of H.R. 3247 requires that certain information be provided by the Commissioner to the committees of jurisdiction with respect to grant rankings. In addition, section 806 requires that the committees be provided a statement of the reasons for deviation from the peer review rankings in awarding grants, in those instances where the Commissioner of the Administration for Native Americans [ANA] exercises this authority under the direction of the Secretary of Health and Human Services to deviate from the peer review ranking.

It is the committee's intent that the Commissioner simply outline his reasons for funding an applicant which significantly deviates from the rank order of applicants developed by panels of peer reviewers. This information should be provided following the completion of each funding cycle. The committee recognizes that the panel rankings are not the only factor the Commissioner uses in deciding which application to fund.

This provision is not meant to restrict the Commissioner's authority. It does not require new application procedures. It simply requires the ANA to provide to the Congress the information which will show that they successfully complied with their own procedures.

Let me add, section 814 (C) and (D) of the bill requires that certain rules or general statements of policy be published in the Federal Register. It is the committee's intent that only rules reflecting major changes in program policy be treated in this manner. For example, if the ANA decided to alter or amend its Social and Economic Development Strategy [SEDS] or change its eligibility requirements, the bill would require public notice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill (H.R. 3247) was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SIMPSON. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill passed.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE EXCHANGE PROGRAM VOLUNTARY SERVICES ACT

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate turn to the consideration of H.R. 3002, Calendar No. 860.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 3002) to provide for the establishment of voluntary services from participants in an executive exchange program of the Government.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Governmental Affairs, with amendments, as follows:

H.R. 3002

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Executive Exchange Program Voluntary Services Act of 1986".

SEC. 2 DEFINITIONS.

For the purposes of this Act—

(1) the term "Government" means the Government of the United States;

(2) the term "participant in an executive exchange program" means an executive, manager, or other individual from the private sector participating in an executive exchange program administered by the President' Commission on Executive Exchange (described in Executive Order 12493, dated December 5, 1984) or by a successor entity in function;

(3) the term "agency" means an Executive agency (as defined by section 105 of title 5 United States Code), the United States Postal Service, and the Postal Rate Commission; and

(4) the term "employee of the Government" means an individual employed in or under an agency.

SEC. 3. EXPERIMENTAL PROGRAM

(a) The President may establish an experimental program, to be conducted during fiscal years 1987 through 1989, under which voluntary services may be accepted by the Government, without regard to section 1342 of title 31, United States Code.

(b) Under the program, the voluntary services of an individual may be accepted if—

(1) such individual is a participant in an executive exchange program;

(2) the acceptance of such services will not result in the displacement of any employee of the Government; and

(3) the voluntary services will be performed in or under an agency.

(c)(1) An individual performing voluntary services under the experimental program shall, for purposes of any laws, rules, and regulations of the United States (including those relating to conflicts of interest, financial disclosure, and standards of conduct) be considered an individual employed in or under the agency to which assigned, except that such individual shall not be covered by chapter 51, 53, 63, 83, 87, or 89 of title 5, United States Code, or any comparable provision relating to pay, leave, retirement, life insurance, or health benefits for employees of the Government.

(d) Not more than ten individuals may commence participation in the experimental program during any fiscal year.

(e)(1) Nothing in this Act shall prevent—

(A) the continuation to pay and other benefits from the private-sector employer, or

(B) continued participation in a bona fide pension, retirement, group life, health or accident insurance, profit-sharing, stock bonus, or other employee welfare or benefit plan maintained by the private-sector employer, for an individual performing voluntary services in the experimental program.

(2) For the purpose of this section, the term "private-sector employer", as used with respect to an individual, means the corporation or other person by which such individual was employed immediately before beginning to perform voluntary services in the experimental program.

SEC. 4. REPORTS.

Not later than March 31, 1989, [the President's Commission on Executive Exchange (or a successor entity in function)] the General Accounting Office shall transmit to the Congress a report on the experimental program under this Act. The report shall include a description of the administration of the program, the findings of the [Commission (or successor entity)] General Accounting Office relating to the advantages and disadvantages of accepting voluntary services from participants in an executive exchange program, and recommendations for legislation (if any) relating to the continuation of the program.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I am pleased that the Senate is considering the Executive Exchange Voluntary Services Act of 1986. I cosponsored an earlier version of this bill and support its passage.

The Executive Exchange Program was created by President Johnson in 1969 to encourage improved understanding between the Government and private industry. Government executives were to be placed in the private sector for a year, and executives from the private sector would work in the Government at the same time. The experience of working in another environment with a different set of challenges and problems is intended to broaden the perspective with which Government and private leaders view each other's worlds.

Under current law, for the year that they spend in the Government, the private executives are Federal employees, paid by the Federal Government and subject to the conflict of interest and ethical codes applicable to all Federal employees. Their pay is based on the compensation the executives would have earned with their companies, but it cannot exceed the ceiling set for pay in the Federal Senior Executive Service.

The pay ceiling in the existing Executive Exchange Program has caused a recruitment problem. Private sector executive salaries frequently exceed the maximum that the Federal Government can pay. Many qualified private sector executives who would be interested in the program are deterred from participating by the prospect of having to accept a cut in pay for the year that they would be working for the Federal Government.

The bill before us today proposes a solution to the recruitment problem. This legislation sets up a 3-year experiment in which a maximum of 10 private sector executives would be part of the Executive Exchange Program, but paid their usual salaries by their sponsoring company. These executives would be serving as volunteers in the Federal agency to which they are assigned. However, in all respects, except pay and benefits, the executives in this experimental program would be considered Federal employees.

Mr. President, the Executive Exchange Program has been a success. Almost 500 private sector executives have participated since the program began. Significant cross fertilization of ideas, management techniques, and policy analysis has occurred. The program should be revised to permit its continued success.

Because it offers an experimental approach to the exchange program, the bill requires a report to Congress at the end of the experiment. With appropriate safeguards, the Executive Exchange Program should be able to go forward with this experiment in volunteer services and maintain the valuable interchange of private and public sector management expertise.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate and open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass?

So the bill (H.R. 3002), as amended, was passed.

Mr. SIMPSON. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill passed.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AVIATION COMMISSION SAFETY ACT

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now turn its attention to Calendar Order No. 880, S. 2417.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2417) to establish the Aviation Safety Commission, and for the purposes.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation, with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert the following:

That this Act may be cited as the "Aviation Safety Commission Act of 1986".

COMMISSION ESTABLISHED

SEC. 2. (a) There is established a Commission to be known as the Aviation Safety Commission (hereinafter referred to as the "Commission").

(b)(1) The Commission shall be composed of seven members appointed by the President no later than 30 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

(2) Appointees to the Commission shall possess extensive experience and expertise at the highest executive levels of public or corporate management.

(3) No member of the Commission shall, at the time of such member's appointment, be an employee or officer of the Federal Government, nor shall any member have been an employee of the Federal Government for at least 3 years before such member's appointment to the Commission.

(4)(A) At least four members of the Commission, including the Chairman, shall not have performed any service or have been involved in any way in any business concern in air commerce or any aviation-related industry for at least 3 years before their appointment to the Commission.

(B) For the purposes of this paragraph, the term "air commerce" has the meaning given to such term in section 101(4) of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 (49 App. U.S.C. 1301(4)).

(c) The President shall appoint one of the members to serve as Chairman of the Commission.

(d) Any vacancy in the Commission shall not affect its powers, but shall be filled in the same manner in which the original appointment was made.

(e) Four members of the Commission shall constitute a quorum, but a lesser number may hold hearings.

(f)(1) The Commission shall hold its first meeting within 30 days after the appointment of all members.

(2) The Commission shall meet at the call of the Chairman or a majority of the members.

(g) Members of the Commission shall serve until the expiration of the Commission pursuant to section 3(f) of this Act.

FUNCTIONS OF THE COMMISSION

SEC. 3. (a) The Commission shall make a complete study of the organization and functions of the Federal Aviation Administration (hereinafter referred to as the "Administration") and the means by which the Administration may most efficiently and effectively perform the responsibilities assigned to it by law and increase aviation safety.

(b) In conducting such study, the Commission shall consider whether—

(1) the Administration has been provided adequate resources and has adequately utilized the resources provided to ensure aviation safety;

(2) the dual responsibilities of the Administration of promoting commercial aviation and ensuring aviation safety are in conflict, and whether such conflict impedes the effective maintenance and enhancement of aviation safety;

(3) the Administration should be reorganized as an independent Federal agency with the promotion, maintenance, and enhancement of aviation safety as the sole responsibility of such agency;

(4) the promotion of commercial aviation should be assigned as a responsibility to another agency of the Federal Government;

(5) airline deregulation has an adverse effect on the margin of aviation safety, including a review of whether the practice of airline self-compliance with respect to aviation maintenance standards is an outmoded approach in an environment designed to maximize cost-savings; and

(6) it is feasible to make mandatory certain or all of the safety recommendations issued by the National Transportation Safety Board.

(c) The study conducted under this section shall include findings and recommendations, including any recommendations for legislative action, regarding—

(1) the most appropriate and effective organizational approach to ensuring aviation safety; and

(2) measures to improve the enforcement of Federal regulations relating to aviation safety.

(d) In conducting such study, the Commission shall consult with the National Transportation Safety Board and a broad spectrum of representatives of the aviation industry, including—

(1) air traffic controllers;

(2) representatives of the commercial aviation industry;

(3) representatives of airways facilities technicians;

(4) independent experts on aviation safety;

(5) former Administrators of the Administration; and

(6) representatives of civil aviation.

(e) Within 9 months after the date of enactment of this Act, the Commission shall submit a report on the study conducted pursuant to this section to the President and to each House of the Congress. Such report shall contain a detailed statement of the findings and conclusions of the Commission, together with recommendations for legislative and administrative actions.

(f) The Commission shall cease to exist 9 months after the date of enactment of this Act.

POWERS AND ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

SEC. 4. (a) The Commission may, for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this Act, hold such hearings, sit and act at such times and places, take such testimony, receive such evidence, and publish such reports as the Commission considers appropriate.

(b)(1) Subject to such rules as may be adopted by the Commission, the Chairman, without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service, and without regard to the provisions of chapter 51 of such title relating to classification or chapter 53 of such title relating to General Schedule pay rates, may—

(A) appoint and fix the compensation of such staff personnel as the Chairman considers necessary, including an executive director who may be compensated at a rate not in excess of that provided for level V of the Executive Schedule in title 5, United States Code; and

(B) procure the services of experts and consultants in accordance with section 3109 of title 5, United States Code.

(2) Any person appointed as executive director pursuant to paragraph (1)(A) of this subsection shall meet the same qualifications required of members pursuant to section (2)(b) if this Act.

(c) Each department, agency, and instrumentality of the executive branch of the Federal Government, including independent agencies, shall furnish to the Commission, upon request made by the Chairman, such information as the Commission considers necessary to carry out its functions.

(d) Upon request of the Commission, the head of any Federal agency may detail, on a reimburseable basis, any of the personnel of such agency to the Commission to assist the Commission in carrying out its duties.

(e) The Administrator of General Services shall provide to the Commission on a reimbursable basis such administrative support services as the Commission may request.

(f) The Commission may use the United States mail in the same manner and under the same conditions as other departments and agencies of the United States.

(g) Any member or agent of the Commission may, if so authorized by the Commission, take any action which the Commission may take under this section.

COMPENSATION OF MEMBERS

SEC. 5. Members of the Commission shall serve without compensation, but shall be reimbursed for travel or transportation expenses under subchapter I of chapter 57 of title 5, United States Code, while away from their homes or regular places of business and engaged in the actual performance of duties of the Commission.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 6. There are authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 1987 $2,000,000 to carry out the provisions of this Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute is agreed to.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, on Sunday, August 31, 1986, Aeromexico Flight 498, carrying 58 passengers and 6 crew members collided in the skies of Los Angeles with a small single-engine Piper Cherokee. Both aircraft plunged to the ground killing everyone on board. To compound the tragedy, the Aeromexico DC-9 crashed into a Los Angeles suburb, damaging or destroying 11 homes, and, according to preliminary estimates, killing 22 residents.

This latest tragic aviation incident is further evidence of the declining margin of aviation safety the Nation has experienced over the past several years. Since 1975, reports of aviation safety incidents—e.g., near midair collisions, surface operational errors, and crashes—have been occurring more frequently.

For example, in 1975 an aviation safety incident was reported for every 12,805 aircraft departures. By 1980, an incident was reported for every 7,377 departures, a 42 percent decline in the number of departures between incidents during the period 1975–80.

Despite a temporary improvement in the margin of safety during the period 1980–82, perhaps reflecting the FAA's restrictions on air traffic at the busiest airports in response to the air traffic controllers' strike in 1981, the margin of safety continues to decline.

Between 1982 and 1985, the number of departures per incident decreased from 12,031 in 1982, to 5,323 in 1985, a 56-percent decline over the period.

Simply stated, the problem is that the skies have become more crowded over the past few years. For example, the number of commercial passenger airlines has increased from 29 in 1978, to 307 in 1986. The number of commercial passenger aircraft operated has increased from 2,145 in 1978 to 3,824 in 1984. And, in light of the Aero-Mexico incident, one must not neglect to mention that the number of general aviation aircraft in operation has increased from 177,964 in 1978, to 220,940 in 1984.

The Federal Aviation Administration has been overwhelmed by the increased number of commercial flights, aircraft, and airlines. In the face of the dramatic growth in the commercial airline industry, the FAA has not yet recovered from the 1981 air traffic controllers strike. Indeed, there are 4,344 fewer experienced air traffic controllers employed by the FAA in 1986 than there were in 1981 before the strike. In addition, there are serious shortcomings in the FAA's system to ensure compliance with Federal safety regulations relating to aircraft maintenance and operations. For example, in fiscal year 1986 there are 30 percent fewer FAA inspectors to ensure such compliance than there were in 1978.

The problem is not just a question of money. Congress has been more than willing to provide the FAA with the resources necessary to ensure aviation safety. Indeed, Congress has consistently appropriated more funds than requested by the FAA for its operating budget. In each of fiscal years 1985 and 1986, the FAA requested $2.7 billion for FAA operations, and, each year, the Congress appropriated $2.8 billion.

Central to the difficulties facing the FAA is a policy conflict between the Agency's statutory duties to promote commercial aviation and ensure its safety. This conflict may adversely affect the margin of aviation safety. Two years after the enactment of the Airline Deregulation Act of 1978, a congressional report expressed concern that this conflict could adversely affect aviation safety. The report concluded that FAA's conflicting policy goals were providing inadequate policy direction, and that this was "hurting Government efforts and could eventually lead to a situation that would endanger public safety."

Six years after that report, there is still reason for concern. Indeed, there are indications that the FAA provides assistance to the very carriers it shuts down for safety-related violations. For example, the FAA played a major role in helping Provincetown-Boston Airlines get back into business after the carrier's operating license was lifted by the FAA. Subsequent to its reopening, with FAA assistance, a Provincetown-Boston flight crashed near Jacksonville, FL, on December 6, 1984, killing 13 persons.

Mr. President, in view of the recent Aeromexico tragedy, and the concerns regarding the FAA's ability to meet the challenges brought by the dramatic growth of the airline industry, it is time for an independent reexamination of the FAA, the Nation's Aviation Safety Policy, and the impact of Airline Deregulation on Aviation Safety.

S. 2417, the Aviation Safety Commission Act, is a response to those concerns. On August 7, the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation reported the bill after hearings which were held on July 17 by the Subcommittee on Aviation. The bill was supported by the Air Transport Association, the Airline Pilots' Association, the National Air Traffic Controllers Association, the Professional Airways Systems Specialists, and the Aviation Safety Institute.

The bill has 16 cosponsors, including Senators HOLLINGS, EXON, FORD, ROCKEFELLER, PROXMIRE, ANDREWS, CHILES, LONG, MATSUNAGA, KASSEBAUM, GOLDWATER, KASTEN, LAUTENBERG, SIMON, RIEGLE, and GORTON.

S. 2417 directs the President to appoint a seven-member, Blue Ribbon Aviation Safety Commission to make a complete study of the organization and functions of the FAA and the means by which the FAA may most effectively enhance aviation safety.

The duties of the Commission include consideration of whether the dual responsibilities of the FAA—promotion and regulation—are in conflict, thus impeding safety; and whether the FAA should be reorganized as an independent Federal agency with aviation as its sole responsibility.

Nine months from the date of enactment, the Commission is to submit a report to the President and the Congress containing the Commission's findings and recommendations, including any recommendations for legislation.

The work of the Commission will make a valuable contribution to congressional efforts to restore the margin of aviation safety. Until this essential goal is achieved, it is premature to declare that airline deregulation is a success, or that the Nation's skies are as safe as they can be. The enactment of S. 2417 represents a major step forward in the effort to accomplish the goal of ensuring aviation safety.

● Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I am in strong support of Senator BYRD's Aviation Safety Commission Act. I believe that this legislation will result in a significant contribution to our knowledge about the safe operation of our Nation's air transportation network, and I urge my colleagues to support its passage.

With the recent tragic mid-air collision in the skies over southern California earlier this month, the question of how safe are our skies once again faced the national spotlight. As of yet, we do not know the cause of the accident that resulted in the death of the 61 people aboard the Aeromexico DC-9 aircraft, the three people aboard the Piper aircraft, and the unknown number of people on the ground. Was it oversight by the air traffic controller who was too busy with other aircraft in his sector? Was it neglect on the part of the Piper pilot, flying into an area where he should not have been?

More importantly, what can and should be done to make sure that this type of accident never occurs again?

The Aeromexico accident may have had its own unique set of characteristics that provide little to our understanding and enhancement of aviation safety. However, because it comes on the tail of one of the worst years in terms of aviation safety, it must be considered as another sign of the growing threat to the traveling public. Such is one reason why I cosponsored S. 2417, and one reason why we must have an Aviation Safety Commission.

A second reason is airline deregulation. We deregulated the airlines in 1978, but we did not deregulate safety. No one has ever said that was our intention. But I am afraid that at various times in recent years, that is precisely what appears to have happened.

With airline deregulation diminishing the perceived margin of safety in the airline industry, the Congress must have some impartial body to rely on in its future deliberations on the Federal Aviation Administration and aviation safety. We will be asked before the end of the fiscal 1987 to extend the authorization of the FAA. And as a result, we will have to consider proposals being made to restructure the FAA into an independent agency, or possibly even to turn the operations of the air traffic control system over to a nonprofit, nongovernmental entity.

These are just some of the issues we face. And given the traditional inability of this body to take swift, bold actions, we must have the independent analysis that the Byrd Commission would provide.

S. 2417 is very simple. Within 30 days of enactment, the President would be directed to appoint seven individuals to examine a wide range of factors affecting safety. This Commission would be in existence for no more than 9 months, and it would report its findings and recommendations to the President and the Congress.

By acting today, we can begin the process that will provide us with the results of this review by early next summer, time enough to use in a constructive manner as a part of our authorization of the FAA and the Airport and Airway Improvement Program.

I commend the leadership of the Democratic Leader, Senator BYRD, in sponsoring this legislation. He has recognized the need for a high-level Commission and taken the necessary steps to create it. And I urge this body to support its swift passage.●

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendments to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and the third reading of the bill.

The bill (S. 2417) was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BYRD. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill passed.

Mr. SIMPSON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished acting Republican leader for calling up this measure today. I also thank the distinguished majority leader and the staffs on both sides of the aisle for clearing the way for passage of this measure today.

My statement, printed in the RECORD, is in explanation of the measure.

I introduced this measure several weeks ago and I appeared to testify in support of it before the subcommittee of the Committee on Commerce. The subcommittee is chaired by the distinguished Senator from Kansas [Mrs. KASSEBAUM]. Mrs. KASSEBAUM, in addition to being chairman, is a cosponsor of that legislation, along with 16 others, as I previously mentioned. I thank them for their cosponsorship.

I am grateful for the action of the Senate in giving its approval by unanimous consent to this very important piece of legislation.

I ask unanimous consent that if any other Senators wish today to add their names as cosponsors, they may yet be permitted to do that for the record.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished acting Republican leader.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I thank the Democratic leader for his courtesy. I also share with him the belief that aviation safety is of concern to all of us, and I subscribe to his remarks. They are most appropriate.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished acting leader for his statement.

□ 1830

PERMANENT BOUNDARY OF ACADIA NATIONAL FOREST

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives on S. 720.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the House of Representatives:

Resolved, That the House agree to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, and 3, to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 720) entitled "An Act to establish a permanent boundary for the Acadia National Park in the State of Maine, and for other purposes.".

Resolved, That the House disagree to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4 to the aforesaid bill.

Mr. SIMPSON. I move that the Senate recede from its amendment No. 4 to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SIMPSON. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, if I had known it was in Maine, I never would have gone through that. I say to Senator MITCHELL, congratulations on that effort.

EXECUTIVE CALENDAR

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I would like to inquire of the minority leader if he is in a position to confirm the following nominations on the Executive Calendar:

No. 997, Ann Barbara Wrobleski;
No. 998, Brunson McKinley;
No. 1000, Herbert E. Horowitz;
No. 1001, Carol Boyd Hallett;
No. 1002, Princeton Nathan Lyman;
No. 1003, Dennis Kux;
No. 1004, David Lyle Mack;
No. 1005, Sam H. Zakhem;
No. 1006, Clair W. Burgener;
No. 1007, Milton Frank;
No. 1008, Lynn Marvin Hansen;
No. 1009, Richard W. Carlson; and all nominations placed on the Secretary's desk except Edwin G. Corr.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, all of the nominees identified by the distinguished acting Republican leader have been cleared by all Members on this side. We are ready to proceed with the confirmation thereof.

Mr. SIMPSON. I thank the Democratic leader.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. SIMPSON. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the Senate go into executive session in order to consider the nominations just identified and that the nominations be considered en bloc and confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

The nominations considered and confirmed en bloc are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE

Ann Barbara Wrobleski, of Maryland, to be Assistant Secretary of State for International Narcotics Matters.

Brunson McKinley, of New Jersey, a career member of the Senior Foreign Service, class of counselor, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Republic of Haiti.

Herbert E. Horowitz, of Florida, a career member of the Senior Foreign Service, class of minister-counselor, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Republic of The Gambia.

Carol Boyd Hallett, of California, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Commonwealth of the Bahamas.

Princeton Nathan Lyman, of Maryland, a career member of the Senior Foreign Service, class of career minister, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Federal Republic of Nigeria.

Dennis Kux, of New York, a career member of the Senior Foreign Service, class of minister-counselor, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Republic of Ivory Coast.

David Lyle Mack, of Oregon, a career member of the Senior Foreign Service, class of minister-counselor, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the United Arab Emirates.

Sam H. Zakhem, of Colorado, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the State of Bahrain.

BOARD FOR INTERNATIONAL BROADCASTING

Clair W. Burgener, of California, to be a Member of the Board for International Broadcasting for a term expiring April 28, 1988.

AFRICAN DEVELOPMENT FOUNDATION

Milton Frank, of California, to be a Member of the Board of Directors of the African Development Foundation for the remainder of the term expiring February 9, 1990.

U.S. ARMS CONTROL AND DISARMAMENT AGENCY

Lynn Marvin Hansen, of Idaho, to be an Assistant Director of the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency.

U.S. INFORMATION AGENCY

Richard W. Carlson, of California, to be an Associate Director to the U.S. Information Agency.

NOMINATIONS PLACED ON THE SECRETARY'S DESK IN THE FOREIGN SERVICE, SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE

Foreign Service nominations beginning Charles Harold Antholt, and ending Earl J. Young, which nominations were received by the Senate and appeared in the Congressional Record of August 7, 1986.

Mr. SIMPSON. I move to reconsider the vote by which the nominations were confirmed en bloc.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to lay the motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. SIMPSON. Further, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President be immediately notified that the Senate has given its consent to these nominations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. SIMPSON. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate resume legislative session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDERS FOR FRIDAY

RECESS UNTIL 10 A.M.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that once the Senate complete its business today, it stand in recess until 10 a.m. on Friday, September 12, 1986.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECOGNITION OF CERTAIN SENATORS

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, following the recognition of the two leaders under the standing order, the following Senators be recognized for not to exceed 5 minutes each, for special orders: Senators HAWKINS, PROXMIRE, BOSCHWITZ, and LEVIN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, following the special orders just identified, I ask unanimous consent that there be a period for the transaction of routine morning business, not to extend beyond 11 a.m., with Senators permitted to speak therein for not more than 5 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROGRAM

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, at 11 a.m. tomorrow, the Senate will resume consideration of the nomination of William Rehnquist to be Chief Justice of the United States, in executive session.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point a statement of mine welcoming a spiritual hero, Father Jenco, who gave the prayer at the opening of today's session.

I will not impose on the time of the distinguished acting Republican leader further. He has been very generous in going out of executive session to transact the housekeeping matters. We refer to them as housekeeping matters. They are matters which have been cleared for action by unanimous consent, both on the Executive Calendar and on the Legislative Calendar.

I thank the distinguished acting Republican leader, my good friend, ALAN SIMPSON.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, it is a pleasure to accommodate the Democratic leader. He has done that for me on many occasions, and I am most appreciative.

WELCOME TO A SPIRITUAL HERO

Mr. BYRD. I know that I speak for all our colleagues when I say that I was moved by Father Jenco's prayer and by his presence with us this morning.

For millions of Americans and other civilized people around the world, Father Jenco is a symbol of the irrationalities of the age in which we find ourselves.

Some generations ago, a purveyor of popular philosophy, exploiting the outlook of a more shallow era, encouraged his readers to get up every morning, look into their mirrors, and proclaim joyfully, "every day, in every way, you are getting better and better." That sentence, indeed, at one time captured a widespread attitude. Did not the galloping advance of science, the rampant multiplication of technology, and the rising flood of manners and etiquette presage an eon of human perfection and decency?

Subsequent events proved that faith naive. Hopes for the automatic blossoming of a more civilized world have been dashed by war, totalitarianism, fanaticism, and terrorism.

Perhaps no region of the world has suffered more from such evils in recent years than has the Middle East. The barbarism there reached new depths with the kidnaping of Father Jenco. How paradoxical that a man who had been sent there to serve the needs of people and to help heal broken lives should fall victim to the very forces that continue to rend the fabric of life in that region.

We rejoice with Father Jenco, his family, and his friends upon his safe return to our country. We also admire Father Jenco for the outstanding witness of courage and spiritual strength that he demonstrated during his ordeal and has continued to show since coming home. Without a doubt, Father Jenco is one of the true spiritual heroes of our time, and we are honored that he can visit with us here in the Senate.

I know also that I speak for all of our colleagues in saying that we shall not rest content until, like Father Jenco, all of our other fellow Americans being held prisoner by barbarians in Beirut once again stand free on the soil of the United States.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now resume executive session.

There being no objection, the Senate resumed consideration of executive business.

NOMINATION OF WILLIAM H. REHNQUIST TO BE CHIEF JUSTICE OF THE UNITED STATES

The Senate continued with the consideration of the nomination of William H. Rehnquist to be Chief Justice of the United States.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I have a few brief remarks on Justice Rehnquist. I have not spoken on the issue, and the hours have rolled by. I thought I would take a few minutes and try to summarize my own views, and then we will conclude our operations for today.

I am on the Judiciary Committee. I have seen Justice Rehnquist testify. I have come to know him in my time here.

He has an extraordinary record, academically and professionally. I will not go into that. It has already been recited very well. His fellow practicing attorneys in the American Bar Association—those with both the expertise and perspective to best judge a judiciary nominee—have given Justice Rehnquist their highest recommendations. His brethren and sister on the Supreme Court, those who have the most intimate knowledge possible of the nominee's qualifications and responsibilities of office, have strongly endorsed his nomination, including my friend William Brennan, for whom I have the greatest respect and admiration, and others—of my philosophy and not of my philosophy—as based upon a review of his decisions and background.

Those of us in this body who believe we all know better should take a more serious look at the evidence which is available before choosing to embark on a course of harsh and pompous criticism of this fine man. They must look at the record Justice Rehnquist has established these last 15 years as a member of the Supreme Court. To call it anything but distinguished would be a gross distortion of the truth.

So, because of the awesome strength of the nominee, the critics of the nomination had to go back 20 to 30 years to dig up the old bones and get into the old closets to find material that they believe is negative.

Who among those performing the inquisition could pass that test? That is curious to me. That is a base irony of the whole situation.

I have had a rather checkered career—it has been dazzling—and I will not go into that. But there are a lot of things in it that I wish I had not done. Some I did when I was very young and some I did when I was not so young.

But they were goofy and some of them were bizarre, and I will not go into the full line of activity.

Because of the fact that Justice Rehnquist's life was not a part of the public record at that time, the information rebutting the ancient and flimsy accusations is very difficult to reorganize.

I practiced law for 18 years; witnesses could not remember what happened 2 years after the event—now we go back 17, 20, 30 years, and the criticisms of the nominee even under those circumstances and before and after are amazingly weak.

The allegations from the Phoenix panel are based on hearsay, loose facts, and even worse. One witness bases his entire allegation of "voter harassment" on hearsay evidence that would never be admissible, never—even against the sleaziest felon—in a court of law.

Another witness claims that a man he believes to be Rehnquist ran through a voting line challenging voters and threatened this witness with his clenched fists, and this witness identified Rehnquist through a picture of William Rehnquist in a local newspaper nearly 7 years after the incident. How weak and puny that is as evidence.

It would be hard for me to believe that a 37-year-old lawyer, a Stanford graduate, first in his class, former Supreme Court law clerk and head of a lawyers committee on local election procedures, would be challenging some voter to a fist-fight. That does not really ring.

We have I think a bridge up in Brooklyn for anyone who might believe that and we could peddle it.

There has been criticism of the restrictive covenant in a deed for a house that the Justice owns. We all know that those are extremely offensive, obviously, and extremely repugnant. These covenants have no legal effect and they appear in many, many instruments—drafted, printed forms—in those years past.

Former President Kennedy, former Vice President Humbert Humphrey, former Senator McGovern have owned homes with similarly restrictive deeds that they did not attempt to remove. My own father had a similar covenant on his first home.

What is all the hurrah about that?

No one would suggest that these deeds impugned the commitment to civil rights of those men I just mentioned. Yet some imply that such a deed "says something" about Justice Rehnquist.

I think that is bosh.

Some claim that a memo written in 1952 to Justice Jackson might display Justice Rehnquist's "true feelings" about the Brown decision and the issue of racial segregation.

Justice Rehnquist has convincingly rebutted that allegation and there is no evidence at all to lead us to think otherwise. None has arisen.

Again, this is an allegation that is not only weak of its own accord, but with an additional defect of being over 34 years old with more gray hair on it than I have.

Some have questioned the "credibility" of the nominee, based on his responses to questions concerning the Phoenix panel, the restrictive covenants and the Brown decision memo.

I should point out that we challenge the integrity of a Supreme Court Justice by doing so, but what we are about is beginning to demean the Court. We are beginning to demean the U.S. Supreme Court. Others are on that Court who have served on it for 15 years or more. When do we bring them back here for some more fun and games? Maybe we just ought to sweep through there every 15 years, bring them back—they have been sitting, have a fine record, very credible—bring them back here and see what we can find on them 20, 30 years back down the road. None of us again could pass that test.

And importantly, some extremely questionable, and I use the word "extremely" because everybody else has used the word "exteme" about Justice Rehnquist on the other side of the issue—I have heard it used and used, extreme, extreme, extreme—I say there has been some extremely questionable evidence used to challenge Justice Rehnquist's answers on these subjects.

But before we challenge Justice Rehnquist's "credibility," and it comes in quotations marks, because it continues to come up from the opponents, we should determine whether the evidence on which those allegations are based is at all credible.

And based on what I have personnally seen at the hearings, read in the Judiciary Committee report on the nomination, evidence that Justice Rehnquist challenged voters, embraced restrictive convenants or endorsed the statements on the Jackson memo, is just not credible.

Since the Judiciary Committee proceedings, charges have appeared concerning Justice Rehnquist's authorship of memos while he was in the Justice Department—memos that dealt with desegregation and in opposition to the ERA.

I believe the attention being paid to those memos tells us more about the sheer pettiness and desperation of Mr. Rehnquist's opponents than about any doubt a reasonable person might have with the nominee's fine qualifications.

The desegregation memo was written at the request of the White House as were many other memos. If you were the President's lawyer, would you respond that you could not provide such a memo because you did not agree with its content? They were asked to do those things.

We lawyers, all of us, have often said, "Give me a brief on the other side; make it look as good as you can; give me the arguments." That is what he did. He produced those things. That is our business. That is our life in the law.

Then to make something sinister out of that when you find one of those things in an old file is really absurd.

The ERA memo was written in the first person because it was not intended to be an objective analysis. Justice Rehnquist was instructed to take a position of opposition to the ERA in order to balance the arguments made by another Department of Justice lawyer who was in favor of the ERA. That all gets lost in the swamps around here. It is extraordinary to watch.

If a lawyer were not a capable advocate, as Justice Rehnquist displays himself to be in that memo, he would not be qualified to be a Chief Justice. Those who accuse Justice Rehnquist of endorsing all of the arguments that he put forth in the memo are being deliberately deceptive and they know darn well it is not true. They know that in their hearts, but they have been having a good old time with it.

An interesting historical note to the ERA issue, Mr. President: The Nixon administration did come out in support of ERA. I happen to support it; I have supported that in the past.

And so, I have concluded that the allegations concerning Justice Rehnquist's unfitness to be Chief Justice are unfounded, vague, baseless, petty, and irresponsible. And really quite galling.

I have said before—and in politics, I find there is no such thing as repetition—you either pass or kill a bill in this place or confirm or not confirm a person in this place by using a deft blend of emotion, fear, guilt, or racism. Kind of a funny arena in which to work. And you have never seen it better than right here—racial imuendos, emotional innuendos, fearful innuendos, guilt. Heavens, I mean, really, it is an exhaustion of the process.

Because if you really want to be intellectually honest, just get up and say:

Mr. Rehnquist, I don't like your philosophy. I don't like it at all. I think it is bad for the country. I think you are bad for the country and I will not vote for you.

Period, with emphasis. That would do it very nicely. Then we would not have to go through all of this remarkable posturing and watch it go on for days as it did in the committee and now hours here.

That is the issue. "I don't like his philosophy. I haven't the courage to say it," and the rest of it is applesauce every foot of the way.

And they do not have the political courage to come at him like a Mack truck with six headlights bearing down on him. That would at least be honest and better than this stuff which, again, I have described as like getting pecked to death by ducks.

Also, when you turn the bugeyed zealots loose on a person like this, it has some extraordinary repercussions that will come back to, I think, a loss of credibility of those who profess it.

Well, I conclude, I strongly and deeply believe the Senate has this role, a very important role to play in providing the advice and consent to the President on his judicial nominations. I believe that the Senate has performed that task. We have done that and then some.

I am very puzzled, nay, troubled by those some who claim that now a "cloud has formed" over the nomination. That is like "Joe Btfsplk," or whatever it was, in Li'l Abner, who had the cloud in a permanent condition above his head. Should one really complain about the chance of rain when he has been up in the airplane seeding the clouds on this one?

I am also troubled by some who state they believe the Chief Justice must now be a "symbol" of something. We would think it is a symbol of equal justice. But there is a sinister connotation now in everything we see on Justice Rehnquist. An interesting spin. The "spin doctors" are at work.

Unfortunately, this has come to mean that the Chief Justice is a symbol, but it will be terribly unfortunate for the Court if he is a symbol or she is a symbol which must meet the approval of every single special-interest group that happens to have a Washington office and a hyperactive executive director. But that is how they get paid. That is how they keep their doors open. Juice up the troops and get the dues in and say they are fighting at the final bastion of whatever before we get on with something which will destroy the Republic.

So, in my mind, the Chief Justice must symbolize the wise—that is what he should symbolize—the wise, even-handed, fair, responsible, intelligent interpretation of the U.S. Constitution and the U.S. laws.

He is a good man. I know of no person more qualified than Justice William Rehnquist to perform this task, and I strongly support his nomination. He has been pilloried in a bizarre way. And I am interested as to how it should be that there should be a higher standard for him or any Chief Justice or Justice than there should be for a U.S. Senator. That one skips my logic chain. A higher standard for a Chief Justice than for a U.S. Senator? That is absurd.

And yet, some who are lobbing in the old mortar shells, I wonder how they would be on the other end in the trench. I do not think they would pass the test.

We lose ground when we throw mud. It is an old phrase, but it is surely true. So let us get on with our work and I hope we do.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Thursday, September 11, 1986

The House met at 9:30 a.m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James David Ford, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, may Your power be with us to give us strength for the day, may Your divine light be with us to lighten the road ahead, may Your forgiveness be with us to allow us to begin anew, and may Your love that passes all human understanding be with us and those we love. Hear our prayer, O God, and may Your spirit never depart from us. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Hallen, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills and a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H.R. 1529. An act for the relief of Gerald M. Hendley;

H.R. 1783. An act for the relief of Mary E. Stokes;

H.R. 2316. An act for the relief of Paulette Mendes-Silva;

H.R. 3443. An act to designate the Closed Basin Conveyance Channel of the Closed Basin Division, San Luis Valley Project, Colorado as the "Franklin Eddy Canal"; and

H.J. Res. 580. Joint resolution to designate the week beginning September 7, 1986, as "National Freedom of Information Act Awareness Week."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S.J. Res. 405. Joint resolution to designate September 11, 1986, as "9-1-1 Emergency Number Day."

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to make an announcement.

After consultation with the majority and minority leaders, and with their consent and approval, the Chair announces that today when the Houses meet in joint meeting to receive the President of the Federative Republic of Brazil only the doors immediately opposite the Speaker and those on his left and right will be open.

RECESS

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the order of the House of August 15, 1986, the House will stand in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

Accordingly (at 9 o'clock and 35 minutes a.m.), the House stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

JOINT MEETING OF THE HOUSE AND SENATE HELD PURSUANT TO THE ORDER OF THE HOUSE OF AUGUST 15, 1986, TO HEAR AN ADDRESS BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE FEDERATIVE REPUBLIC OF BRAZIL

The SPEAKER of the House presided.

The Doorkeeper announced the Vice President and Members of the U.S. Senate who entered the Hall of the House of Representatives, the Vice President taking the chair at the right of the Speaker, and the Members of the Senate the seats reserved for them.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as members of the committee on the part of the House to conduct the President of the Federative Republic of Brazil into the Chamber:

The gentleman from California, Mr. COELHO;

The gentleman from Illinois, Mr. MICHEL;

The gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. LOTT; and

The gentleman from Michigan, Mr. BROOMFIELD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The President of the Senate at the direction of that body appoints the following Senators as members of the committee on the part of the Senate to escort the President of the Federative Republic of Brazil into the Chamber:

The Senator from Kansas, Mr. DOLE;

The Senator from South Carolina, Mr. THURMOND;

The Senator from Rhode Island, Mr. CHAFEE;

The Senator from Minnesota, Mr. DURENBERGER;

The Senator from Hawaii, Mr. INOUYE;

The Senator from Connecticut, Mr. DODD; and

The Senator from Illinois, Mr. SIMON.

The Doorkeeper announced the ambassadors, ministers, and charges d'affaires of foreign governments.

The ambassadors, ministers, and charges d'affaires of foreign governments entered the Hall of the House of Representatives and took the seats reserved for them.

The Doorkeeper announced the Cabinet of the President of the United States.

The members of the Cabinet of the President of the United States entered the Hall of the House of Representatives and took the seats reserved for them in front of the Speaker's rostrum.

At 10 o'clock and 1 minute a.m. the Doorkeeper announced the President of the Federative Republic of Brazil.

The President of the Federative Republic of Brazil, escorted by the committee of Senators and Representatives, entered the Hall of the House of Representatives, and stood at the Clerk's desk.

[Applause, the Members rising.]

The SPEAKER. Members of the Congress, it is my great privilege and I deem it a high honor and a personal pleasure to present to you his Excellency José Sarney, President of the Federative Republic of Brazil.

[Applause, the Members rising.]

ADDRESS BY HIS EXCELLENCY, JOSÉ SARNEY, PRESIDENT OF THE FEDERATIVE REPUBLIC OF BRAZIL, BEFORE THE JOINT MEETING OF THE UNITED STATES CONGRESS

(The following address was delivered in Portuguese except for that portion following the asterisk, which was delivered in English.)

President SARNEY. Mr. Speaker, Mr. Vice President, Members of Congress, it is difficult for a statesman from any part of the world to remain unmoved when received within these halls. It is difficult not to remember the lessons of the history and of the traditions of this Congress, since its origins in 18th-century Philadelphia, a Congress which has but one entrance and exit: The will of the people, free elections.

This country has faced crises, savored moments of triumph, and more than once tasted the bitterness of danger and mourning. It was heard the trumpets sound notes of rejoicing, and has shed bitter tears of sorrow. It has known the ravages of war and the blessing of peace.

One institution has remained unchanged and resilient: The United States Congress.

We should keep in mind what Brogan said. At the time the Constitution was drawn up, there still ruled a French monarchy, a Roman emperor, a Venetian republic, and a German republic, an autocracy in St. Petersburg, a caliph in Constantinople, a divinely invested Emperor in Peking, and a shogun in what was then a weak and little-known Japan.

Times have changed, and rulers have changed, but the branches of government in the United States, since the Presidency of George Washington, have changed less than the forms of royal power in place not long ago in Tibet.

"All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives."

With these laconic words, the Founding Fathers devised the structure of these two legislative Chambers.

The whole world was inspired by your example.

In how many parts of the world, over two centuries, have dreamers, heroes, and martyrs not been drawn to the flame of your ideas of self-government?

Two hundred years ago, my country, Brazil, was a European colony. Since that distant time, the people of Brazil have felt close to the United States.

In 1787, the young Brazilian, José Joaquim Maia sought out Thomas Jefferson, then Minister Plenipotentiary in Paris, to ask his support for our independence. Two years later, our hero, Tiradentes, who dreamed of a free and republican Brazil, was hanged, drawn, and quartered, his severed body hung for all to see, in the streets and the roads, as a cruel example to smother the dream of freedom, and to declare that it would not come forth in our land.

Do you know what the King's agents found among the papers that had set the heart of our martyr afire with the holy madness of independence? The Constitution of the United States of America.

I have long been a legislator, a Representative and a Senator for 29 years. The Brazilian Congress was my school of political education. I pay tribute to the United States Congress, knowing what it represents. I am grateful for the kind gesture of this Joint Meeting of the Senate and House of Representatives. I could not come to this country without accepting this opportunity to renew faith in democracy.

I know that this warm welcome is a sign of friendship with Brazil.

Accept my gratitude, which I personally renew to Speaker O'NEILL and convey to all the Members of the House of Representatives and of the Senate, who have honored me with the invitation to address this Joint Meeting.

Congress is a school for public life. It is greater than the sum of all its Members. This institution is the sovereignty of the people. One learns here to listen rather than to speak. To listen to all the voices, all the groups of society, all the emotions, all the injustices. Here, all decisions are questioned, and here are shaped the true sentiments of the democrat, which can be summarized in an example that is also yours: Benjamin Franklin. Frail at 81 years of age and unable to sign his name to the Constitution, he asked James Wilson to read what he had written for that occasion. What were his words?

"The older I become, the more I come to doubt my judgment, and the more I respect the judgment of others!"

This is the belief of a true democrat: To respect the opinions of others. Democracy has survived because it does not live by dogma, absolute truths, or inquisitions of faith. It is nurtured by the creative power of freedom of opinion, of initiative, of having, working, informing, believing, not believing, loving, dreaming.

Only he who has lost freedom knows its true value. And knows how difficult it is to regain it.

Brazil is a country of conciliation and dialog, a country that practices peace. The true name of peace is democracy, because democracy is understanding, the capacity to find solutions other than the solutions of might. This is why democracies do not make war on one another.

I am here in the United States at the invitation of President Ronald Reagan, who, with tenacity and leadership, governs this country at a time when the international situation raises great concern.

The 18th century Nation of farmers has become the most highly industrialized Nation in the world.

The country that sought at any price to avoid "foreign entanglements" has become a world power with global responsibilities.

In World War II, we fought as allies against Nazi-Fascism. Throughout its history, Brazil has admired the vigor of American democracy, the solidity of its institutions, the public spirit of its people, and the creativity of its artists, scientists, and intellectuals.

Starting from different cultural backgrounds, Brazil and the United States have grown together, both founded on shared values forged by the period during which we stepped onto the stage of history as independent nations: The values of the enlightenment, from which we drew our unwavering faith in reason, truth, peace, and concord.

Members of Congress,

That is the Brazil that I represent before you.

I have come here as the President of a country that has affinities with the United States, and which, neither humbly nor arrogantly, is quietly conscious of its place in history and its importance as the eighth largest economy of the Western world. I represent a great people, and I have come here to visit a great Nation. I bring you greetings from my countrymen and the wishes of the Brazilian people that this Nation will move onward in its course of greatness, a course that is necessarily guided by justice.

Brazil and the United States today come together in the practice of democracy, which is not only the most just and humane form of government, but also the strongest and most efficient.

Brazil has experienced 20 years of institutional difficulties.

In only 17 months of democracy, the civilian government has shown its ability to act with determination and courage. It dared to abandon indexation, the speculative attitude of a whole generation. It reduced hyperinflation from over 200 percent a year to less than 1 percent per month. It spurred the economy to grow again at a rate of 8 percent. It created hundreds of thousands of jobs. It restored the value of wages. It launched agrarian reform. It is raising social investment to 12.5 percent of gross domestic product, so that by the century's end, we will have attained standards of living comparable to those of southern Europe.

It has restored full political and trade union freedom. It has called elections for a constitutional assembly, in which 69 million Brazilians will cast their votes, a number larger than the population of any Western country with the exception of the United States.

All of this has been accomplished without trauma, without violence, and in keeping with the motto of the new republic: Conciliation and change.

The same constructive attitude is the foundation of our international conduct. Every facet of the new Brazil—political, economic, social—should find an international response to reinforce and foster it.

We strive for political peace and stability, economic growth and expansion, and an end to hunger, disease, ignorance, and poverty. We seek to play our part in the international system.

We have not come here to exact or demand from others what we ourselves do not practice. Rather, we wish to be judged by our actions, by what we are doing to achieve each of our goals.

Our relations of friendship and cooperation with 10 neighboring countries, along a border of more than 10,000 miles, strengthen a world held together by the art of negotiation.

Overcoming the rivalry or indifference of the past, we are building with Argentina a historic project of integration and development, which has been joined by Uruguay.

Abandoning a narrow and distorted interpretation of sovereignty, we have adhered to the international conventions on human rights and against torture.

We are proposing that the South Atlantic, between South America and Africa, be preserved as an area of peace and unity, free from nuclear weapons, as has already been done, with our participation, in the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America.

We are a member of the group that supports a peaceful and negotiated solution for Central America, and we have passed legislation with effective sanctions against apartheid.

We are a mixed race nation, and the world's second largest black nation, after Nigeria. We practice examplary racial democracy.

All Brazilians are united in the task of rebuilding our country.

But we face a serious constraint—the volume of resources that the Brazilian economy has been transferring abroad yearly to service a burdensome foreign debt.

Last year, the sum of such transfers represented one-fourth of Brazil's gross domestic savings. It is clear that we cannot grow at the necessary and desirable rate if this continues.

It is a simple matter. To grow, we must import more and raise the investment rate.

In so doing, we will be buying more agricultural and industrial goods from our chief trading partners, especially from the largest, the United States of America.

Our demand for imports will thus help to reduce the trade deficit of this country.

Brazil has the potential for such cooperation. But at the same time, we will be reducing our trade surplus. In recent years, Brazil has maintained a trade surplus equivalent to nearly half its exports. In relative terms, very few countries have performed so well.

With this surplus, we have been meeting our debt service payments. If we reduce that surplus by increasing imports, we will necessarily curtail our ability to transfer resources as debt repayment. In other words, we will have to pay less for some time, to be able to import more. This is the only way we can attain targeted growth in the immediate future and reintegrate our country in the international economy in the medium and long term, without crises, shocks, or disruption, thus fulfilling our steadfast commitment to our people.

Latin America cannot survive on the poverty of a wage of $25 per month. It is this criminal injustice that spawns social upheaval, revolt, and the resort to violence.

We have proposed repeatedly, in the appropriate fora, a joint effort by creditors and debtors. The high spreads charged by banks and high real interest rates impede the growth of the debtor countries, and thus the enhancement of their ability to pay. Unstable interest rates and exchange fluctuations hamper their economic and social development planning, since they cannot forecast their financial obligations and liquidity for the upcoming 6 months, much less for the next year.

It is necessary to promote an understanding among the leaders of creditor and debtor nations to reduce the magnitude of payments now being made. This would allow the debtor countries to again import more from the creditor countries, and their own growth can, in turn, contribute to the recovery and normalization of the world economy.

For our part, we are still prepared to engage in such a joint endeavor. But we must not wait until it is too late. We have urged our industrialized partners to join us now in such an effort to safeguard the financial health and stability of the Western World.

With respect to the larger question of rescuing man from poverty and suffering, I recognize that we have been able to do little beyond our borders. My government's priority has been to honor our most important debt: The social and moral debt we owe our own people. Still, we stand ready to do our part to even disparities of wealth, fight disease and ignorance, and eradicate drug traffic. I repeat here the appeal I made at the United Nations: That a dedicated battle be waged to banish the scourge of hunger from the face of the Earth.

Members of Congress,

On every aspect of the global agenda, Brazil stands for stability and peace, conciliation, and balance. We are a country that gives, that does not take away. A country that brings not problems, but answers.

Our ability to forge our own solutions to challenges was demonstrated by our peaceful transition to democracy, and by our nonrecessive fight against inflation.

We are confident in our strength, while acknowledging that we rely, as do all of us to some degree, on the forces and conditions of the international system.

Brazil has everything to succeed. It has everything that is needed to make the leap to full development in the near future.

There is ample investment opportunity in the country, open to private domestic and foreign investors.

In addition to a robust economy, abundant resources, diligent and skilled labor, and a modern infrastructure, investors will find that we have sound legislation on the treatment of foreign capital.

For more than 20 years, our legislation, in addition to being fair and flexible, has successfully guided our relations with foreign companies that bring us their capital, their technology, and their management skills. This relationship has been stable, transparent, and dependable. With the return of economic growth and with the political and social stability Brazil now enjoys, I am sure it will again attract growing flows of investment to participate in the development of our wealth.

Brazil's success threatens no one. It is rather a victory for those who believe in the power of man's work to overcome backwardness and underdevelopment.

Brazil's success will vindicate the Western values of pluralistic and participatory democracy, of a free and open society, of a creative market economy, in which the economic freedom of private enterprise is the guarantee of political freedom and the driving force of development.

We strongy desire a high degree of cooperation with the United States, the first country to recognize our independence, a country with which we have cultural, political, and economic ties.

Cooperation that unites a superpower with global interests to a Latin American nation advancing toward development and assuming greater responsibilities in the world.

For this relationship to prosper and grow stronger, each side must have the maturity to accept as natural the difficulties that may arise, respect for the legitimate interests and viewpoints of the other, and an ongoing openness to dialog and understanding.

This has been our tradition in the past, is our practice now, and our expectation for the future.

*Members of Congress, now, as we look toward the third millenium with the vitality and confidence of the youthful pioneer societies of the Americans, in my rough English spoken as a Brazilian from the northeast of my country, I would like to conclude by quoting the poet of democracy, the great Walt Whitman.

He wrôte a poem to the Brazilian people to herald the birth of the Republic in 1889 that speaks to us still today. These are eternal verses that evoke freedom and democracy as forcefully as the lines of "When Lilacs Last in the Dooryard Bloomed":

"Welcome, Brazilian Brother, thy ample place is ready;
A loving hand, a smile from the north, a sunny instant hail!

(let the future care for itself, where it reveals its troubles, impedimentas, ours, ours the present throe, the democratic aim, the acceptance and the faith); to thee to-day our reaching arm, our turning neck—to thee from us the expectant eye, thou cluster free! Thou brilliant lustrous one! thou, learning well, the true lesson of a nation's light in the sky,
(more shining than the cross, more than the crown),
the height to be superb humanity."

God bless the United States. God bless the Americas.

Thank you,

[Applause, the Members rising.]

At 10 o'clock and 31 minutes a.m., the President of the Federative Republic of Brazil, accompanied by the committee of escort, retired from the Hall of the House of Representatives.

The Doorkeeper escorted the invited guests from the Chamber in the following order:

The members of the President's Cabinet.

The ambassadors, ministers, and charges d'affaires of foreign governments.

JOINT MEETING DISSOLVED

The SPEAKER. The purpose of the joint meeting having been completed, the Chair declares the joint meeting of the two Houses dissolved, and the House will meet in session at about 10:50 a.m.

Accordingly, at 10 o'clock and 34 minutes a.m., the joint meeting of the two Houses was dissolved.

The Members of the Senate retired to their Chamber.

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. WRIGHT] at 11 a.m.

PRINTING OF PROCEEDINGS HAD DURING THE RECESS

Mr. GRAY of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the proceedings had during the recess be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Speaker, I have a parliamentary inquiry, then hopefully a unanimous-consent request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Speaker, my parliamentary inquiry is that under the rule House Resolution 541, which controls the debate on the antidrug bill, the first amendment in order is from the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WRIGHT], which is an amendment en bloc, including amendments of other Members.

My inquiry is, if one wished to have a separate consideration of one of the included amendments, that is, amendment No. 5 from the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MORRISON], would it be appropriate at this time to make the unanimous-consent request for separate consideration of such an amendment, along with the request that a limit of no more than 10 minutes, equally divided, be allowed for that amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Such a request would be in order and the Chair would respond that under the rule, that is the only manner in which such a result might be achieved prior to going into the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that instruction.

REQUEST FOR SEPARATE CONSIDERATION OF A CERTAIN AMENDMENT TO H.R. 5484 NOTWITHSTANDING ITS INCLUSION AS PART OF THE WRIGHT AMENDMENTS

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that in the amendments en bloc from the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WRIGHT], including several other amendments, that amendment No. 5, the amendment from the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MORRISON], be separately considered and voted on, that separate debate be allowed on that amendment not to exceed 10 minutes equally divided between proponents and opponents, and that that consideration take place immediately following the en bloc amendments of the gentleman from Texas.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

OMNIBUS DRUG ENFORCEMENT, EDUCATION, AND CONTROL ACT OF 1986

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 541 and rule XXIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill, H.R. 5484.

□ 1103

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 5484) to strengthen Federal efforts to encourage foreign cooperation in eradicating illicit drug crops and in halting international drug traffic, to improve enforcement of Federal drug laws and enhance interdiction of illicit drug shipments, to provide strong Federal leadership in establishing effective drug abuse prevention and education programs, to expand Federal support for drug abuse treatment and rehabilitation efforts, and for other purposes, with Mr. CARR in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee of the Whole rose Wednesday, September 10, 1986, all time for general debate had expired.

Pursuant to House Resolution 541, the bill is considered as having been read for amendment under the 5-minute rule.

The amendments printed in section 2 of House Resolution 541 are considered as having been adopted.

The text of H.R. 5484, as amended by the amendments contained in section 2 of House Resolution 541, is as follows:

H.R. 5484

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

TITLE I—COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS

SEC. 101. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "International Narcotics Control Act of 1986".

SEC. 102. STATEMENT OF POLICY.

The Congress finds that—

(1) inadequate enforcement and eradication efforts have contributed to the rampant production of and trafficking in illicit narcotic drugs;

(2) such drug production and trafficking constitutes a clear and present danger to the international community;

(3) illegal narcotics production and trafficking operations seriously threaten national and regional political stability;

(4) it should be United States policy to assist the major drug producing and trafficking countries effectively to carry out their own enforcement and eradication efforts; and

(5) United States narcotics control assistance should be designed to facilitate the formation of regional solutions for combatting the threats posed by illegal cultivation, production, and trafficking of narcotic drugs.

SEC. 103. STATEMENT OF PURPOSE.

(a) PURPOSE.—The purpose of this title is to promote, through international and regional cooperation, the eventual elimination of narcotics production and trafficking (with assistance from the United States where appropriate) in order that all countries meet their international obligations with respect to narcotics control efforts.

(b) RELATION OF UNITED STATES ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS TO IMPLEMENTATION OF NARCOTICS CONTROL EFFORTS.—In recognition of the threat posed by the international narcotics trade, the Congress declares that frustration of the purpose of this title by lack of cooperation from another country would provide a basis for promptly implementing section 481(h) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2291(h); relating to suspension of United States assistance).

Subtitle A—International Narcotics Control Assistance Program

SEC. 111. ADDITIONAL FUNDING FOR INTERNATIONAL NARCOTICS CONTROL ASSISTANCE AND REGIONAL COOPERATION.

Section 482(a)(1) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2291a(a)(1); authorizing appropriations for assistance for international narcotics control) is amended—

(1) by striking out "$57,529,000 for the fiscal year 1987" and inserting in lieu thereof "$65,445,000 for the fiscal year 1987"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following: "In addition to the amounts authorized by the preceding sentence, there are authorized to be appropriated to the President $35,000,000 for the fiscal year 1987 to carry out the purposes of section 481, except that funds may be appropriated pursuant to this additional authorization only if the President has submitted to the Congress (A) a budget request for the appropriation of those funds, and (B) a plan showing how the requested funds will be used, including a description of how regional cooperation on narcotics control matters would be promoted by the use of those funds.".

SEC. 112. ADDITIONAL AIRCRAFT FOR DRUG CONTROL, ERADICATION AND INTERDICTIONS EFFORTS BY FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

(a) AUTHORIZATION OF ADDITIONAL FUNDS.—Not less than $10,000,000 of the funds available for fiscal year 1987 to carry out chapter 2 of part II of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2311 et seq.; relating to grant military assistance) shall be available only to provide helicopters or other aircraft to countries receiving assistance for fiscal year 1987 under chapter 8 of part I of that Act (22 U.S.C. 2291 et seq.; relating to international narcotics control). These aircraft shall be used solely for the purpose of and solely in narcotics control eradication and interdiction efforts.

(b) EARMARKING FOR AIRCRAFT FOR REGIONAL USE.—Not less than half of the funds used pursuant to subsection (a) shall be used for aircraft which will be based in Latin America and will be available for eradication and interdiction efforts throughout the region.

(c) RELATIONSHIP TO INTERNATIONAL NARCOTICS CONTROL ASSISTANCE PROGRAM.—The aircraft made available pursuant to subsection (a) are in addition to any aircraft made available under chapter 8 of part I of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961. Assistance pursuant to subsection (a) shall be administered and provided in accordance with the authorities of that chapter, rather than the authorities of chapter 2 of part II of that Act.

SEC. 113. RETENTION OF TITLE TO AIRCRAFT PROVIDED TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES FOR NARCOTICS CONTROL PURPOSES.

Chapter 8 of part I of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2291 et seq.; relating to the international narcotics control assistance program) is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"SEC. 484. RETENTION OF TITLE TO AIRCRAFT.

"Any aircraft made available to a foreign country under this chapter at any time after the enactment of this section (including aircraft made available pursuant to section 102 of the International Narcotics Control Act of 1986) shall be provided only on a lease or loan basis.".

SEC. 114. RECORDS OF AIRCRAFT USE.

Chapter 8 of part I of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2291 et seq.; relating to the international narcotics control assistance program), as amended by the preceding section of this title, is further amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"SEC. 485. RECORDS OF AIRCRAFT USE.

"(a) REQUIREMENT TO MAINTAIN RECORDS.—The Secretary of State shall maintain detailed records on the use of any aircraft made available to a foreign country under this chapter, including aircraft made available pursuant to section 102 of the International Narcotics Control Act of 1986 and aircraft made available under this chapter before the enactment of this section.

"(b) CONGRESSIONAL ACCESS TO RECORDS.—The Secretary of State shall make the records maintained pursuant to subsection (a) available to the Congress upon a request of the Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives or the Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate.".

SEC. 115. PILOT AND AIRCRAFT MAINTENANCE TRAINING FOR NARCOTICS CONTROL ACTIVITIES.

(a) EARMARKING OF FUNDS.—Not less than $2,000,000 of the funds made available for fiscal year 1987 to carry out chapter 5 of part II of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2347 et seq.; relating to international military education and training) shall be available only for education and training in the operation and maintenance of aircraft used in narcotics control interdiction and eradication efforts.

(b) RELATIONSHIP TO INTERNATIONAL NARCOTICS CONTROL ASSISTANCE PROGRAM.—Assistance under this section shall be coordinated with assistance provided under chapter 8 of part I of that Act (22 U.S.C. 2291 et seq.; relating to international narcotics control).

(c) WAIVER OF SECTION 660.—Assistance may be provided pursuant to this section notwithstanding the prohibition contained in section 660 of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2420; relating to police training).

SEC. 116. DEVELOPMENT OF HERBICIDES FOR AERIAL COCA ERADICATION.

The Secretary of State shall use not less than $1,000,000 of the funds made available for fiscal year 1987 to carry out chapter 8 of part I of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2291 et seq.; relating to international narcotics control) to finance research on and the development and testing of safe and effective herbicides for use in the aerial eradication of coca.

SEC. 117. REVIEW OF EFFECTIVENESS OF INTERNATIONAL NARCOTICS CONTROL ASSISTANCE PROGRAM.

(a) REQUIREMENT FOR INVESTIGATION.—The Comptroller General shall conduct a thorough and complete investigation to determine the effectiveness of the assistance provided pursuant to chapter 8 of part I of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2291 et seq.; relating to international narcotics control).

(b) REPORTS TO CONGRESS.—

(1) PERIODIC REPORTS.—The Comptroller General shall report to the Congress periodically as the various portions of the investigation conducted pursuant to subsection (a) are completed.

(2) FINAL REPORT.—Upon completion of the investigation, the Comptroller General shall submit a final report to the Congress on the results of the investigation. This report shall include such recommendations for administrative or legislative action as the Comptroller General finds appropriate based on the investigation.

Subtitle B—Improving Law Enforcement and Other Narcotics Control Activities Abroad

SEC. 121. EXTRADITION TO THE UNITED STATES FOR NARCOTICS-RELATED OFFENSES.

Section 481(e)(3) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2291(e)(3); relating to the annual international narcotics control report) is amended by inserting after subparagraph (C) the following new subparagraph:

"(D) A discussion of the extent to which such country has cooperated with the United States narcotics control efforts through the extradition or prosecution of drug traffickers, and a description of the status of negotiations with such country to negotiate a new or updated extradition treaty relating to narcotics offenses.".

SEC. 122. ISSUANCE OF DIPLOMATIC PASSPORTS FOR DRUG ENFORCEMENT ADMINISTRATION AGENTS ABROAD.

The Congress commends the decision of the Secretary of State to issue diplomatic passports, rather than official passports, to officials and employees of the Drug Enforcement Administration who are assigned abroad. The Secretary shall report to the Congress before making any change in this policy.

SEC. 123. RESTRICTIONS ON PARTICIPATION OF UNITED STATES PERSONNEL IN ARREST ACTIONS IN NARCOTICS CONTROL EFFORTS ABROAD.

Section 481(c) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2291(c); commonly known as the Mansfield amendment) is amended to read as follows:

"(c)(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no officer or employee of the United States may engage or participate in any direct police arrest action in any foreign country with respect to narcotics control efforts, except that this paragraph does not apply in the case of a foreign country with respect to which the Secretary of State has made the determinations described in paragraph (2).

"(2) Paragraph (1) shall not apply, and paragraph (3) shall apply, with respect to a foreign country if the Secretary of State determines that the application of the prohibition in paragraph (3) rather than the prohibition in paragraph (1) with respect to that country—

"(A) would be in the United States national interest, and

"(B) would not harm United States relations with that country.

The Secretary shall keep the Congress fully informed of determinations made under this paragraph and of the activities carried out by officers and employees of the United States pursuant to those determinations.

"(3) In the case of a foreign country with respect to which the Secretary of State has made the determinations described in paragraph (2), an officer or employee of the United States may not directly effect an arrest in that country as part of any foreign police action with respect to narcotics control efforts, notwithstanding any other provision of law. This paragraph does not prohibit an officer or employee from assisting foreign officers who are effecting an arrest.

"(4) Paragraphs (1) and (3) do not prohibit an officer or employee from taking direct action to protect life or safety if exigent circumstances arise which are unanticipated and which pose an immediate threat to United States officers or employees, officers or employees of a foreign government, or members of the public.

"(5) No officer or employee of the United States may interrogate or be present during the interrogation of any United States person arrested in any foreign country with respect to narcotics control efforts without the written consent of such person.

"(6) This subsection shall not apply to the activities of the United States Armed Forces in carrying out their responsibilities under applicable Status of Forces arrangements.".

SEC. 124. INFORMATION-SHARING SO THAT VISAS ARE DENIED TO DRUG TRAFFICKERS.

(a) NEED FOR COMPREHENSIVE INFORMATION SYSTEM.—The Congress is concerned that the executive branch has not established a comprehensive information system on all drug arrests of foreign nationals in the United States so that information may be communicated to the appropriate United States embassies, even though the establishment of such a system is required by section 132 of the Foreign Relations Authorization Act, Fiscal Years 1986 and 1987.

(b) ESTABLISHMENT OF SYSTEM.—The executive branch shall act expeditiously to establish the comprehensive information system required by section 132 of the Foreign Relations Authorization Act, Fiscal Years 1986 and 1987, and submit to the Congress a report that the system has been established.

SEC. 125. INFORMATION RELATING TO ILLICIT NARCOTICS ACTIVITIES ABROAD.

(a) NEED FOR INCREASED PRIORITY.—The Congress urges the President to direct the appropriate Federal officials to give greater priority to the collection and sharing of information concerning narcotics-related activities abroad, including information relevant to estimating illicit drug production and information relevant to narcotics-related money laundering.

(b) ASSESSMENT OF NARCOTICS TRAFFICKING FROM AFRICA.—In particular, the President shall direct that an updated threat assessment of narcotics trafficking from Africa be prepared. If it is determined that an increased threat exists, the assessment shall examine the need for the United States to provide increased narcotics control training for African countries.

SEC. 126. COMBATING NARCOTERRORISM.

(a) FINDING.—The Congress finds that the increased cooperation and collaboration between narcotics traffickers and terrorist groups constitutes a serious threat to United States national security interests and to the political stability of numerous other countries, particularly in Latin America.

(b) IMPROVED CAPABILITY FOR RESPONDING TO NARCOTERRORISM.—The President shall take concrete steps to improve the capability of the executive branch—

(1) to collect information concerning the links between narcotics traffickers and acts of terrorism abroad, and

(2) to develop an effective and coordinated means for responding to the threat which those links pose.

Not later than 90 days after the date of enactment of this title, the President shall report to the Congress on the steps taken pursuant to this subsection.

(c) ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE PROGRAM.—Of the amounts made available for fiscal year 1987 to carry out section 534 of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2346c; relating to the administration of justice program), up to $2,000,000 is authorized to be used to provide to Colombia or other countries in the region such assistance as they may request for protection of judicial or other officials who are targets of narcoterrorist attacks. Such assistance may include assistance to increase the investigative, judicial, or prosecutorial capabilities of those countries with respect to narcoterrorist attacks.

SEC. 127. INTERDICTION PROCEDURES FOR VESSELS OF FOREIGN REGISTRY.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) the interdiction by the United States Coast Guard of vessels suspected of carrying illicit narcotics can be a difficult procedure when the vessel is of foreign registry and is located beyond the customs waters of the United States;

(2) before boarding and inspecting such a vessel, the Coast Guard must obtain consent from either the master of the vessel or the country of registry; and

(3) this process, and obtaining the consent of the country of registry to further law enforcement action, may delay the interdiction of the vessel by 3 or 4 days.

(b) NEGOTIATIONS CONCERNING INTERDICTION PROCEDURES.—

(1) The Congress urges the Secretary of State, in consultation with the Secretary of the department in which the Coast Guard is operating, to increase efforts to negotiate with relevant countries procedures which will facilitate interdiction of vessels suspected of carrying illicit narcotics.

(2) If a country refuses to negotiate with respect to interdiction procedures, the President shall take appropriate actions directed against that country, which may include the denial of access to United States ports to vessels registered in that country.

(3) The Secretary of State shall submit reports to the Congress semiannually identifying those countries which have failed to negotiate with respect to interdiction procedures.

SEC. 128. ARMED FORCES ASSISTANCE FOR LAW ENFORCEMENT ACTIVITIES ABROAD—CONCURRENCE OF SECRETARY OF STATE.

Section 374(c)(1)(B) of title 10, United States Code, is amended by striking out "and the Attorney General" and insert in lieu thereof ", the Attorney General, and the Secretary of State".

Subtitle C—Development and Narcotics Production and Trafficking

SEC. 131. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds that—

(1) increased narcotics cultivation and trafficking in developing countries is associated with declining economic opportunities in those countries, and particularly with decreasing youth employment opportunities and migration of small farmers to narcotics-producing areas to take advantage of economic opportunities that are not available in legitimate agriculture; and

(2) priority in United States development assistance policy should be given to employment-generation and to increasing the incentives for people to remain engaged in legitimate agriculture by increasing the resources available to them and enhancing their ability to make an adequate living.

SEC. 132. CONSULTATION AND AUTHORITIES RELATING TO AGRICULTURAL RESEARCH AND PILOT PROGRAM ACTIVITIES TO ENCOURAGE SUBSTITUTION FOR NARCOTIC CROPS IN MEXICO.

(a) FINDINGS AND PURPOSE.—

(1) The Congress finds that—

(A) the widespread geographic distribution of narcotic crop production in Mexico indicates that there likely are numerous other crops that could be substituted for such narcotic crops,

(B) there are other indications that substitute crops can be grown successfully and profitably under local conditions in Mexico,

(C) the Department of Agriculture has crop development, research, extension, and teaching resources that could be made available to assist Mexico implement a narcotic crop substitution program,

(D) a successful program to encourage substitute cropping in Mexico would effectively contribute to reducing the availability of illegal drugs in the United States, and

(E) substitute cropping in Mexico should be evaluated and considered for potential use in an overall cooperative program to eradicate the production of illegal drugs.

(2) The purpose of this section is to foster a program to encourage the substitution of selected crops for narcotic crops in Mexico used for the production of illegal drugs and to authorize agricultural research and pilot program activities related to demonstrating the feasibility of such substitute cropping.

(b) CONSULTATION.—The Secretary of State, with the assistance of the Secretary of Agriculture, shall consult with the appropriate authorities of the Government of Mexico on—

(1) the development and implementation of a program to train and assist agricultural producers in Mexico to substitute production of selected crops for narcotic crops used in the production of illegal drugs, and

(2) the provision by the United States of agricultural research, extension, and teaching assistance to implement such program.

(c) RESEARCH BY THE SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE.—

(1) As appropriate based on the consultations provided for under subsection (b), the Secretary of Agriculture, acting through the Agriculture Research Service, shall conduct research to identify crops and other agricultural commodities that have the economic potential to be substituted for narcotic crops presently grown in Mexico.

(2) Research under paragraph (1) shall be conducted in cooperation and coordination with appropriate institutions and agencies in the United States and Mexico and may include studies on crop adaptability, postharvest physiology, marketing, and social acceptance.

(3) A crop or agricultural commodity will be deemed to not be appropriate for substitution if the Secretary determines that increased production of the crop or commodity in Mexico would measurably decrease consumption of amounts of that crop or commodity produced in the United States.

(d) PILOT PROGRAMS.—As appropriate based on the consultations provided for under subsection (b), the Secretary of Agriculture shall establish pilot programs to determine and demonstrate that crops or commodities identified under subsection (c) have the economic potential to be substituted for narcotic crops presently grown in Mexico. Such pilot programs shall be conducted in cooperation with appropriate institutions and agencies in the United States and Mexico and in coordination with programs conducted by Mexico to eradicate the production of illegal drugs.

(e) ASSISTANCE AUTHORITY.—The Secretary of Agriculture may enter into contracts, grant agreements, and cooperative agreements under section 1472 of the National Agricultural Research, Extension, and Teaching Policy Act of 1977 (7 U.S.C. 3318) to carry out this section.

(f) AUTHORIZATION.—There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out this section.

SEC. 133. ANNUAL REPORTS ON DEVELOPMENT EFFORTS TO REDUCE NARCOTICS PRODUCTION AND TRAFFICKING.

Section 634(a) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2394(a); relating to the annual report on foreign assistance programs) is amended—

(1) by redesignating paragraphs (11) and (12) as paragraphs (12) and (13), respectively; and

(2) by inserting the following new paragraph (11) after paragraph (10):

"(11) a detailed description of the programs and activities carried out under part I (other than chapter 8) with respect to illicit narcotics production (such as crop substitution programs), and an assessment of the effectiveness of those programs and activities in reducing illicit narcotics production;".

Subtitle D—Drug Education Programs Abroad

SEC. 141. INCREASED FUNDING FOR USIA DRUG EDUCATION PROGRAMS.

In addition to amounts otherwise authorized to be appropriated, there is authorized to be appropriated for the United States Information Agency for fiscal year 1987 $2,000,000 which shall be available only for increasing drug education programs abroad. These programs may include—

(1) the distribution of films and publications which demonstrate the impact of drugs on crime and health; and

(2) exchange of persons programs and international visitor programs involving students, educators, and scientists.

SEC. 142. INCREASED FUNDING FOR AID DRUG EDUCATION PROGRAMS.

In addition to amounts otherwise authorized to be appropriated, there are authorized to be appropriated to the President for fiscal year 1987 $3,000,000 to carry out chapter 1 of part I of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, which amount shall be used pursuant to section 126(b)(2) of that Act for additional activities aimed at increasing awareness of the effects of production and trafficking of illicit narcotics on source and transit countries.

SEC. 143. REPORTS TO CONGRESS ON DRUG EDUCATION PROGRAMS ABROAD.

The Director of the United States Information Agency and the Administrator of the Agency for International Development shall include in their annual reports to the Congress a description of the drug education programs carried out by their respective agencies.

Subtitle E—United Nations Activities Relating to Drug Narcotics Control

SEC. 151. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds that—

(1) in response to the growing narcotics threat to the international community—

(A) the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs, 1961, the 1972 Protocol amending that Convention, and the Convention on Psychotropic Substances were adopted under United Nations auspices, and

(B) the United Nations has created various entities to deal with drug abuse control and prevention; and

(2) a greater international effort is required to address this threat, such as additional or increased contributions by other countries to the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse and Control and greater coordination of enforcement and eradication efforts.

SEC. 152. INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE ON DRUG ABUSE AND ILLICIT TRAFFICKING.

(a) CONGRESSIONAL SUPPORT.—The Congress hereby declares its support for United Nations General Assembly Resolution 40/122 adopted on December 13, 1985, in which the General Assembly decided to convene in 1987 an International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking in order to generate universal action to combat the drug problem in all its forms at the national, regional, and international levels, and to adopt a comprehensive outline of future activities.

(b) UNITED STATES PARTICIPATION.—With respect to United States participation in the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking, the Congress calls on the President—

(1) to appoint the head of the United States delegation well in advance of the conference; and

(2) to ensure that necessary resources are available for United States preparation and participation.

(c) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—Not later than April 30, 1987, the President shall report to the Congress on the status of United States preparations for the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking, including the status of naming the delegation, the issues expected to arise, and United States policy initiatives to be taken at the conference.

SEC. 153. EFFECTIVENESS OF INTERNATIONAL DRUG PREVENTION AND CONTROL SYSTEM.

(a) STUDY.—The United States should seek to improve the program and budget effectiveness of United Nations entities related to narcotics prevention and control by studying the capability of existing United Nations drug-related declarations, conventions, and entities to heighten international awareness and promote the necessary strategies for international action, to strengthen international cooperation, and to make effective use of available United Nations funds.

(b) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—Not later than April 30, 1987, the President shall report to the Congress any recommendations that may result from this study, including the possibility of consolidating existing United Nations entities which engage in narcotics-related activities.

SEC. 154. NARCOTICS CONTROL CONVENTIONS.

The Congress—

(1) urges that the United Nations Commission on Narcotic Drugs complete work as quickly as possible, consistent with the objective of obtaining an effective agreement, on a new draft convention against illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, in accordance with the mandate given the Commission by United Nations General Assembly Resolution 39/141; and

(2) calls for more effective implementation of existing conventions relating to narcotics.

Subtitle F—Provisions Relating to Specific Countries

SEC. 161. NARCOTICS CONTROL EFFORTS IN MEXICO.

(a) PROSECUTION OF THOSE RESPONSIBLE FOR THE MURDER OF DEA AGENT CAMARENA.—

Of the funds allocated for assistance for Mexico for fiscal year 1987 under chapter 8 of part I of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2291 et seq.; relating to international narcotics control), $1,000,000 shall be withheld from expenditure until the President reports to the Congress that the Government of Mexico—

(1) has fully investigated the 1985 murders of Drug Enforcement Administration agent Enrique Camarena Salazar and his pilot Alfredo Zavala Avelar, and

(2) has brought to trial and is effectively prosecuting those responsible for those murders.

(b) REPORTS ON ERADICATION EFFORTS.—The Secretary of State shall report to the Congress on a monthly basis with respect to the illicit drug eradication program in Mexico.

SEC. 162. MEXICO-UNITED STATES INTERGOVERNMENTAL COMMISSION.

(a) NEGOTIATIONS TO ESTABLISH.—In accordance with the resolution adopted by the 26th Mexico-United Interparliamentary Conference which recommended that the Government of Mexico and Government of the United States establish a Mexico-United States Intergovernmental Commission on Narcotics and Psychotropic Drug Abuse and Control, the President should direct the Secretary of State to enter into negotiations with the Government of Mexico to create such a joint intergovernmental commission.

(b) MEMBERSHIP.—The commission, which should meet semiannually, should include members of the Mexican Senate and Chamber of Deputies and the United States House of Representatives and Senate, together with members of the executive departments of each government responsible for drug abuse, education, prevention, treatment, and law enforcement.

(c) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—Not later than 90 days after the date of enactment of this title, the Secretary of State shall report to the Congress on the progress being made in establishing a commission in accordance with subsection (a).

SEC. 163. OPIUM PRODUCTION IN PAKISTAN.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) the production of opium in Pakistan is expected to triple in the 1985-1986 growing season, posing an increased threat to the health and welfare of the people of Pakistan and the people of the United States; and

(2) the current eradication program in Pakistan, which employs manual eradication of opium poppies, has faltered.

(b) NEED FOR MORE EFFECTIVE DRUG CONTROL PROGRAM.—The Congress urges that the Government of Pakistan adopt and implement a comprehensive narcotics control program which would provide for more effective prosecution of drug traffickers, increased interdiction, and aerial eradication of opium poppies.

(c) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—The Secretary of State shall report to the Congress not later than 60 days after the date of enactment of this title with respect to the adoption and implementation by the Government of Pakistan of a comprehensive narcotics control program in accordance with subsection (b).

SEC. 164. OPIUM PRODUCTION IN IRAN, AFGHANISTAN, AND LAOS.

The Congress calls on the President to instruct the United States Ambassador to the United Nations to request that the United Nations Secretary General raise with delegations to the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking the problem of illicit drug production in Iran, Afghanistan, and Laos, the largest opium poppy producing countries which do not have narcotics control programs.

TITLE II—COMMITTEE ON ARMED SERVICES

SEC. 201. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "Defense Narcotics Act of 1986".

SEC. 202. POLICY.

It is the sense of Congress that the President should—

(1) apply the full measure of the executive power of the President against the introduction of controlled substances into the United States; and

(2) to that end, should take such steps as may be necessary and appropriate (including the deployment of radar, aircraft, and military personnel) to expand the role of the Armed Forces in the war on illegal drugs.

SEC. 203. DRUG ENFORCEMENT EQUIPMENT.

(a) AMOUNTS AUTHORIZED.—The Secretary of Defense shall acquire aircraft and equipment as follows for enhancement of authorized drug enforcement assistance activities of the Department:

(1) Blackhawk helicopters in the amount of $40,000,000.

(2) Four aircraft configured with the AN/APS-138 radar in the amount of $83,000,000.

(3) Seven radar aerostats in the amount of $90,000,000.

(b) SOURCE OF FUNDS.—Funds for the purpose of subsection (a) shall be derived as the Secretary determines from—

(1) amounts appropriated or otherwise made available to the Department of Defense for fiscal year 1987; and

(2) amounts appropriated or otherwise made available to the Department of Defense for any prior fiscal year and which remain available for obligation.

(c) LOAN OF EQUIPMENT TO LAW ENFORCEMENT AGENCIES.—The Secretary of Defense shall make the aircraft and radar aerostats acquired under subsection (a) available to agencies of the United States designated by the Chairman of the National Drug Enforcement Policy Board established by the National Narcotics Act of 1984. Such aircraft and radar aerostats shall be made available subject to the provisions of chapter 18 of title 10, United States Code.

(d) LIMITATION ON PROCUREMENT.—Amounts appropriated or otherwise made available to the Department of Defense for procurement for fiscal year 1987 or any prior fiscal year may be obligated for equipment for enhancement of authorized drug enforcement activities of the Department of Defense under subsection (a) or any other provision of law only if the equipment—

(1) is fully supportable within the existing service support system of the Department of Defense; and

(2) reasonably relates to an existing military, war reserve, or mobilization requirement.

SEC. 204. COAST GUARD ACTIVITIES.

(a) FUNDING FOR PERSONNEL ON NAVAL VESSELS.—(1) Of the funds appropriated for operation and maintenance for the Navy for fiscal year 1987, the sum of $15,000,000 shall be transferred to the Secretary of Transportation and shall be available only for members of the Coast Guard assigned to duty as provided in section 379 of title 10, United States Code (as added by subsection (b)).

(2) The active duty military strength level for the Coast Guard for fiscal year 1987 is hereby increased by 500 above any number otherwise provided by law.

(b) ENHANCED DRUG INTERDICTION ASSISTANCE.—(1) Chapter 18 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"§ 379. Assignment of Coast Guard personnel to naval vessels for law enforcement purposes

"(a) The Secretary of Defense and the Secretary of Transportation shall provide that there be assigned on board appropriate surface naval vessels at sea in a drug-interdiction area members of the Coast Guard who are trained in law enforcement and have powers of the Coast Guard under title 14, including the power to make arrests and to carry out searches and seizures.

"(b) Members of the Coast Guard assigned to duty on board naval vessels under this section shall perform such law enforcement functions (including drug-interdiction functions)—

"(1) as may be agreed upon by the Secretary of Defense and the Secretary of Transportation; and

"(2) as are otherwise within the jurisdiction of the Coast Guard.

"(c) No fewer than 500 active duty personnel of the Coast Guard shall be assigned each fiscal year to duty under this section. However, if at any time the Secretary of Transportation, after consultation with the Secretary of Defense, determines that there are insufficient naval vessels available for purposes of this section, such personnel may be assigned other duty at other units involved in the enforcement of laws listed in section 374(a)(1) of this title.

"(d) In this section, the term 'drug-interdiction area' means an area outside the land area of the United States in which the Secretary of Defense and the Attorney General jointly determine that activities involving smuggling of drugs into the United States are ongoing.

"(e) In this section, a reference to the Secretary of Transportation applies only when the Coast Guard is operating as a service in the Department of Transportation.".

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by adding at the end the following new item:

"379. Assignment of Coast Guard personnel to naval vessels for law enforcement purposes.".

(3) Effective on October 1, 1986, section 1421 of the Department of Defense Authorization Act, 1986 (Public Law 99-145; 99 Stat. 750), is repealed.

SEC. 205. DRUG INTERDICTION ASSISTANCE TO CIVILIAN LAW ENFORCEMENT OFFICIALS.

Section 374(a) of title 10, United States Code, is amended by striking out the period at the end and inserting in lieu thereof "or with respect to any assistance that such an agency may be authorized to provide to officials of foreign nations who are involved in the enforcement of similar laws.".

SEC. 206. MILITARY PERSONNEL.

(a) STUDY OF APPROPRIATE ROLE OF MILITARY PERSONNEL.—Not later than March 1, 1987, the President shall submit to Congress a report describing the appropriate role of the active and reserve components of the Armed Forces under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of Defense in interdicting illegal drugs and otherwise participating in the national effort to control and reduce drug abuse.

(b) COAST GUARD RESERVE.—The Selected Reserve of the Coast Guard Reserve shall be programmed to attain a strength as of September 30, 1987, of not less than 14,500. Of such number, not less than 1,500 shall be used to augment units of the Coast Guard assigned to drug interdiction missions.

(c) HEALTH PROMOTION PROGRAM.—(1) The Secretary of Defense shall establish a comprehensive anti-drug abuse health promotion program for members of the Armed Forces and civilian personnel of the Department of Defense and their families. Such program shall include education programs concerning controlled substances as a major component of basic training.

(2) The Secretary shall direct that the Department of Defense Dependents Schools System establish a drug abuse education curriculum and programs to be provided throughout elementary and secondary school.

(d) DRIVING UNDER INFLUENCE OF DRUGS.—Section 911 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by inserting "or while under the influence of a substance described in section 912a(b) of this title (article 112a(b))" after "manner,".

TITLE III—COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS

SEC. 300. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "Drug Smuggling Enforcement Act of 1986".

Subtitle A—Amendments to the Tariff Act of 1930

PART I—GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 301. REFERENCE.

Unless otherwise provided, whenever in this subtitle an amendment or repeal is expressed in terms of an amendment to, or repeal of, a title, part, section, subsection, or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a title, part, section, subsection, or other provision of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1401 et seq.).

SEC. 302. PROHIBITION ON IMPORTATION OF DRUG PARAPHERNALIA.

Part 1 of title III (19 U.S.C. 1301 et seq.) is amended by inserting after section 306 the following new section:

"SEC. 306A. DRUG PARAPHERNALIA: IMPORTATION PROHIBITED.

"(a) PROHIBITION.—The importation into the United States of any drug paraphernalia is prohibited; except that drug paraphernalia may be imported into the United States for medical or scientific needs under such regulations as the Attorney General may prescribe.

"(b) DEFINITION.—As used in subsection (a), the term 'drug paraphernalia' means any of the following articles, whether assembled or disassembled, and parts thereof:

"(1) Bongs, bong bowls, cocaine free base kits, miniature spoons with level capacities of one-tenth cubic centimeter or less, cocaine straws or snorters, cocaine screens or strainers, marijuana isomerization devices, marijuana separation gins, marijuana growing kits, chillums, ice or chiller pipes, air-driven pipes, electric pipes, chamber pipes, carburetor pipes, water pipes, pipes with glass, pyrex, metal, or stone bowls (except meerschaum), wired cigarette rolling papers, smoking masks, and smoking screens.

"(2) Any equipment, product, or material of any kind that is specifically designed for use in planting, propagating, cultivating, growing, harvesting, manufacturing, compounding, converting, producing, processing, preparing, cutting, testing, analyzing, packaging, repacking, storing, containing, concealing, or injecting, ingesting, inhaling or otherwise introducing into the human body, marijuana, hashish, hashish oil, or cocaine.".

SEC. 303. DEFINITIONS.

Section 401 (19 U.S.C. 1401) is amended—

(1) by inserting ", and monetary instruments as defined in section 5312 of title 31, United States Code" before the period in subsection (c); and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(m) CONTROLLED SUBSTANCE.—The term 'controlled substance' has the meaning given that term in section 102(6) of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 802(6)). For purposes of this Act, any controlled substance is merchandise the importation of which into the United States is prohibited, unless the importation is authorized under—

"(1) an appropriate license or permit; or

"(2) the Controlled Substances Import and Export Act.".

SEC. 304. REPORT OF ARRIVAL OF VESSELS, VEHICLES, AND AIRCRAFT.

Section 433 (19 U.S.C. 1433) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 433. REPORT OF ARRIVAL OF VESSELS, VEHICLES, AND AIRCRAFT.

"(a) VESSEL ARRIVAL.—(1) Immediately upon the arrival at any port or place within the United States or the Virgin Islands of—

"(A) any vessel from a foreign port or place;

"(B) any foreign vessel from a domestic port; or

"(C) any vessel of the United States carrying bonded merchandise, or foreign merchandise for which entry has not been made; the master of the vessel shall report the arrival at the nearest customs facility or such other place as the Secretary may designate.

"(2) The Secretary may by regulation—

"(A) prescribe the manner in which arrivals are to be reported under paragraph (1); and

"(B) extend the time in which reports of arrival must be made, but not later than 24 hours after arrival.

"(b) VEHICLE ARRIVAL.—(1) Vehicles may arrive in the United States only at border crossing points designated by the Secretary.

"(2) Except as otherwise authorized by the Secretary, immediately upon the arrival of any vehicle in the United States at a border crossing point, the person in charge of the vehicle shall—

"(A) report the arrival; and

"(B) present the vehicle, and all persons and merchandise (including baggage) on board, for inspection; to the customs officer at the customs facility designated for that crossing point.

"(c) AIRCRAFT ARRIVAL.—The pilot of any aircraft arriving in the United States or the Virgin Islands from any foreign airport or place shall comply with such advance notification, arrival reporting, and landing requirements as the Secretary may by regulation prescribe.

"(d) PRESENTATION OF DOCUMENTATION.—The master, person in charge of a vehicle, or aircraft pilot shall, incident to the reporting of arrival under this section, present to customs officers such documents, papers, or manifests as the Secretary may by regulation prescribe.

"(e) PROHIBITION ON DEPARTURES AND DISCHARGE.—Unless otherwise authorized by law, after arriving in the United States or the Virgin Islands a vessel or aircraft may not, and after arriving in the United States a vehicle may not—

"(1) depart from the port, place, or airport of arrival; or

"(2) discharge any passenger or merchandise (including baggage); except in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary.".

SEC. 305. PENALTIES FOR ARRIVAL, REPORTING, ENTRY, AND DEPARTURE VIOLATIONS.

(a) FOR VIOLATIONS OF ARRIVAL, REPORTING, AND ENTRY REQUIREMENTS.—Section 436 (19 U.S.C. 1436) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 436. PENALTIES FOR VIOLATIONS OF THE ARRIVAL, REPORTING, AND ENTRY REQUIREMENTS.

"(a) UNLAWFUL ACTS.—It is unlawful—

"(1) to fail to comply with section 433(a), (b), or (c);

"(2) to present any forged, altered, or false document, paper, or manifest to a customs officer under section 433(d) without revealing the facts;

"(3) to violate section 433(e);

"(4) to fail to make entry as required by section 434, 435, or 644 of this Act or section 1109 of the Federal Aviation Act (49 U.S.C. App. 1509); or

"(5) to fail to comply with, or violate, any regulation prescribed under any section referred to in paragraphs (1) through (4).

"(b) CIVIL PENALTY.—Any master, person in charge of a vehicle, or aircraft pilot who violates any provision of subsection (a) is liable for a civil penalty of $5,000 for the first violation, and $10,000 for each subsequent violation, and any conveyance used in connection with any such violation is subject to seizure and forfeiture.

"(c) CRIMINAL PENALTY.—In addition to being liable for a civil penalty under subsection (b), any master, person in charge of a vehicle, or aircraft pilot who intentionally violates any provision of subsection (a) is, upon conviction, liable for a fine in accordance with title 18, United States Code, or imprisonment for 1 year, or both; except that if the vessel, vehicle, or aircraft has on board, or is discovered to have had on board, any merchandise (other than sea stores or the equivalent for conveyances other than vessels) the importation of which into the United States is prohibited, such individual is liable for a fine in accordance with title 18, United States Code, or imprisonment for not more than 5 years, or both.

"(d) ADDITIONAL CIVIL PENALTY.—If any merchandise (other than sea stores or the equivalent for conveyances other than a vessel) is imported or brought into the United in or aboard a conveyance which was not properly reported or entered, the master, person in charge of a vehicle, or aircraft pilot shall be liable for a civil penalty equal to the value of the merchandise and the merchandise may be seized and forfeited unless properly entered by the importer or consignee. If the merchandise consists of any controlled substance listed in section 584, the master, individual in charge of a vehicle, or pilot shall be liable to the penalties prescribed in that section.".

(b) INCREASE IN PENALTIES FOR DEPARTURE BEFORE REPORT OR ENTRY.—Section 585 (19 U.S.C. 1585) is amended—

(1) by striking out "shall be liable to a penalty of $5,000," after "vessel"; and

(2) by striking out "$500" and inserting "$5,000 for the first violation, and $10,000 for each subsequent violation,".

Section 454 (19 U.S.C. 1454), is amended by striking out "$500 for each" and inserting "$1,000 for the first passenger and $500 for each additional".

SEC. 307. REPORTING REQUIREMENTS FOR INDIVIDUALS.

(a) AMENDMENT.—Section 459 (19 U.S.C. 1459) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 459. REPORTING REQUIREMENTS FOR INDIVIDUALS.

"(a) INDIVIDUALS ARRIVING OTHER THAN BY CONVEYANCE.—Except as otherwise authorized by the Secretary, individuals arriving in the United States other than by vessel, vehicle, or aircraft shall—

"(1) enter the United States only at a border crossing point designated by the Secretary; and

"(2) immediately—

"(A) report the arrival, and

"(B) present themselves, and all articles accompanying them for inspection; to the customs officer at the customs facility designated for that crossing point.

"(b) INDIVIDUALS ARRIVING BY REPORTED CONVEYANCE.—Except as otherwise authorized by the Secretary, passengers and crew members aboard a conveyance the arrival in the United States of which was made or reported in accordance with section 433 or 644 of this Act or section 1109 of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958, or in accordance with applicable regulations, shall remain aboard the conveyance until authorized to depart the conveyance by the appropriate customs officer. Upon departing the conveyance, the passengers and crew members shall immediately report to the designated customs facility with all articles accompanying them.

"(c) INDIVIDUALS ARRIVING BY UNREPORTED CONVEYANCE.—Except as otherwise authorized by the Secretary, individuals aboard a conveyance the arrival in the United States of which was not made or reported in accordance with the laws or regulations referred to in subsection (b) shall immediately notify customs and report their arrival, together with appropriate information concerning the conveyance on or in which they arrived, and present their property for customs examination and inspection.

"(d) DEPARTURE FROM DESIGNATED CUSTOMS FACILITIES.—Except as otherwise authorized by the Secretary, any person required to report to a designated customs facility under subsection (a), (b), or (c) may not depart that facility until authorized to do so by the appropriate customs officer.

"(e) UNLAWFUL ACTS.—It is unlawful—

"(1) to fail to comply with subsection (a), (b), or (c);

"(2) to present any forged, altered, or false documents or paper to a customs officer under subsection (a), (b), or (c) without revealing the facts;

"(3) to violate subsection (d); or

"(4) to fail to comply with, or violate, any regulation prescribed to carry out subsection (a), (b), (c), or (d).

"(f) CIVIL PENALTY.—Any individual who violates any provision of subsection (e) is liable for a civil penalty of $5,000 for the first violation, and $10,000 for each subsequent violation.

"(g) CRIMINAL PENALTY.—In addition to being liable for a civil penalty under subsection (f), any individual who intentionally violates any provision of subsection (e) is, upon conviction, liable for a fine in accordance with title 18, United States Code, or imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both.".

(b) REPEAL.—Section 460 is repealed.

SEC. 308. EXAMINATION OF BOOKS AND WITNESSES.

Section 509 (19 U.S.C. 1509) is amended—

(1) by striking out ", required to be kept under section 508 of this Act," in subsection (a)(2) and inserting ", as defined in subsection (c)(1)(A),"; and

(2) by amending subsection (c)(1)(A) to read as follows:

"(A) The term 'records' includes statements, declarations, or documents—

"(i) required to be kept under section 508; or

"(ii) regarding which there is probable cause to believe that they pertain to merchandise the importation of which into the United States is prohibited.".

SEC. 311. AVIATION SMUGGLING.

Part V of title IV is amended by adding after section 589 the following new section:

"SEC. 590. AVIATION SMUGGLING.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—It is unlawful for the pilot of any aircraft to transport, or for any individual on board any aircraft to possess, merchandise knowing, or intending, that the merchandise will be introduced into the United States contrary to law.

"(b) AT SEA TRANSFER OF PROHIBITED MERCHANDISE BETWEEN UNITED STATES CONVEYANCES.—It is unlawful for any person to transfer, unless the transfer is authorized by the Secretary, prohibited merchandise on the high seas or in the customs waters between—

"(1) an aircraft that is owned by a citizen of the United States or is registered in the United States; and

"(2) a vessel of the United States as defined in section 3(b) of the Anti-Smuggling Act (19 U.S.C 1703(b)).

"(c) OTHER AT SEA TRANSFERS OF PROHIBITED MERCHANDISE.—It is unlawful for any person to transfer, unless the transfer is authorized by the Secretary, prohibited merchandise on the high seas or in the customs waters between any aircraft and vessel, regardless of the nationality of either, with intent that such merchandise be introduced into the United States contrary to law.

"(d) CIVIL PENALTIES.—Any person who violates subsection (a), (b), or (c) is liable for a civil penalty equal to twice the value of the prohibited merchandise involved in the violation, but not less than $10,000.

"(e) CRIMINAL PENALTIES.—In addition to being liable for a civil penalty under subsection (d), any person who intentionally violates subsection (a), (b), or (c) is, upon conviction—

"(1) liable for a fine in accordance with title 18, United States Code, or imprisonment for not more than 5 years, or both, if none of the prohibited merchandise involved was a controlled substance; or

"(2) liable for a fine in accordance with title 18, United States Code, or imprisonment for not more than 20 years, or both, if any of the prohibited merchandise involved was a controlled substance.

"(f) SEIZURE.—(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), a vessel or aircraft used in connection with, or in aiding or facilitating, any violation of subsection (a), (b), or (c), whether or not any person is charged in connection with such violation, may be seized and forfeited in accordance with the customs laws.

"(2) Paragraph (1) does not apply to a vessel or aircraft operated as a common carrier.

"(g) DEFINITION.—As used in this section, the term 'prohibited merchandise' means merchandise the importation of which into the United States is prohibited.

"(h) PRESUMPTIONS AND PRIMA FACIE EVIDENCE.—Any of the following acts, if engaged in within 250 miles of the territorial sea of the United States, shall—

"(1) for purposes of imposing civil penalties under subsection (d) for violations of subsection (c), be presumed to constitute circumstances indicating that the intent of the transfer is to make it possible for the merchandise, or any part thereof, to be introduced into the United States contrary to law; and

"(2) for purposes of subsection (f) and section 595a, be prima facie evidence that an aircraft or vessel was used in connection with, or in aiding or facilitating, a violation of subsection (a), (b), or (c) or section 595a, as the case may be:

"(A) The operation of an aircraft or a vessel without lights during such times as lights are required to be displayed under applicable law or regulation.

"(B) The presence on an aircraft of an auxiliary fuel tank which is not installed in accordance with applicable law or regulation.

"(C) Falsely identifying the vessel by name or country of registration, or the aircraft by registration number and country of registration, when requested to do so by a customs officer or other government authority.

"(D) The external display of false registration numbers, false country of registration, or false vessel name.

"(E) The presence on board of unmanifested merchandise, the importation of which is prohibited or restricted.

"(F) The presence on board of controlled substances which are not manifested or which are not accompanied by the permits or licenses required under Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs or other international treaty.

"(G) The presence of any compartment or equipment which is built or fitted out for smuggling.

"(H) The failure of a vessel to stop when hailed by a customs officer or other government authority.".

SEC. 312. SEIZURES.

Section 594 (19 U.S.C. 1594) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 594. SEIZURE OF CONVEYANCES.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—Whenever—

"(1) any vessel, vehicle, or aircraft; or

"(2) the owner or operator, or the master, pilot, conductor, driver, or other person in charge of a vessel, vehicle, or aircraft; is subject to a penalty for violation of the customs laws, the conveyance involved shall be held for the payment of such penalty and may be seized and forfeited and sold in accordance with the customs laws. The proceeds of sale, if any, in excess of the assessed penalty and expenses of seizing, maintaining and selling the property shall be held for the account of any interested party.

"(b) EXCEPTIONS.—No conveyance used by any person as a common carrier in the transaction of business as a common carrier is subject to seizure and forfeiture under the customs laws for violations relating to merchandise contained—

"(1) on the person;

"(2) in baggage belonging to and accompanying a passenger being lawfully transported on such conveyance; or

"(3) in the cargo of the conveyance if the cargo is listed on the manifest and marks, numbers, weights and quantities of the outer packages or containers agree with the manifest; unless the owner or operator, or the master, pilot, conductor, driver or other person in charge participated in, or had knowledge of, the violation, or was grossly negligent in preventing or discovering the violation.

"(c) PROHIBITED MERCHANDISE ON CONVEYANCE.—If any merchandise the importation of which into the United States is prohibited is found to be, or to have been—

"(1) on board a conveyance used as a common carrier in the transaction of business as a common carrier in one or more packages or containers—

"(A) that are not manifested (or not shown on bills of lading or airway bills); or

"(B) whose marks, numbers, weight or quantities disagree with the manifest (or with the bills of lading or airway bills); or

"(2) concealed in or on such a conveyance, but not in the cargo;

the conveyance may be seized, and after investigation, forfeited unless it is established that neither the owner or operator, master, pilot, nor any other employee responsible for maintaining and insuring the accuracy of the cargo manifest knew, or by the exercise of the highest degree of care and diligence could have known, that such merchandise was on board.

"(d) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) The phrase 'owner or operator' includes—

"(A) a lessee or person operating a conveyance under a rental agreement or charter party; and

"(B) the officers and directors of a corporation;

"(C) station managers and similar supervisory ground personnel employed by airlines;

"(D) one or more partners of a partnership;

"(E) representatives of the owner or operator in charge of the passenger or cargo operations at a particular location; and

"(F) and other persons with similar responsibilities.

"(2) The term 'master' and similar terms relating to the person in charge of a conveyance includes the purser or other person on the conveyance who is responsible for maintaining records relating to the cargo transported in the conveyance.

"(e) COSTS AND EXPENSES OF SEIZURE.—When a common carrier has been seized in accordance with the provisions of subsection (c) and it is subsequently determined that a violation of such subsection occurred but that the vessel will be released, the conveyance is liable for the costs and expenses of the seizure and detention.".

SEC. 313. SEARCHES AND SEIZURES.

Section 595(a) (19 U.S.C. 1595(a)) is amended to read as follows:

"(a) WARRANT.—(1) If any officer or person authorized to make searches and seizures has probable cause to believe the presence in any dwelling house, store, or other building or place of—

"(A) any merchandise upon which the duties have not been paid, or which has been otherwise brought into the United States unlawfully;

"(B) any property which is subject to forfeiture under any provision of law enforced or administered by the Customs Service; or

"(C) subject to the limitation in paragraph (2), any document, container, wrapping, or other article which is evidence of a violation of any law enforced or administered by the Customs Service, he may make application, under oath, to any justice of the peace, to any municipal, county, State, or Federal judge, or to any Federal magistrate, and shall thereupon be entitled to a warrant to enter such dwelling house in the daytime only, or such store or other place at night or by day, and to search for and seize such merchandise or other article described in the warrant; except that if any house, store, or other building or place in which any merchandise or other article subject to forfeiture is found is upon, or within ten feet of, the boundary line between the United States and a foreign country, such portion thereof as is within the United States may be taken down or removed.

"(2) In the case of violations of section 592, paragraph (1)(C) applies only to violations in which there is probable cause to believe that fraud is involved.".

SEC. 314. FORFEITURES.

Section 596 (19 U.S.C. 1595a) is amended—

(1) by striking out "the proviso to" in subsection (a) and inserting "subsection (b) or (c) of";

(2) by striking out "shall" in subsection (a) and inserting "may"; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c) Any merchandise that is introduced or attempted to be introduced into the United States contrary to law (other than in violation of section 592) may be seized and forfeited.".

SEC. 315. DISPOSITION OF PROCEEDS OF FORFEITED PROPERTY.

Section 613 (19 U.S.C. 1613) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(c) TREATMENT OF DEPOSITS.—If property is seized by the Secretary under law enforced or administered by the Customs Service, or otherwise acquired under section 605 of this Act, and relief from the forfeiture is granted by the Secretary, or his designee, upon terms requiring the deposit or retention of a monetary amount in lieu of the forfeiture, the amount recovered shall be treated in the same manner as the proceeds of sale of a forfeited item.

"(d) EXPENSES.—In any judicial or administrative proceeding to forfeit property under any law enforced or administered by the Customs Service or the Coast Guard, the seizure, storage, and other expenses related to the forfeiture that are incurred by the Customs Service or the Coast Guard after the seizure, but before the institution of, or during, the proceedings, shall be a priority claim in the same manner as the court costs and the expenses of the Federal marshal.".

SEC. 316. COMPENSATION TO INFORMERS.

Section 619 (19 U.S.C. 1619) is amended—

(1) by striking out "of 25 per centum" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "of not more than 25 percent";

(2) by striking out "which shall be paid out of any appropriations available for the collection of the revenue from customs" in the first sentence;

(3) by striking out the fourth sentence;

(4) by inserting "as an expense of such forfeiture" after "Treasury under the provisions of this section" in the third sentence;

(5) by inserting the following sentence after the second sentence: "Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any amount paid as an award of compensation under this section shall be paid from the net amount recovered before such net amount is deposited in the general fund of the Treasury or the Customs Forfeiture Fund, as appropriate."; and

(6) by adding at the end thereof the following sentence: "Regardless if any duty is recovered, any fine or penalty is paid, or any property is forfeited to the United States, the Secretary may, based upon the value of the information, award not to exceed $100,000 to any person not an officer or employee of the United States who discovers and reports to an appropriate officer original information concerning any violation, or plan to violate, any customs law or navigation law.".

SEC. 317. COMMENCEMENT OF ACTIONS.

Section 621 (19 U.S.C. 1621) is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following sentence: "For purposes of this section, an action to recover a pecuniary penalty is considered to have been commenced when the appropriate customs officer issues a penalty notice.".

SEC. 318. FOREIGN LANDING CERTIFICATES.

Section 622 (19 U.S.C. 1622) is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof the following: ", or to comply with international obligations".

SEC. 319. EXCHANGE OF INFORMATION WITH FOREIGN AGENCIES.

Part V of title IV is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section 628:

"SEC. 628. EXCHANGE OF INFORMATION.

"The Secretary may by regulation authorize customs officers to exchange information or documents with foreign customs and law enforcement agencies if the Secretary reasonably believes the exchange of information is necessary to—

"(1) insure compliance with any law or regulation enforced or administered by the Customs Service;

"(2) verify the accuracy of information provided to the Department of the Treasury or the Customs Service that is used in making determinations concerning the classification, value, country of origin, quota allocability, admissibility, or other characteristics of imported merchandise that relevant to the laws and regulations enforced or administered by Customs Service;

"(3) administer or enforce multilateral or bilateral agreements to which the United States is a party;

"(4) assist in investigative, judicial and quasi-judicial proceedings in the United States; and

"(5) an action comparable to any of those described in paragraphs (1) through (4) undertaken by a foreign customs or law enforcement agency, or in relation to a proceeding in a foreign country.".

SEC. 320. INSPECTIONS AND PRECLEARANCE IN FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

Part V of title IV is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 629. INSPECTIONS AND PRECLEARANCE IN FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—When authorized by treaty or executive agreement, the Secretary may station customs officers in foreign countries for the purpose of examining persons and merchandise prior to their arrival in the United States.

"(b) FUNCTIONS AND DUTIES.—Customs officers stationed in a foreign country under subsection (a) may exercise such functions and perform such duties (including inspections, searches, seizures and arrests) as may be permitted by the treaty, agreement or law of the country in which they are stationed.

"(c) COMPLIANCE.—The Secretary may by regulation require compliance with the customs laws and regulations in a foreign country and, in such a case the customs laws and other civil and criminal laws of the United States relating to the importation of merchandise, filing of false statements, and the unlawful removal of merchandise from customs custody shall apply in the same manner as if the foreign station is a port of entry within the customs territory of the United States.

"(d) SEIZURES.—When authorized by treaty, agreement or foreign law, merchandise which is subject to seizure or forfeiture under United States law may be seized in a foreign country and transported under customs custody to the customs territory to the United States to be proceeded against under the customs law.

"(e) STATIONING OF FOREIGN CUSTOMS OFFICERS IN THE UNITED STATES.—The Secretary of State, in coordination with the Secretary, may enter into agreements with any foreign country authorizing the stationing in the United States of customs officials of that country (if similar privileges are extended by that country to United States officials) for the purpose of insuring that persons and merchandise going directly to that country from the United States comply with the customs and other laws of that country governing the importation of merchandise. Any foreign customs official stationed in the United States under this subsection may exercise such functions and perform such duties as United States officials may be authorized to perform in that foreign country under reciprocal agreement.

"(f) APPLICATION OF CERTAIN LAWS.—When customs officials of a foreign country are stationed in the United States in accordance with subsection (e), and if similar provisions are applied to United States officials stationed in that country—

"(1) sections 111 and 1114 of title 18, United States Code, shall apply as if the officials were designated in those sections;

"(2) any person who in any matter before a foreign customs official stationed in the United States knowingly and willfully falsifies, conceals, or covers up by any trick, scheme, or device a material fact, or makes any false, fictitious or fraudulent statements or representations, or makes or uses any false writing or document knowing the same to contain any false, fictitious or fraudulent statement or entry, is liable for a fine in accordance with title 18, United States Code, or imprisonment for not more than 5 years, or both.

SEC. 321. INVESTIGATIONS; OATHS; SUBPOENAS; ETC.

(a) AMENDMENT.—Part V of title IV is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 630. INVESTIGATIONS; OATHS; SUBPOENAS; WITNESSES; EVIDENCE; PRODUCTION OF RECORDS; TERRITORIAL LIMITS; FEES AND MILEAGE OF WITNESSES.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—For the purpose of any investigation which, in the opinion of the Secretary, is necessary and proper to—

"(1) the reporting of monetary instruments, transactions, or transportation under chapter 53 of subchapter II of title 31, United States Code; or the Secretary may administer oaths and affirmations, subpoena witnesses, compel their attendance, take evidence, and require the production of records (including books, papers, documents, and tangible things which constitute or contain evidence) relevant or material to the investigation. The attendance of witnesses and the production of records may be required from any place within the customs territory of the United States, except that a witness shall not be required to appear at any hearing distant more than 100 miles from the place where he was served with subpoena. Witnesses summoned by the Secretary shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are paid witnesses in the courts of the United States. Oaths and affirmations may be made at any place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States.

"(2) the enforcement of the Bank Secrecy Act (Public Law 91-508);

"(b) SERVICE OF SUBPOENA; PROOF OF SERVICE.—A subpoena of the Secretary may be served by any person designated in the subpoena to serve it. Service upon a natural person may be made by personal delivery of the subpoena to him. Service may be made upon a domestic or foreign corporation or upon a partnership or other unincorporated association which is subject to suit under a common name, by delivering the subpoena to an officer, a managing or general agent, or to any other agent authorized by appointment or by law to receive service of process. The affidavit of the person serving the subpoena entered on a true copy thereof by the person serving it shall be proof of service.

"(c) CONTEMPT PROCEEDINGS.—In case of contumacy by, or refusal to obey a subpoena issued to, any person, the Secretary of the Treasury may invoke the aid of any court of the United States within the jurisdiction of which the investigation is carried on or of which the subpoenaed person is an inhabitant, carries on business or may be found, to compel compliance with the subpoena of the Secretary. The court may issue an order requiring the subpoenaed person to appear before the Secretary of the Treasury there to produce records, if so ordered, or to give testimony touching the matter under investigation and to pay the costs of the proceeding. Any failure to obey the order of the court may be punished by the court as a contempt thereof. All process in any such case may be served in the judicial district whereof the subpoenaed person is an inhabitant or where he may be found.".

(b) REPEAL.—The Act entitled "An Act to authorize subpoenas in connection with the enforcement of the narcotic laws, and for other purposes", approved August 11, 1955 (21 U.S.C. 967-969), is repealed.

SEC. 322. UNDERCOVER INVESTIGATIVE OPERATIONS OF THE CUSTOMS SERVICE.

(a) CERTIFICATION REQUIRED FOR EXEMPTION OF UNDERCOVER OPERATIONS FROM CERTAIN LAWS.—With respect to any undercover investigative operation of the United States Customs Service (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "Service") which is necessary for the detection and prosecution of offenses against the United States which are within the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Treasury—

(1) sums authorized to be appropriated for the Service may be used—

(A) to purchase property, buildings, and other facilities, and to lease space, within the United States, the District of Columbia, and the territories and possessions of the United States without regard to—

(i) sections 1341 and 3324 of title 31, United States Code,

(ii) sections 3732(a) and 3741 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (41 U.S.C. 11(a) and 22),

(iii) section 305 of the Act of June 30, 1949 (63 Stat. 396; 41 U.S.C. 255),

(iv) the third undesignated paragraph under the heading "Miscellaneous" of the Act of March 3, 1877 (19 Stat. 370; 40 U.S.C. 34), and

(v) section 304(a) and (c) of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 (41 U.S.C. 254(a) and (c)), and

(B) to establish or to acquire proprietary corporations or business entities as part of the undercover operation, and to operate such corporations or business entities on a commercial basis, without regard to sections 9102 and 9103 of title 31, United States Code;

(2) sums authorized to be appropriated for the Service and the proceeds from the undercover operation, may be deposited in banks or other financial institutions without regard to the provisions of section 648 of title 18, United States Code, and section 3302 of title 31, United States Code; and

(3) the proceeds from the undercover operation may be used to offset necessary and reasonable expenses incurred in such operation without regard to the provisions of section 3302 of title 31, United States Code;

only upon the written certification of the Commissioner of Customs (or, if designated by the Commissioner the Deputy or an Assistant Commissioner) that any action authorized by paragraph (1), (2), or (3) of this subsection is necessary for the conduct of such undercover operation.

(b) LIQUIDATION OF CORPORATIONS AND BUSINESS ENTITIES.—If a corporation or business entity established or acquired as part of an undercover operation under paragraph (1)(B) of subsection (a) with a net value over $50,000 is to be liquidated, sold, or otherwise disposed of, the Service, as much in advance as the Commissioner or his designee determines is practicable, shall report the circumstances to the Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller General. The proceeds of the liquidation, sale, or other disposition, after obligations are met, shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

(c) DEPOSIT OF PROCEEDS.—As soon as the proceeds from an undercover investigative operation with respect to which an action is authorized and carried out under paragraphs (2) and (3) of subsection (a) are no longer necessary for the conduct of such operation, such proceeds or the balance of such proceeds remaining at the time shall be deposited into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

(d) AUDITS.—(1) The Customs Service shall conduct a detailed financial audit of each undercover investigative operation which is closed in each fiscal year, and

(A) submit the results of the audit in writing to the Secretary of the Treasury; and

(B) not later than 180 days after such undercover operation is closed, submit a report to the Congress concerning such audit.

(2) The Customs Service shall also submit a report annually to the Congress specifying as to its undercover investigative operations—

(A) the number, by programs, of undercover investigative operations pending as of the end of the 1-year period for which such report is submitted;

(B) the number, by programs, of undercover investigative operations commenced in the 1-year period preceding the period for which such report is submitted; and

(C) the number, by programs, of undercover investigative operations closed in the 1-year period preceding the period for which such report is submitted and, with respect to each such closed undercover operation, the results obtained and any civil claims made with respect thereto.

(e) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of subsection (d)—

(1) The term "closed" refers to the earliest point in time at which—

(A) all criminal proceedings (other than appeals) are concluded, or

(B) covert activities are concluded, whichever occurs later.

(2) The term "employees" means employees, as defined in section 2105 of title 5 of the United States Code, of the Customs Service.

(3) The terms "undercover investigative operation" and "undercover operation" mean any undercover investigative operation of the Customs Service—

(A) in which—

(i) the gross receipts (excluding interest earned) exceed $50,000, or

(ii) expenditures (other than expenditures for salaries of employees) exceed $150,000; and

(B) which is exempt from section 3302 or 9102 of title 31, United States Code; except that subparagraphs (A) and (B) shall not apply with respect to the report required under paragraph (2) of subsection (d).

SEC. 323. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The amendments made by this part shall take effect on the 15th day after the date of the enactment of this Act. Any amendment made by this part that imposes or increases a civil or criminal penalty applies only with respect to violations committed on or after such 15th day.

PART II—CUSTOMS FORFEITURE FUND

SEC. 331. CUSTOMS FORFEITURE FUND.

(a) AMENDMENT.—Section 613a (19 U.S.C. 1613b) is amended—

(1) by amending subsection (a)—

(A) by striking out "1987" in the first sentence and inserting "1991";

(B) by inserting "(including investigative costs leading to seizures)" after "seizure" in paragraph (1);

(C) by inserting "and" after the semicolon at the end of paragraph (4);

(D) by striking out paragraph (5);

(E) by redesignating paragraph (6) as paragraph (5); and

(F) by amending the last sentence to read as follows:

"In addition to the purposes described in paragraphs (1) through (5), the fund is available for—

"(i) purchases by the Customs Service of evidence of—

"(I) smuggling of controlled substances, and

"(II) violations of the currency and foreign transaction reporting requirements of chapter 51 of title 31, United States Code, if there is a substantial probability that the violations of these requirements are related to the smuggling of controlled substances;

"(ii) the equipping for law enforcement functions of any vessel, vehicle, or aircraft available for official use by the Customs Service;

"(iii) the reimbursement, at the discretion of the Secretary, of private citizens for expenses incurred by them in cooperating with the Customs Service in investigations and undercover law enforcement operations; and

"(iv) the publicizing of the availability of rewards under section 619."; and

(2) by amending subsection (f) to read as follows:

"(f)(1) There are authorized to be appropriated from the fund for each of the fiscal years beginning with fiscal year 1987 not more than $20,000,000.

"(2) At the end of each of fiscal years 1987, 1988, 1989, and 1990, any amount in the fund in excess of $20,000,000 shall be deposited in the general fund of the Treasury. At the end of fiscal year 1991, any amount remaining in the fund shall be deposited in the general fund of the Treasury, and the fund shall cease to exist.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by subsection (a) shall take effect October 1, 1986.

Subtitle B—Customs Service Authorizations, Miscellaneous Customs Provisions, and Amendments to the Controlled Substances Import and Export Act

PART I—CUSTOMS SERVICE AUTHORIZATIONS

SEC. 341. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS FOR FISCAL YEAR 1987 FOR THE UNITED STATES CUSTOMS SERVICE.

Section 301(b) of the Customs Procedural Reform and Simplification Act of 1978 (19 U.S.C. 2075(b)) is amended as follows:

"(b)(1) There are authorized to be appropriated to the Department of the Treasury not to exceed $1,062,631,000 for the salaries and expenses of the United States Customs Service for fiscal year 1987; of which—

"(A) $749,131,000 is for salaries and expenses to maintain current operating levels, and includes such sums as may be necessary to complete the testing of the prototype of the automatic license plate reader program and to implement that program;

"(B) $99,300,000 is for the salaries and expenses of additional personnel to be used in carrying out drug enforcement activities; and

"(C) $214,200,000 is for the operation and maintenance of the air interdiction program of the Service, of which—

"(i) $137,000,000 is for additional aircraft, communications enhancements, and command, control, communications, and intelligence centers, and

"(ii) $350,000 is for a feasibility and application study for a low-level radar detection system in collaboration with the Los Alamos National Laboratory.

"(2) No part of any sum that is appropriated under the authority of paragraph (1) may be used to close any port of entry at which, during fiscal year 1986—

"(A) not less than 2,500 merchandise entries (including informal entries) were made; and

"(B) not less than $1,500,000 in customs revenues were assessed.".

PART II—MISCELLANEOUS CUSTOMS AMENDMENTS

SEC. 351. TREATMENT OF HOVERING VESSELS.

Section 201 of the Act of August 5, 1935 (19 U.S.C. 1432a) is amended by inserting after "hovering vessel" the following: "or has received merchandise while in the customs waters beyond the territorial sea or while on the high seas,".

SEC. 352. ASSISTANCE FOR CUSTOMS OFFICERS.

Section 3071 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (19 U.S.C. 507) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3071. (a) Any customs officer (as defined in section 401 of the Tariff Act of 1930) who needs assistance in making any arrest, search, or seizure that is authorized under any law that is enforced or administered by customs officers may, after identifying himself or herself as a customs officer, demand the assistance of any person. Any person who, without reasonable excuse, neglects or refuses to assist a customs officer after proper demand under this subsection is guilty of a misdemeanor and subject to a fine of not more than $1,000.

"(b) Any person, not an officer or employee of the United States, who renders assistance in good faith upon the request of a customs officer shall not be held liable for any civil damages as a result of the rendering of such assistance where the assisting person acts as an ordinary, reasonably prudent person would have acted under the same or similar circumstances.".

SEC. 353. RECREATIONAL VESSEL LICENSES.

Section 12109(b) of title 46, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following: "Such vessel must, however, comply with all customs requirements for reporting arrival under section 433 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1433) and all persons aboard such a pleasure vessel shall be subject to all applicable customs regulations.".

PART III—AMENDMENTS TO THE CONTROLLED SUBSTANCES IMPORT AND EXPORT ACT

SEC. 361. POSSESSION, MANUFACTURE, OR DISTRIBUTION FOR PURPOSES OF UNLAWFUL IMPORTATION.

Section 1009 of the Controlled Substances Import and Export Act (21 U.S.C. 959) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 1009. POSSESSION, MANUFACTURE, OR DISTRIBUTION FOR PURPOSES OF UNLAWFUL IMPORTATION.

"(a) It shall be unlawful for any person to manufacture or distribute a controlled substance in schedule I or III—

"(1) intending that such substance be unlawfully imported in the United States or into waters within a distance of twelve miles of its coast; or

"(2) knowing that such substance will be unlawfully imported into the United States or into waters within a distance of 12 miles of its coast.

"(b) It shall be unlawful for any United States citizen on board any aircraft, or any person on board an aircraft owned by a United States citizen or registered in the United States, to manufacture or distribute or possess with intent to manufacture or distribute a controlled substance.

"(c) This section is intended to reach acts of manufacture or distribution committed outside the territorial jurisdiction of the United States. Any person who violates this section shall be tried in the United States district court at the point of entry where such person enters the United States, or in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia.".

Subtitle C—Denial of Trade Benefits to Uncooperative Drug Source Nations

SEC. 371. SHORT TITLE.

This subtitle may be cited as the "Narcotics Control Trade Act".

SEC. 372. DETERMINATIONS REGARDING UNCOOPERATIVE DRUG SOURCE NATIONS.

(a) ANNUAL DETERMINATION.—The President, after taking into account the factors set forth in subsection (b), shall determine if any foreign country, during any fiscal year commencing after September 30, 1986—

(1) was a direct or indirect source of one or more illicit narcotic and psychotropic drugs and other controlled substances that is significantly affecting the United States; and

(2) did not cooperate with the United States Government in preventing narcotic and psychotropic drugs and other controlled substances from significantly affecting the United States.

(b) FACTORS.—For purposes of making a determination under subsection (a) regarding a foreign country, the President shall take into account the capabilities, effort, and progress of that country in—

(1) limiting legal narcotic crop production to levels required for legal purposes;

(2) licensing legal narcotic crop production and effectively controlling it to prevent significant diversion to the illicit traffic;

(3) limiting the legal manufacture of narcotic and psychotropic drugs and other controlled substances to levels required for medical purposes and effectively controlled manufacture to prevent significant diversion to the illicit traffic;

(4) detecting and eradicating the illicit cultivation of narcotic crops, and

(5) suppressing the illicit manufacture, processing, and traffic of narcotic and psychotropic drugs, under the control of the Single Convention of Narcotic Drugs of 1961 as amended by the 1972 Amending Protocol or the Controlled Substances Act of 1970 or the Convention on Psychotropic Substances of 1971.

(c) REPORT OF DETERMINATIONS.—The President shall submit to each House of the Congress the name of each foreign country regarding which an affirmative determination is made under subsection (a). The submission must be made on the first day on which both Houses are in session after the close of the fiscal year with respect to which the determination is made.

SEC. 373. TARIFF TREATMENT OF PRODUCTS OF UNCOOPERATIVE DRUG SOURCE NATIONS.

(a) REQUIRED ACTION BY PRESIDENT.—The President shall, with respect to each foreign country regarding which an affirmative determination is made under section 372(a) and to the extent considered necessary by the President to achieve the purposes of this subtitle—

(1) deny to any or all of the products of that country tariff treatment under the Generalized System of Preferences, the Caribbean Basin Economic Recovery Act, or any other law providing preferential tariff treatment;

(2) apply to any or all of the dutiable products of that country an additional duty at a rate not to exceed 50 percent ad valorem or the specific rate equivalent;

(3) apply to one or more duty-free products of that country a duty at a rate not to exceed 50 percent ad valorem; or

(4) take any combination of the actions described in paragraphs (1), (2), and (3).

(b) DURATION OF ACTION.—The action taken by the President under subsection (a) shall apply to the products of a foreign country that are entered, or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption, during the period that—

(1) begins on October 1 of the fiscal year occurring after the fiscal year with respect to which an affirmative determination regarding that country was made under section 372(a); and

(2) ends on the day on which the determination is cancelled under section 307.

SEC. 374. PROGRESS REPORTS.

The President shall include as a part of the annual report required under section 481(e)(1) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2291(e)(1)) an evaluation of progress that each major drug source nation has made during the reporting period in achieving the objectives set forth in section 372(b).

SEC. 375. CANCELLATION OF DETERMINATIONS.

If the President considers that a foreign country regarding which an affirmative determination was made under section 372(a) has made significant progress, and will continue to make progress, in remedying those acts, programs, or policies on which that determination was based, the President may cancel the determination. The President must immediately notify each House of Congress of each cancellation made under this section.

SEC. 376. DEFINITION.

For purposes of this subtitle, the term "narcotic and psychotropic drugs and other controlled substances" has the same meaning as is given that term in section 481(i)(3) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2291(i)(3)).

SEC. 377. CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.

(a) GENERALIZED SYSTEM OF PREFERENCES.—Section 502(b) of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2462(b)) is amended—

(1) by striking out paragraph (5);

(2) by redesignating paragraphs (6), (7), and (8) as paragraphs (5), (6), and (7); and

(3) by striking out "(5)," in the last sentence.

(b) CARIBBEAN BASIS ECONOMIC RECOVERY.—Section 212(b) of the Caribbean Basin Economic Recovery Act (19 U.S.C. 2702(b)) is amended—

(1) by inserting "and" after the semicolon at the end of paragraph (5);

(2) by striking out paragraph (6); and

(3) by redesignating paragraph (7) as paragraph (6).

TITLE IV—COMMITTEE ON MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES

SEC. 401. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "Coast Guard Drug Interdiction and Law Enforcement Act of 1986".

SEC. 402. FINDINGS AND POLICY.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—

(1) the Coast Guard is responsible for carrying out a variety of important missions in behalf of the security, safety, and economic and environmental well-being of the United States,

(2) among the high priority missions of the Coast Guard are search and rescue, maritime law enforcement, military readiness, and marine safety,

(3) there currently exists an imbalance between the responsibilities of the Coast Guard and the personnel and material resources available to the Coast Guard, and

(4) the Coast Guard will therefore require a significant increase in resources if it is to carry out its missions at a level the public expects and the national interest demands.

(b) POLICY.—It is the sense of Congress that—

(1) the Coast Guard should be accorded the resources necessary to significantly increase its ability to interdict the illegal transportation of drugs into the United States without causing a reduction in the ability of the Coast Guard to carry out its other missions, and

(2) if given adequate resources, the Coast Guard is the agency of the Federal Government that is best qualified to carry out drug interdiction and law enforcement operations upon the high seas and waters over which the United States has jurisdiction, and to carry out maritime air surveillance or interdiction operations over the high seas that are required to support drug law enforcement activities in the United States.

SEC. 403. MARITIME AIR SURVEILLANCE AND INTERDICTION.

Title 14, United States Code, is amended as follows:

(1) Section 2 is amended by striking out "United States;" the first place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "United States; shall engage in maritime air surveillance or interdiction to enforce or assist in the enforcement of the laws of the United States;".

(2) Sectfon 89 is amended to read as follows:

"§ 89. Law enforcement

"(a)(1) To prevent, detect, and suppress violations of laws of the United States, the Secretary may—

"(A) in the case of a vessel subject to the jurisdiction, or to the operation of law, of the United States, make inquiries, examinations, inspections, searches, seizures, and arrests on the high seas and waters subject to the jurisdiction of the United States;

"(B) in the case of an aircraft subject to the jurisdiction, or to the operation of law, of the United States, make inquiries, examinations, inspections, searches, and seizures of the aircraft or order the aircraft to a landing area; or

"(C) take any other lawful action.

"(2) For the purposes of this section, a commissioned, warrant, or petty officer of the Coast Guard may—

"(A) order a vessel to stop or an aircraft to a landing area;

"(B) at any time go on board a vessel or aircraft subject to the jurisdiction, or to the operation of law, of the United States;

"(C) address inquiries to those on board;

"(D) examine the vessel's or aircraft's documents and records;

"(E) examine, inspect, and search the vessel or aircraft;

"(F) use all necessary force to compel compliance; and

"(G) take any other lawful action.

"(b)(1) When the inquiries, examinations, inspections, or searches indicate that a violation of the laws of the United States making an individual subject to arrest is being, or has been, committed by an individual, the commissioned, warrant, or petty officer shall—

"(A) arrest the individual;

"(B) if escaping to shore or from a landing area, pursue and arrest the individual; and

"(C) take any other lawful action.

"(2) The vessel or aircraft or any part of the goods on the vessel or aircraft, or both, shall be seized when—

"(A) probable cause exists that a violation of the laws of the United States has been committed rendering the vessel, aircraft, or goods on the vessel or aircraft liable to forfeiture; or

"(B) if necessary, seizure is required to secure a civil penalty.

"(c) When a commissioned, warrant, or petty officer of the Coast Guard is engaged under the authority contained in this section, the officer is—

"(1) deemed to be acting as an agent of the particular department, agency, or instrumentality of the United States Government charged with the administration of the particular law; and

"(2) subject to the rules and regulations prescribed by that department, agency, or instrumentality with respect to the enforcement of that law.

"(d) This section is in addition to any powers conferred by law on those commissioned, warrant, or petty officers and does not limit any powers conferred by law on those commissioned, warrant, or petty officers, or any other officers of the United States.".

(3) Chapter 17 is amended as follows:

(A) Item 637 of the analysis of the chapter is amended to read as follows:

"637. Stopping vessels or aircraft; immunity of Coast Guard officers.".

(B) The caption of section 637 is amended to read as follows:

"§ 637. Stopping vessels or aircraft; immunity of Coast Guard officers"; and

(C) Section 637(a) is amended—

(i) by striking out "Whenever any vessel liable to seizure or examination does not bring-to," and inserting in lieu thereof "When a vessel or aircraft is subject to the law enforcement actions authorized by section 89 of this title and does not stop or land,", and

(ii) by striking out "fire at or into such vessel which does not bring-to." and inserting in lieu thereof "fire at or into the vessel or aircraft that does not stop or land.".

SEC. 404. AUTHORIZATION OF FUNDS.

(a) Funds are authorized to be appropriated for necessary expenses of the Coast Guard for fiscal years 1987 and 1988 as follows:

(1) For the operation and maintenance of additional personnel and equipment, $59,000,000 for fiscal year 1987 and $59,000,000 for fiscal year 1988, to remain available until expended.

(2) For the acquisition of additional equipment and related capital improvements, $59,000,000 for fiscal year 1987 and $84,000,000 for fiscal year 1988, to remain available until expended.

(b) In order to carry out the amendments made by this title, the Coast Guard may—

(1) recruit and train 1,500 additional active duty military personnel,

(2) procure secure communications equipment, as needed, for cutters, shore stations, and aircraft,

(3) operate and maintain four surveillance aircraft, if made available by the Navy,

(4) procure, operate, upgrade, and maintain sea-based aerostat balloons,

(5) equip 8 HU-25A Falcon jet aircraft with air-to-air radar, appropriate night vision devices, or other spare parts, and

(6) take any other lawful action deemed necessary by the Secretary of Transportation or the Commandant, including the coordination of drug law enforcement activities with State, local, or other government authorities as provided under section 141 of title 14, United States Code.

SEC. 405. AUTHORIZATION ENHANCEMENT.

Nothing in this title shall require the Coast Guard to recruit, compensate, train, purchase, or deploy any personnel or equipment except to the extent that additional appropriations are made available in appropriation Acts for that purpose.

TITLE V—COMMITTEE ON BANKING, FINANCE AND URBAN AFFAIRS

Subtitle A—Money Laundering

SEC. 501. SHORT TITLE.

This subtitle may be cited as the "Comprehensive Money Laundering Prevention Act".

SEC. 502. STRUCTURING TRANSACTIONS TO EVADE REPORTING REQUIREMENTS PROHIBITED.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subchapter II of chapter 53 of title 31, United States Code (relating to records and reports on monetary instruments transactions) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"§ 5324. Structuring transactions to evade reporting requirement prohibited

"No person shall for the purpose of evading the reporting requirements of section 5313(a) with respect to such transaction—

"(1) cause or attempt to cause a domestic financial institution to fail to file a report required under section 5313(a);

"(2) cause or attempt to cause a domestic financial institution to file a report required under section 5313(a) that contains a material omission or misstatement of fact; or

"(3) structure or assist in structuring, or attempt to structure or assist in structuring, any transaction with one or more domestic financial institutions.".

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for chapter 53 of title 31, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"5324. Structuring transactions to evade reporting requirement prohibited.".

SEC. 503. SEIZURE AND CIVIL FORFEITURE OF MONETARY INSTRUMENTS.

(a) FAILURE TO REPORT EXPORT OR IMPORT OF MONETARY INSTRUMENT.—The first sentence of section 5317(c) of title 31, United States Code (relating to seizure and forfeiture of monetary instruments in foreign commerce) is amended to read as follows: "If a report required under section 5316 with respect to any monetary instrument is not filed (or if filed, contains a material omission or misstatement of fact), the instrument and any interest in property, including a deposit in a financial institution, traceable to such instrument may be seized and forfeited to the United States Government.".

(b) SEIZURE AND CIVIL FORFEITURE OF MONETARY INSTRUMENTS INVOLVED IN STRUCTURED TRANSACTION VIOLATION.—Section 5317 of title 31, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) SEIZURE AND CIVIL FORFEITURE OF MONETARY INSTRUMENTS INVOLVED IN STRUCTURED TRANSACTION VIOLATION.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Any—

"(A) United States coins or currency (or such other monetary instrument as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe by regulation) involved in any knowing violation of section 5313(a) or 5324; and

"(B) interest in property, including a deposit in a financial institution, traceable to such coins or currency (or other monetary instrument), may be seized and forfeited to the United States Government in the manner provided in subchapter C of chapter 75 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

"(2) EXCEPTION.—Paragraph (1) shall not apply if the owner of the property or the interest in property otherwise subject to seizure and forfeiture under paragraph (1) is—

"(A) a bona fide purchaser for value who took without notice of the violation;

"(B) a depository institution (as such term is defined in section 19(b)(1)(A) of the Federal Reserve Act); or

"(C) a financial institution regulated by the Securities and Exchange Commission.

"(3) HOLDS ON PROPERTY HELD BY FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS.—Any—

"(A) United States coins or currency (and such other monetary instruments as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe by regulation); and

"(B) other interest in property, including any deposit, which is in the possession or custody of any financial institution shall be held by such financial institution for a period of 10 days upon receipt of notice (in such form and in such manner as the Secretary shall prescribe) from the Secretary of the Secretary's intent to seize such coin or currency, instrument, or other property under this subsection.

"(4) SEIZURE OF PROPERTY HELD BY FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS.—Upon a showing by the Secretary of the Treasury that there is probable cause to believe that any coin or currency, monetary instrument, or other interest in property, including any deposit, which is in the possession or custody of any financial institution is subject to forfeiture under paragraph (1), the district court of the United States for the district in which such property is held may issue an order authorizing the Secretary to seize such property.

"(5) EXEMPTION FROM LIABILITY FOR IMPOSITION OF HOLD.—The United States, any agency, department, or employee of the United States, any financial institution, and any officer, director, or employee of a financial institution shall be exempt from any liability to any other person which may otherwise arise for interest, damages, or any other type of compensation or relief, including injunctive and declaratory relief, in connection with or as a result of a hold being placed upon any property under paragraph (3).

"(6) LIABILITY OF FINANCIAL INSTITUTION TO THE UNITED STATES FOR FAILURE TO COMPLY.—Any financial institution which—

"(A) receives a notice under paragraph (3) with respect to any property or interest in property; and

"(B) after receipt of such notice, fails or refuses to hold, without reasonable cause, such property or interests until the earlier of—

"(i) the expiration of the 10-day period described in paragraph (3); or

"(ii) the presentation by the Secretary of a court order issued under paragraph (4), shall be liable to the United States for an amount which is equal to the value of the property or interests which such institution failed or refused to hold.".

(c) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS TO INTERNAL REVENUE CODE OF 1954.—

(1) Section 7302 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to property used in violation of internal revenue laws) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "The second and fourth sentences are hereby extended to coins, currency, and other monetary instruments (and to interests in property traceable to such instruments) seized pursuant to section 5317 of title 31, United States Code.".

(2) The heading for such section 7302 is amended by inserting "OR TITLE 31, UNITED STATES CODE" after "REVENUE LAWS".

(3) Section 7321 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to authority to seize property subject to forfeiture) is amended by inserting "and any coins, currency, or other monetary instrument (and any interest in property traceable to such instrument) subject to forfeiture under section 5317 of title 31, United States Code," after "this title".

(4) Section 7327 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to applicability of customs laws) is amended by inserting "and to forfeitures of coins, currency, and other monetary instruments (or interests in property traceable to such instruments) incurred or alleged to have been incurred under section 5317 of title 31, United States Code (except that, in the case of forfeitures under such section 5317, the customs laws shall apply only to the extent such laws are not inconsistent with any applicable provision of such section)" before the period.

(5) Section 7608(b)(1) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to authority of internal revenue enforcement officers to enforce certain internal revenue laws) is amended—

(A) by striking out "internal revenue laws or" and inserting in lieu thereof "internal revenue laws,"; and

"(A) INVESTIGATIONS.—The Corporation may exercise any authority vested in the Corporation under paragraph (2) or (3) of subsection (m) in the course of conducting any investigation under paragraph (2)(B) or any other investigation which the Corporation, in its discretion, determines is necessary to determine whether any person has filed inaccurate, incomplete, or misleading information under this subsection or otherwise is violating, has violated, or is about to violate any provision of this subsection or any regulation prescribed under this subsection.

"(B) ENFORCEMENT.—Whenever it appears to the Corporation that any person is violating, has violated, or is about to violate any provision of this subsection or any regulation prescribed under this subsection, the agency may, in its discretion, apply to the appropriate district court of the United States or the United States court of any territory for—

"(i) a temporary or permanent injunction or restraining order enjoining such person from violating this subsection or any regulation prescribed under this subsection; or

"(ii) such other equitable relief as may be necessary to prevent any such violation (including divestiture).

"(C) JURISDICTION.—

"(i) The district courts of the United States and the United States courts in any territory shall have the same jurisdiction and power in connection with any exercise of any authority by the Corporation under subparagraph (A) as such courts have under paragraph (2) or (3) of subsection (m).

"(ii) The district courts of the United States and the United States courts of any territory shall have jurisdiction and power to issue any injunction or restraining order or grant any equitable relief described in subparagraph (B). When appropriate, any injunction, order, or other equitable relief under this paragraph shall be granted without requiring the posting of any bond.".

SEC. 518. DISCUSSIONS TO DEVELOP INTERNATIONAL INFORMATION EXCHANGE SYSTEM TO ELIMINATE MONEY LAUNDERING.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of the Treasury, in consultation with the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, shall initiate discussions with the central banks or other appropriate governmental authorities of other countries and propose that an information exchange system be established to assist the efforts of each participating country to eliminate the international flow of money derived from illicit drug operations and other criminal activities.

(b) REPORT REQUIRED.—Before the end of the 9-month period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of the Treasury shall prepare and transmit a report to the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs of the Senate on the results of negotiations initiated pursuant to subsection (a).

SEC. 519. INCREASE IN MAXIMUM CRIMINAL FINE FOR CERTAIN OFFENSES.

Section 5322(b) of title 31, United States Code, is amended by striking out "$500,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$1,000,000 if the person is an individual (and not more than $5,000,000 in any other case)".

SEC. 520. REGULATIONS RELATING TO CUMULATION OF OFFENSES FOR FAILURE TO REPORT EXPORT OR IMPORT OF MONEY.

(a) CLOSELY RELATED EVENTS.—Section 5316 of title 31, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(d) CUMULATION OF CLOSELY RELATED EVENTS.—The Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe regulations under this section defining the term 'at one time' for purposes of subsection (a). Such regulations may permit the cumulation of closely related events in order that such events may collectively be considered to occur at one time for the purposes of subsection (a).".

(b) INCHOATE OFFENSE.—Section 5316(a)(1) of title 31, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking out "or attempts to transport or have transported,", and

(2) by inserting ", is about to transport," after "transports".

SEC. 521. EFFECTIVE DATES.

(a) The amendments made by sections 502 and 508 shall apply with respect to transactions for the payment, receipt, or transfer of United States coins or currency or other monetary instruments completed after the end of the 3-month period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act.

(b) The amendments made by sections 503 and 504 shall apply with respect to violations committed after the end of the 3-month period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act.

(c) The regulations required to be prescribed under the amendments made by section 505 shall take effect at the end of the 3-month period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act.

(d) The amendments made by sections 509, 513, 514, and 519 shall apply with respect to violations committed after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(e) The amendments made by sections 507, 515, 516, and 517 shall apply with respect to notices of proposed acquisitions filed after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(f) Any regulation prescribed under the amendments made by section 520 shall apply with respect to transactions completed after the effective date of such regulation.

Subtitle B—Multilateral Development Banks

SEC. 531. SHORT TITLE.

This subtitle may be cited as the "Drug Eradication Act of 1986".

SEC. 532. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds the following:

(1) The illegal use of controlled substances by citizens of the United States represents a clear, present, and growing danger to the health, well-being, and productivity of the American people.

(2) More than $100,000,000,000 of controlled substances will be sold and used by Americans in 1986 and expenditures on such controlled substances will continue to rise at a rate of $10,000,000,000 per year unless effective action is taken to reduce and eliminate international commerce in such substances.

(3) Most of the controlled substances used in the United States are cultivated and produced in and exported from the major illicit drug producing countries, and the multilateral development banks make loans to these countries.

(4) The monetary earnings from participation in international trade in controlled substances has directly contributed to the growth of an underground economy in the major illicit drug producing countries, which inhibits realization of legitimate foreign exchange earnings and thereby exacerbates the international debt crisis and the long-term economic development of these countries.

(5) In order to achieve a reduction in controlled substance abuse in the United States, priority must be given to improved interdiction efforts, including more effective interception of controlled substances being imported into the United States from foreign nations, and reductions in the cultivation of controlled substances or raw materials for such substances in foreign nations and the United States.

(6) Certain nations are so economically dependent on commerce involving drugs and controlled substances that economic, legal, and administrative assistance must be targeted to those nations to wean them of their economic drug dependency.

(7) The United States Government should take steps to encourage nations in which controlled substances are produced or from which controlled substances are exported to develop effective programs to stop such production and exportation and to seek other means of economic livelihood.

(8) The multilateral development banks are the largest single source of development finance and influential providers of advice in helping establish development priorities for the developing countries.

(9) The United States retains considerable influence in the multilateral development banks and should therefore use such influence to urge these institutions to place increased emphasis in their lending programs and use their considerable policy leverage to address the problem of cultivation of controlled substances and the raw materials for production of such substances.

(b) DECLARATION OF PURPOSES.—The Congress declares that the purposes of this subtitle are to—

(1) eradicate illicit narcotic drug cultivation and production in developing countries; and

(2) stimulate effective action to ensure the development and implementation of long-term economic strategies to promote growth in developing countries which are not dependent on the drug trade.

SEC. 533. NATIONAL DRUG ERADICATION PROGRAMS IN DEVELOPING COUNTRIES.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL DRUG ERADICATION PROGRAMS.—The United States Government, in connection with its voice and vote in the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, the International Development Association, the Inter-American Development Bank, the African Development Bank, and the Asian Development Bank (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "multilateral development banks") shall promote the development and implementation, by all countries in which narcotic drugs and other controlled substances are cultivated or produced or from which narcotic drugs and other controlled substances are exported, of clear and feasible programs for the reduction and eventual eradication of illicit narcotic drugs and other controlled substances in such countries.

(b) CRITERIA FOR PROGRAMS.—The drug eradication program developed by each such country shall include—

(1) a detailed description of the manner in which precise reductions in the amount of illicit narcotic drugs and other controlled substances known to be cultivated or produced in such country will be made;

(2) a timetable indicating the times by which the reductions described in paragraph (1) will be made; and

(3) a description of alternate economic activities which could be implemented with the assistance and support of the multilateral development banks to replace the economic benefits derived from the cultivation and production of controlled substances.

(c) MDB ASSISTANCE FOR DEVELOPMENT AND IMPLEMENTATION OF PROGRAMS.—The Secretary of the Treasury shall instruct the United States Executive Directors of the multilateral development banks to initiate discussions with other directors of their respective banks and to propose that all possible assistance be provided to each country described in subsection (a) in developing and implementing the drug eradication program described in that subsection, including technical assistance, assistance in conducting feasibility studies and economic analyses, and assistance for alternate economic activities described in subsection (b)(3).

(d) CERTIFICATION OF PROGRAM.—The Secretary of State, in cooperation with the Administrator of the Drug Enforcement Administration, shall examine the drug eradication program developed by each major illicit drug producing country to determine whether such drug eradication program is adequate to meet the purposes of this subtitle. If the Secretary determines, with the concurrence of the Administrator, that the program is adequate for such purposes, the Secretary shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury that such determination has been made.

(e) ANNUAL REVIEW OF PROGRAM.—After a drug eradication program has been certified under subsection (d), the Secretary of State, in cooperation with the Administrator of the Drug Enforcement Administration, shall review on an annual basis the implementation and operation of the drug eradication program to determine whether adequate progress has been made in meeting the goals and the timetable established under such program. If the Secretary determines, with the concurrence of the Administrator, that adequate progress has been made, the Secretary shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury that such determination has been made.

(f) EXECUTIVE DIRECTORS TO VOTE AGAINST LOANS TO COUNTRIES WHICH FAIL TO DEVELOP DRUG ERADICATION PROGRAMS.—If, by the end of the 1-year period beginning on the date of the enactment of this subtitle, the Secretary of the Treasury has not received certification under subsection (d) that a major illicit drug producing country has developed an adequate drug eradication program, the Secretary shall instruct the United States Executive Directors of the multilateral development banks to vote against loans or other utilization of funds of the respective banks for the benefit of such country until such time as the Secretary instructs such Directors that such certification has been received unless the loans or utilization of funds are directed specifically to programs which serve the basic human needs of the citizens of such country.

(g) EXECUTIVE DIRECTORS TO VOTE AGAINST LOANS TO COUNTRIES WHICH FAIL TO CARRY OUT DRUG ERADICATION PROGRAMS.—If, by the end of any calendar year beginning after the 1-year period described in subsection (f), the Secretary of the Treasury has not received certification under subsection (e) (with respect to such year) that a major illicit drug producing country is making adequate progress in carrying out its drug eradication program, the Secretary shall instruct the United States Executive Directors of the multilateral development banks to vote against loans or other utilization of funds of the respective banks for the benefit of such country until such time as the Secretary instructs such Directors that such certification has been received unless the loans or utilization of funds are directed specifically to programs which serve the basic human needs of the citizens of such country.

(h) INCREASES IN MULTILATERAL DEVELOPMENT BANK LENDING FOR CROP SUBSTITUTION PROJECTS.—The Secretary of the Treasury shall instruct the United States Executive Directors of the multilateral development banks to initiate discussions with other Directors of their respective banks and to propose that each such bank increase the amount of lending by such bank for crop substitution programs which will provide an economic alternative for the cultivation or production of illicit narcotic drugs or other controlled substances in countries described in subsection (a), to the extent such countries develop and maintain adequate drug eradication programs.

(i) REPORTING REQUIREMENT.—

(1) NATIONAL ADVISORY COUNCIL REPORT.—The Secretary of the Treasury shall include in the annual report to the Congress by the National Advisory Council on International Monetary and Financial Policies a detailed accounting of the manner in which and the extent to which the requirements of this section have been carried out.

(2) INTERNATIONAL NARCOTICS STRATEGY REPORT.—The accounting made under paragraph (1) shall also be included in the report submitted to the Congress pursuant to section 481(e) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2291(e)).

(j) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

(1) the terms "controlled substance", "narcotic drug", and "Drug Enforcement Administration" have the meanings given to such terms in section 102 of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C 802); and

(2) the term "major illicit drug producing country" has the meaning provided in section 481(i)(2) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2291(i)(2)).

SEC. 534. CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.

(a) INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT ASSOCIATION ACT.—Section 13 of the International Development Association Act (22 U.S.C. 284k) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 13. OPPOSITION TO ASSISTANCE FOR MAJOR ILLICIT DRUG PRODUCING COUNTRIES WHICH FAIL TO TAKE ADEQUATE DRUG CONTROL MEASURES.

"The Secretary of the Treasury shall instruct the United States Executive Directors of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the International Development Association to vote against any loan or other utilization of funds of the Bank and the Association for the benefit of any major illicit drug producing country when such action is required—

"(1) by the Drug Eradication Act of 1986; or

"(2) by section 481(h)(1)(B) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2291(h)(1)(B)).".

(b) INTER-AMERICAN BANK ACT.—Section 22 of the Inter-American Development Bank Act (22 U.S.C. 283s) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 22. OPPOSITION TO ASSISTANCE FOR MAJOR ILLICIT DRUG PRODUCING COUNTRIES WHICH FAIL TO TAKE ADEQUATE DRUG CONTROL MEASURES.

"The Secretary of the Treasury shall instruct the United States Executive Director of the Bank to vote against any loan or other utilization of funds of the Bank for the benefit of any major illicit drug producing country when such action is required—

"(1) by the Drug Eradication Act of 1986; or

"(2) by section 481(h)(1)(B) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2291(h)(1)(B)).".

(c) ASIAN DEVELOPMENT BANK ACT.—Section 19 of the Asian Development Bank Act (22 U.S.C. 285p) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 19. OPPOSITION TO ASSISTANCE FOR MAJOR ILLICIT DRUG PRODUCING COUNTRIES WHICH FAIL TO TAKE ADEQUATE DRUG CONTROL MEASURES.

"The Secretary of the Treasury shall instruct the United States Executive Director of the Asian Development Bank to vote against any loan or other utilization of funds of the Bank for the benefit of any major illicit drug producing country when such action is required—

"(1) by the Drug Eradication Act of 1986; or

"(2) by section 481(h)(1)(B) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2291(h)(1)(B)).".

(d) AFRICAN DEVELOPMENT BANK ACT.—The African Development Bank Act (22 U.S.C. 290i et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 1343. OPPOSITION TO ASSISTANCE FOR MAJOR ILLICIT DRUG PRODUCING COUNTRIES WHICH FAIL TO TAKE ADEQUATE DRUG CONTROL MEASURES.

"The Secretary of the Treasury shall instruct the United States Executive Director of the African Development Bank to vote against any loan or other utilization of funds of the Bank for the benefit of any major illicit drug producing country when such action is required—

"(1) by the Drug Eradication Act of 1986; or

"(2) by section 481(h)(1)(B) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2291(h)(1)(B)).".

(e) FOREIGN ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1961.—Section 481(h)(1)(B) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2291(h)(1)(B)) is amended by inserting "the United States Executive Director of the African Development Bank," after "Inter-American Development Bank,".

TITLE VI—COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

Subtitle A—Money Laundering

SEC. 601. SHORT TITLE.

This subtitle may be cited as the "Money Laundering Control Act of 1986".

SEC. 602. MONEY LAUNDERING OFFENSES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 95 (relating to racketeering) of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"§ 1956. Money laundering defined and prohibited

"(a) OFFENSES.—(1) Whoever, in any of the circumstances set forth in subsection (d), knowingly engages or attempts to engage in a financial transaction in criminally derived property that is derived from a designated offense shall be punished as provided in subsection (b). This paragraph does not apply to financial transactions involving the bona fide fees an attorney accepts for representing a client in a criminal investigation or any proceeding arising therefrom.

"(2) Whoever, in any of the circumstances set forth in subsection (d), knowingly engages or attempts to engage in a commercial transaction, knowing the transaction is part of a scheme—

"(A) to conceal criminally derived property that is derived from a designated offense; or

"(B) to disguise the source or ownership of, or control over, criminally derived property that is derived from a designated offense; shall be punished as provided in subsection (b).

"(3) Whoever knowingly transports or attempts to transport a monetary instrument or funds from a place in the United States to or through a place outside the United States or to a place in the United States from or through a place outside the United States, knowing that such transportation is part of a scheme—

"(A) to conceal criminally derived property that is derived from a designated offense; or

"(B) to disguise the source or ownership of, or control over, criminally derived property that is derived from a designated offense;

shall be punished as provided in subsection (b).

"(b) PUNISHMENT.—(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), the punishment for an offense under this section is—

"(A) a fine of not more than $1,000,000 or imprisonment for not more than 20 years, or both, if the offender is an individual; and

"(B) a fine of not more than $5,000,000, if the offender is a person other than an individual.

"(2) The court may impose an alternate fine to that imposable under paragraph (1) of not more than twice the amount of the property, funds, or monetary instrument involved in the transaction.

"(c) STATE OF MIND RELATING TO OFFENSE FROM WHICH PROPERTY WAS DERIVED.—In a prosecution for an offense under this section, the Government is not required to prove the defendant knew that the offense from which the criminally derived property was derived was a designated offense.

"(d) CIRCUMSTANCES REQUIRED.—The circumstances referred to in subsection (a) are—

"(1) that the offense under this section takes place in the United States or in the special maritime and territorial jurisdiction of the United States; or

"(2) that the offense under this section takes place outside the United States and such special jurisdiction, but the defendant is a United States person (as defined in section 3077 of this title, but excluding the class described in paragraph (2)(D) of such section).

"(e) INVESTIGATIVE JURISDICTION.—The Secretary of the Treasury shall, in addition to any other agency having such authority, have the authority to investigate offenses under this section, and may delegate such authority to the Internal Revenue Service as appropriate. Such authority of the Secretary of the Treasury shall be exercised in accordance with an agreement which shall be entered into by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Attorney General.

"(f) CRIMINAL FORFEITURE.—(1) The court, in imposing sentence on a person convicted of an offense under this section based on conduct consisting of providing services to another that are illegal under this section, shall order that the person forfeit to the United States any property constituting, or derived from, any gross receipts the person obtained, directly or indirectly, as a result of such offense.

"(2) Subsections (c) and (e) through (o) of section 413 of the Comprehensive Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Act of 1970 (21 U.S.C. 853) apply with respect to property subject to forfeiture under this subsection, to any seizure or disposition thereof, and to any administrative or judicial proceeding in relation thereto, to the extent not inconsistent with this section, as they apply to property subject to forfeiture under that Act.

"(g) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this section—

"(1) the term 'financial transaction' means the deposit, withdrawal, transfer, or exchange, in or affecting interstate or foreign commerce, of funds or a monetary instrument by, through, or to a financial institution (as defined in section 5312(a)(2) of title 31);

"(2) the term 'commercial transaction' means—

"(A) a financial transaction;

"(B) the creation, in or affecting interstate or foreign commerce, of a debt; or

"(C) the purchase or sale, in or affecting interstate or foreign commerce, of any property of a fair market value or for a price—

"(i) greater than $10,000; or

"(ii) equal to or less than $10,000, if effected with the intent to evade criminal jurisdiction under clause (i);

"(3) the term 'criminally derived property' means any property constituting, or derived from, proceeds obtained from a criminal offense;

"(4) the term 'designated offense' means—

"(A) an offense against the United States that is listed in section 1961(1) of this title;

"(B) an offense under section 152 (relating to concealment of assets; false oaths and claims; bribery), section 215 (relating to commissions or gifts for procuring loans), any of sections 500 through 503 (relating to certain counterfeiting offenses), section 511 (relating to securities of States and private entities), section 545 (relating to smuggling goods into the United States), section 641 (relating to public money, property, or records), section 656 (relating to theft, embezzlement, or misapplication by bank officer or employee), section 666 (relating to theft or bribery concerning programs receiving Federal funds), any of section 793 or 794 (relating to espionage), section 798 (relating to disclosure of classified information), section 875 (relating to interstate communications), section 1201 (relating to kidnaping), section 1203 (relating to hostage taking), section 1344 (relating to bank fraud), or either of section 2113 or 2114 (relating to bank and postal robbery and theft) of this title, or under section 38 of the Arms Export Control Act (22 U.S.C. 2778), or section 203 (relating to criminal violations) of the International Economic Powers Act (50 U.S.C. 1702), section 3 (relating to criminal violations) of Trading with the Enemy Act (50 U.S.C. App. 3) or section 2 (relating to criminal violations) of the Export Administration Act of 1979 (50 U.S.C. App. 2401); or

"(C) with respect to a financial transaction or commercial transaction in the United States, an offense against any foreign nation involving the manufacture, importation, sale, or distribution of a controlled substance (as such term is defined for the purposes of the Controlled Substances Act); and

"(5) the term 'monetary instrument' has the meaning given that term for the purposes of subchapter II of chapter 53 of title 31.

"§ 1957. Civil forfeiture in connection with money laundering

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—The following property is subject to forfeiture to the United States:

"(1) Any property constituting, or derived from, any gross receipts a person obtains, directly or indirectly, as a result of a violation of section 1956 of this title that is based on conduct consisting of providing services to another that are illegal under that section.

"(2) Any property, funds, or monetary instrument involved in a transaction in violation of section 1956 of this title, or the proceeds derived from such property, funds, or instrument, if the designated offense is an offense described in section 1956(g)(4)(C) of this title.

"(b) SEIZURE.—Any property subject to forfeiture to the United States under this section may be seized by the Attorney General or the Secretary of the Treasury, upon process issued pursuant to the Supplemental Rules for certain Admiralty and Maritime Claims by any district court of the United States having jurisdiction over the property, except that seizure without such process may be made when—

"(1) the seizure is pursuant to a lawful arrest or search; or

"(2) the Attorney General or the Secretary of the Treasury, as the case may be, has obtained a warrant for such seizure under the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, in which event proceedings under subsection (d) of this section shall be instituted promptly.

"(c) PRESERVATION OF PROPERTY PENDING OUTCOME OF LITIGATION.—Property taken or detained under this section shall not be repleviable, but shall be deemed to be in the custody of the Attorney General or the Secretary of the Treasury, as the case may be, subject only to the orders and decrees of the court or the official having jurisdiction thereof. Whenever property is seized under this subsection, the Attorney General or the Secretary of the Treasury, as the case may be, may—

"(1) place the property under seal;

"(2) remove the property to a place designated by him; or

"(3) require that the General Services Administration take custody of the property and remove it, if practicable, to an appropriate location for disposition in accordance with law.

"(d) PROCEDURE.—For the purposes of this section the provisions of the customs laws relating to the seizure, summary and judicial forfeiture, condemnation of property for violation of the customs laws, the disposition of such property or the proceeds from the sale thereof, the remission or mitigation of such forfeitures, and the compromise of claims (19 U.S.C. 1602 et seq.), insofar as they are applicable and not inconsistent with the provisions of this section, shall apply to seizures and forfeitures incurred, or alleged to have been incurred, under this section, except that such duties as are imposed upon the customs officer or any other person with respect to the seizure and forfeiture of property under the customs laws shall be performed with respect to seizures and forfeitures of property under this section by such officers, agents, or other persons as may be authorized or designated for that purpose by the Attorney General or the Secretary of the Treasury, as the case may be.

"(e) DISPOSITION.—(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of the law, the Attorney General or the Secretary of the Treasury, as the case may be, is authorized to retain property forfeited pursuant to this section, or to transfer such property, or the proceeds of the sale of such property, on such terms and conditions as the Attorney General or the Secretary of the Treasury, as the case may be, may determine to—

"(A) any other Federal agency; or

"(B) any State or local law enforcement agency which participated directly in any of the acts which led to the seizure or forfeiture of the property.

"(2) The Attorney General or the Secretary of the Treasury, as the case may be, shall ensure the equitable transfer pursuant to paragraph (1)(B) of this subsection of any forfeited property (or the proceeds of the sale of such property) to the appropriate State or local law enforcement agency so as to reflect generally the contribution of any such agency participating directly in any of the acts which led to the seizure or forfeiture of such property. A decision by the Attorney General or the Secretary pursuant to paragraph (1)(B) shall not be subject to review. The United States shall not be liable in any action arising out of the use of any property the custody of which was transferred pursuant to this section to any non-Federal agency.

"(3) The Attorney General or the Secretary of the Treasury may order the discontinuance of any forfeiture proceedings under this section in favor of the institution of forfeiture proceedings by State or local authorities under an appropriate State or local statute. After the filing of a complaint for forfeiture under this section, the Attorney General may seek dismissal of the complaint in favor of forfeiture proceedings under State or local law.

"(4) Whenever forfeiture proceedings are discontinued by the United States in favor of State or local proceedings, the United States may transfer custody and possession of the seized property to the appropriate State or local official immediately upon the initiation of the proper actions by such officials.

"(5) Whenever forfeiture proceedings are discontinued by the United States in favor of State or local proceedings, notice shall be sent to all known interested parties advising them of the discontinuance or dismissal. The United States shall not be liable in any action arising out of the seizure, detention, and transfer of seized property to State or local officials.

"(f) VESTING OF TITLE.—All right, title, and interest in property described in subsection (a) of this section shall vest in the United States upon commission of the act giving rise to forfeiture under this section.

"(g) RELATION TO CRIMINAL PROCEEDINGS.—The filing of an indictment or information alleging a violation of law which is also related to a forfeiture proceeding under this section shall, upon motion of the United States and for good cause shown, stay the forfeiture proceeding.

"(h) ADDITIONAL VENUE.—In addition to the venue provided for in section 1395 of title 28 or any other provision of law, in the case of property of a defendant charged with a violation that is the basis for forfeiture of the property under this section, a proceeding for forfeiture under this section may be brought in the judicial district in which the defendant owning such property is found or in the judicial district in which the criminal prosecution is brought.".

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections at the beginning of chapter 95 (relating to racketeering) of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"1956. Money laundering defined and prohibited.
"1957. Civil forfeiture in connection with money laundering.".

(c) WIRETAP AUTHORITY.—Section 2516(1)(c) of title 18, United States Code, is amended by inserting "section 1956 (money laundering)," after "section 1955 (prohibition of business enterprises of gambling),".

SEC. 603. DISCLOSURE OF INFORMATION BY FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS.

(a) PROTECTION FROM LIABILITY.—Section 1117(c) of the Right to Financial Privacy Act of 1978 (12 U.S.C. 3417(c)) is amended—

(1) by inserting "or providing in good faith a notification referred to in section 1103(c) of this Act" after "authority"; and

(2) by inserting "or notification" after "such disclosure".

(b) NONDISCLOSURE ORDER.—Section 1113(i) of the Right to Financial Privacy Act of 1978 (12 U.S.C. 3413(i)) is amended by adding at the end the following: "A court may, for a cause shown that would justify delay in notice under section 1109, issue an order precluding, for such time as the court deems appropriate, the recipient of a grand jury subpoena for financial records from notifying any other person (except the recipient's attorney) of the existence of the subpoena.".

Subtitle B—Designer Drugs

SEC. 605. SHORT TITLE.

This subtitle may be cited as the "Designer Drug Enforcement Act of 1986".

SEC. 606. INCLUSION OF DESIGNER DRUGS IN CONTROLLED SUBSTANCES ACT.

(a) DEFINITION.—Section 102 of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 802) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(31)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), the term 'controlled substance analogue' means a substance —

"(i) the chemical structure of which is substantially similar to the chemical structure of a controlled substance in schedule I or II; and

"(ii)(I) which has a stimulant, depressant, or hallucinogenic effect on the central nervous system; or

"(II) with respect to a particular person, which such person represents or intends to have a stimulant, depressant, or hallucinogenic effect on the central nervous system substantially similar to or greater than the stimulant, depressant, or hallucinogenic effect on the central nervous system of a controlled substance.

"(B) Such term does not include—

"(i) a controlled substance;

"(ii) any substance for which there is an approved new drug application;

"(iii) with respect to a particular person any substance, if an exemption is in effect for investigational use, for that person, under section 505 of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 355) to the extent conduct with respect to such substance is pursuant to such exemption; or

"(iv) any substance to the extent not intended for human consumption before such an exemption takes effect with respect to that substance.".

(b) TREATMENT OF CONTROLLED SUBSTANCE ANALOGUES.—Part B of the Controlled Substances Act is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"TREATMENT OF CONTROLLED SUBSTANCE ANALOGUES

"SEC. 203. A controlled substance analogue shall, to the extent intended for human consumption, be treated, for the purposes of this title and title III as a controlled substance in schedule I.".

(c) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of contents of the Comprehensive Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Act of 1970 is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 202 the following new item:

"Sec. 203. Treatment of controlled substance analogues.".

Subtitle C—More Effective Criminal Penalties

SEC. 607. SHORT TITLE.

This subtitle may be cited as the "Narcotics Penalties and Enforcement Act of 1986".

PART I—CONTROLLED SUBSTANCES PENALTIES

SEC. 608. PENALTIES FOR MAJOR TRAFFICKERS, PENALTIES FOR SERIOUS TRAFFICKERS, AND OTHER PENALTY INCREASE AMENDMENTS TO SECTION 401 OF THE CONTROLLED SUBSTANCES ACT.

(a) PENALTY INCREASE.—Section 401 of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 841) is amended by striking out subsection (b) and all that follows through the end of the section and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(b) Except as otherwise provided in section 405, 405A, or 405B, any person who violates subsection (a) of this section shall be sentenced as follows:

"(1)(A) In the case of a violation of subsection (a) of this section involving—

"(i) 1 kilogram or more of a mixture, preparation, or compound containing a detectable amount of heroin;

"(ii) 5 kilograms or more of a mixture, preparation, or compound containing a detectable amount of cocaine (other than cocaine freebase), ecgonine, their salts, optical and geometric isomers, and salts of isomers;

"(iii) 2,500 grams or more, or 6,000 tablets or more, of a mixture, preparation, or compound containing a detectable amount of a narcotic drug in schedule I or schedule II (other than a substance described in clause (ii));

"(iv) 100 grams or more of a mixture, preparation, or compound containing a detectable amount of cocaine freebase;

"(v) 100 grams or more of a mixture, preparation, or compound containing a detectable amount of a controlled substance analogue;

"(vi) 100 grams or more of a mixture, preparation, or compound containing a detectable amount of a fentanyl analogue;

"(vii)(I) 946 milliliters or more of a liquid mixture, preparation, or compound containing a detectable amount of phencyclidine; or

"(II) 34 grams or more of pure phencyclidine or 340 grams or more of a solid mixture, preparation, or compound containing a detectable amount of phencyclidine; or

"(viii) 1 gram or more of a mixture, preparation, or compound containing a detectable amount of lysergic acid diethylamide; such person shall be sentenced to a term of imprisonment of not less than 10 years and not more than 30 years, and a fine of not more than $2,000,000, or both in the case of an individual, or to a fine of not more than $5,000,000, in the case of a person other than an individual. If the offense under this subparagraph is a second or subsequent controlled substances offense, such person shall be sentenced to a term of imprisonment for any term of not less than 20 years, or to imprisonment for life, and a fine of not more than $4,000,000, or both in the case of an individual, or to a fine of not more than $10,000,000, in the case of a person other than an individual. Any sentence imposing a term of imprisonment under this subparagraph shall, in the absence of such a prior conviction, impose a special parole term of at least 4 years in addition to such term of imprisonment and shall, if there was such a prior conviction, impose a special parole term of at least 8 years in addition to such term of imprisonment.

"(B) In the case of a violation of subsection (a) of this section involving—

"(i) 125 grams or more of a mixture, preparation, or compound containing a detectable amount of heroin;

"(ii) 1 kilogram or more of a mixture, preparation, or compound containing a detectable amount of cocaine (other than cocaine freebase), ecgonine, their salts, optical and geometric isomers, and salts of isomers;

"(iii) 125 grams or more, or 300 tablets or more, of a mixture, preparation, or compound containing a detectable amount of a narcotic drug in schedule I or schedule II, (other than a substance described in clause (ii));

"(iv) 20 grams or more of a mixture, preparation, or compound containing a detectable amount of cocaine freebase;

"(v) 10 grams or more of a mixture, preparation, or compound containing a detectable amount of a controlled substance analogue;

"(vi) 10 grams or more of a mixture, preparation, or compound containing a detectable amount of a fentanyl analogue;

"(vii)(I) 28 milliliters or more of a liquid mixture, preparation, or compound containing a detectable amount of phencyclidine; or

"(II) 10 grams or more of pure phencyclidine or 100 grams or more of a solid mixture, preparation, or compound containing a detectable amount of phencyclidine; or

"(viii) 500 milligrams or more of a mixture, preparation, or compound containing a detectable amount of lysergic acid diethylamide; such person shall be sentenced to a term of imprisonment of not less than 5 and not more than 20 years, a fine of not more than $1,000,000, or both if such person is an individual, or to a fine of not more than $3,000,000 if such person is other than an individual. If the offense under this subparagraph is a second or subsequent controlled substances offense, such person shall be sentenced to a term of imprisonment of not less than 10 years and not more than 40 years, and a fine of not more than $2,000,000, or both in the case of an individual, or to a fine of not more than $6,000,000, in the case of a person other than an individual. Any sentence imposing a term of imprisonment under this subparagraph shall, in the absence of such a prior conviction, impose a special parole term of at least 4 years in addition to such term of imprisonment and shall, if there was such a prior conviction, impose a special parole term of at least 8 years in addition to such term of imprisonment.

"(C)(i) In the case of—

"(I) a controlled substance in schedule I or II (other than a narcotic drug, a controlled substance analogue, or phencyclidine);

"(II) an amphetamine in schedule III, its salts, optical isomers, and salts of its optical isomers;

"(III) a methamphetamine in schedule III, its salts, isomers, and salts of its isomers;

"(IV) a phenmetrazine in schedule III, and its salts;

"(V) a methylphenidate in schedule III;

"(VI) benzphetamine;

"(VII) chlorphentermine;

"(VIII) clortermine; or

"(IX) phendimetrazine;

such person shall be sentenced to a term of imprisonment of not more than 15 years, a fine of $500,000, or both if such person is an individual, or to a fine of not more than $2,000,000 if such person is other than an individual.

"(ii) In the case of a controlled substance analogue or a controlled substance in schedule I or II that is a narcotic drug or phencyclidine, such person shall be sentenced to a term of imprisonment of not more than 15 years, a fine of $1,000,000, or both if such person is an individual, or to a fine of not more than $5,000,000 if such person is other than an individual.

"(iii) If the offense under this subparagraph is a second or subsequent controlled substances offense such person shall—

"(I) be sentenced to a term of imprisonment of not more than 30 years, a fine of not more than $1,000,000, or both if such person is an individual, or to a fine of not more than $4,000,000 if such person is other than an individual (if the offense is described in clause (i)); and

"(II) be sentenced to a term of imprisonment of not more than 30 years, a fine of $2,000,000, or both if such person is an individual, or to a fine of not more than $10,000,000 if such person is other than an individual (if the offense is described in clause (ii)).

"(iv) Any sentence imposing a term of imprisonment under this subparagraph shall, in the absence of such a prior conviction, impose a special parole term of at least 3 years in addition to such term of imprisonment and shall, if there was such a prior conviction, impose a special parole term of at least 6 years in addition to such term of imprisonment.

"(D) In the case of less than 50 kilograms of marihuana, 10 kilograms of hashish, or one kilogram of hashish oil or in the case of any controlled substance in schedule III (other than a substance listed in any of subclauses (II) through (IX) of subparagraph (C)(i)), such person shall, except as provided in paragraph (4), be sentenced to a term of imprisonment of not more than 5 years, a fine of not more than $250,000, or both if such person is an individual, or to a fine of not more than $1,000,000 if such person is other than an individual. If the offense under this subparagraph is a second or subsequent controlled substances offense such person shall be sentenced to a term of imprisonment of not more than 10 years, a fine of not more than $500,000, or both if such person is an individual, or to a fine of not more than $2,000,000 if such person is other than an individual. Any sentence imposing a term of imprisonment under this paragraph shall, in the absence of such a prior conviction, impose a special parole term of at least 2 years in addition to such term of imprisonment and shall, if there was such a prior conviction, impose a special parole term of at least 4 years in addition to such term of imprisonment.

"(E) Imposition or execution of a sentence of imprisonment under subparagraph (A) or subparagraph (B) shall not be suspended, and probation shall not be granted with respect to such sentence. A person convicted under subparagraph (A) or subparagraph (B) shall not be eligible for parole until the individual has served the minimum sentence required by such subparagraph.

"(2) In the case of a controlled substance in schedule IV, such person shall be sentenced to a term of imprisonment of not more than 3 years, a fine of not more than $250,000, or both if such person is an individual, or to a fine of not more than $1,000,000 if such person is other than an individual. If the offense under this paragraph is a second or subsequent controlled substances offense such person shall be sentenced to a term of imprisonment of not more than 6 years, a fine of $500,000, or both if such person is an individual, or to a fine of not more than $2,000,000 if such person is other than an individual. Any sentence imposing a term of imprisonment under this paragraph shall, in the absence of such a prior conviction, impose a special parole term of at least one year in addition to such term of imprisonment and shall, if there was such a prior conviction, impose a special parole term of at least 2 years in addition to such term of imprisonment.

"(3) In the case of a controlled substance in schedule V, such person shall be sentenced to a term of imprisonment of not more than one year, a fine of not more than $100,000, or both if such person is an individual, or to a fine of not more than $250,000 if such person is other than an individual. If the offense under this paragraph is a second or subsequent controlled substances offense such person shall be sentenced to a term of imprisonment of not more than 2 years, a fine of not more than $250,000, or both if such person is an individual, or to a fine of not more than $500,000 if such person is other than anindividual.

"(4) Notwithstanding paragraph (1)(D) of this subsection, any person who violates subsection (a) of this section by distributing a small amount of marihuana for no remuneration shall be treated as provided in section 404.

"(c) A special parole term imposed under this section or section 405, 405A, or 405B may be revoked if its terms and conditions are violated. In such circumstances the original term of imprisonment shall be increased by the period of the special parole term and the resulting new term of imprisonment shall not be diminished by the time which was spent on special parole. A person whose special parole term has been revoked may be required to serve all or part of the remainder of the new term of imprisonment. A special parole term provided for in this section or section 405, 405A, or 405B shall be in addition to, and not in lieu of, any other parole provided for by law.

"(d) Any person who knowingly or intentionally—

"(1) possesses any piperidine with intent to manufacture phencyclidine except as authorized by this title, or

"(2) possesses any piperidine knowing, or having reasonable cause to believe, that the piperidine will be used to manufacture phencyclidine except as authorized by this title, shall be sentenced to a term of imprisonment of not more than 5 years, a fine of not more than $15,000, or both.

"(e) For purposes of this section, a person shall be considered convicted of a second or subsequent controlled substances offense if, before the commission of such offense, at least one felony conviction of such person under this title, title III, or any other law of the United States, or any law of a State or a foreign country relating to narcotic drugs, marijuana, or depressant or stimulant substances, has become final.".

"(c) Imposition or execution of a sentence of imprisonment under this section shall not be suspended, and probation shall not be granted with respect to such sentence. A person convicted under this section shall not be eligible for parole until the individual has served the minimum sentence required by this section.".

(b) TECHNICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of contents for the Comprehensive Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Act of 1970 is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 1017 the following new item:

"Sec. 1018. Special term of imprisonment for certain offenses resulting in death or serious bodily injury.".

PART II—CONTROLLED SUBSTANCE OFFENSES RELATING TO CHILDREN AND SCHOOLS; PRECURSOR AND ESSENTIAL CHEMICAL REVIEW

SEC. 621. CRIMINAL PENALTY FOR MANUFACTURE OF CONTROLLED SUBSTANCE IN OR NEAR SCHOOLS (INCLUDING COLLEGES).

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 405A of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 845a) is amended—

(1) in subsection (a), by striking out "distributing a controlled substance in or on, or within one thousand feet of, the real property comprising a public or private elementary or secondary school" and inserting in lieu thereof "manufacturing or distributing a controlled substance in or on, or within 1,000 feet of, the real property comprising a school";

(2) in subsection (b), by striking out "distributing a controlled substance in or on, or within one thousand feet of, the real property comprising a public or private elementary or secondary school" and inserting in lieu thereof "manufacturing or distributing a controlled substance in or on, or within 1,000 feet of, the real property comprising a school "; and

(3) by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(d) As used in this section, the term 'school' means a public or private elementary, vocational, or secondary school, or a public or private college, junior college, community college, or university.".

(b) TECHNICAL AMENDMENT.—The section heading for section 405A of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 845a) is amended to read as follows:

"MANUFACTURE OR DISTRIBUTION IN OR NEAR SCHOOLS".

SEC. 622. USING CHILDREN TO MANUFACTURE OR DISTRIBUTE A CONTROLLED SUBSTANCE.

The Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 801 et seq.) is amended by inserting after section 405A the following new section:

"USING CHILDREN TO MANUFACTURE OR DISTRIBUTE

"SEC. 405B. (a) Any person at least 18 years of age who violates section 401(a)(1) by employing, using, persuading, inducing, enticing, or coercing another person less than 18 years of age to manufacture or distribute a controlled substance is punishable by a term of imprisonment, or a fine, or both, up to twice that otherwise authorized for that offense, and at least twice any special parole term otherwise authorized for that offense.

"(b) If the offense under this subparagraph is a second or subsequent offense, such offense is punishable by a term of imprisonment, or a fine, or both, up to three times that otherwise authorized for that offense, and at least three times any special parole term otherwise authorized for that offense.

"(c) In the case of any sentence imposed under this section, imposition or execution of such sentence shall not be suspended and probation shall not be granted with respect to such sentence. An individual convicted under this section shall not be eligible for parole until the individual has served the minimum sentence required by such section.".

SEC. 623. PRECURSOR AND ESSENTIAL CHEMICAL REVIEW.

(a) STUDY AND REPORT.—The Attorney General shall—

(1) conduct a study of the need for legislation, regulation, or alternative methods to control the diversion of legitimate precursor and essential chemicals to the illegal production of drugs of abuse; and

(2) report all findings of such study to Congress not later than the end of the 90th day after the date of enactment of this part.

(b) CONSIDERATIONS.—In conducting such study the Attorney General shall take into consideration that—

(1) clandestine manufacture continues to be a major source of narcotic and dangerous drugs on the illegal drug market;

(2) these drugs are produced using a variety of chemicals which are found in commercial channels and which are diverted to illegal uses;

(3) steps have been taken to deny drug traffickers access to key precursor chemicals, including that—

(A) P2P, a precursor chemical used in the production of amphetamines and methamphetamines was administratively controlled in schedule II of the Controlled Substances Act by the Drug Enforcement Administration;

(B) a variety of controls were placed on piperidine, the precursor for phencyclidine, by the Psychotropic Substance Act of 1978; and

(C) the Drug Enforcement Administration has maintained a voluntary system in cooperation with chemical industry to report suspicious purchases of precursors and essential chemicals; and

(4) despite the formal and voluntary systems that currently exist, clandestine production of synthetic narcotics and dangerous drugs continue to contribute to drug trafficking and abuse problems in the United States.

PART III—CONTROLLED SUBSTANCES TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS

SEC. 625. CLARIFICATION OF ISOMER INCLUSION.

The second and third sentences of section 102(14) of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 802(14)) are each amended by striking out "the" after "the term 'isomer' means" and inserting in lieu thereof "any".

SEC. 626. MODIFICATION OF COCAINE DEFINITION FOR PURPOSES OF SCHEDULE II.

Subsection (a)(4) of schedule II of section 202(c) the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 812) is amended to read as follows:

Subtitle D—White House Conference

SEC. 641. SHORT TITLE.

This subtitle may be cited as the "White House Conference on Drug Abuse and Control Act of 1986".

SEC. 642. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds that—

(1) the illicit production and trafficking of controlled substances abroad and the illicit importation of controlled substances into the United States is increasing each year;

(2) the social and economic cost in the United States of drug abuse, including increased health care costs, lost productivity, and related crime and violence, is estimated to be more than $100,000,000,000 annually, and there is a direct relationship between drug abuse and criminal activity and street violence;

(3) the National Drug Enforcement Policy Board recently stated that drug abuse is a major health problem that damages our social institutions and threatens our most valuable human resource—our young people;

(4) controlled substances of all kinds are readily available on the streets of major cities in the United States, it is estimated that there are 500,000 heroin addicts, 4,000,000 regular cocaine users, and 20,000,000 regular marijuana users in the United States, and the amount of cocaine available for export to the United States increased by over 50 percent in 1984 and the number of cocaine-related deaths in the United States in 1984 increased by 77 percent;

(5) the President's Commission on Organized Crime, in its final report, stated that drug trafficking is the most serious organized crime problem in the world today and is the most widespread and lucrative organized crime activity in the United States, producing revenues exceeding $110,000,000,000 annually, and that insofar as the violence and corruption associated with drug trafficking threatens the stability of friendly nations, our own national security is jeopardized;

(6) President Reagan has repeatedly emphasized the importance of the fight against drug abuse and has called drug abuse one of the gravest problems facing the nation;

(7) the International Narcotics Control Board and the United States Department of State have found that the illicit production, trafficking, and abuse of drugs is international in scope and affects almost every country, and that these activities undermine the economic and social order, spread violence and corruption, and jeopardize the very political stability of some countries;

(8) despite major strides toward achieving coordination of drug law enforcement among Federal agencies or between Federal efforts and State and local efforts total national control is still needed;

(9) the flow of drugs into the United States and increased domestic production and diversion place overwhelming burdens on Federal, State, and local police, prosecutors, courts, and correctional authorities, and represents a threat to the national security;

(10) elected officials and leaders in the fields of law enforcement, health, and education are nearly unanimous in agreement that drug abuse can only be defeated by education, prevention, and other demand reduction efforts;

(11) demand reduction efforts need more resources, direction, and coordination, having received comparatively less support than have law enforcement and other supply reduction efforts; and

(12) in order to address these drug control and abuse issues in a coordinated manner and in a manner that responds to the crisis situation at hand, it is necessary to bring together, under sponsorship and with support at the highest level of government, experts in drug abuse issues, ordinary citizens, including those who have suffered the effects of drug abuse and who want to help end it, and officials from all levels of government and all three branches of Government, to make recommendations for development and implementation of a comprehensive national strategy for public and private action to eliminate drug abuse in America.

SEC. 643. AUTHORIZATION OF CONFERENCE.

The President shall call a White House Conference on Drug Abuse and Control (in this subtitle referred to as the "Conference"), in accordance with this subtitle, not later than 9 months after the date of the enactment of this subtitle in order to develop recommendations for further action to control the illicit production, trafficking, and distribution of controlled substances internationally and in the United States and to prevent and treat drug abuse.

SEC. 644. PURPOSES OF CONFERENCE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The purposes of the Conference are—

(1) to increase public awareness of, and to focus attention on, various aspects of the problems of drug abuse and control (including issues of enforcement of controlled substances laws and of prevention, treatment, and rehabilitation of drug abusers);

(2) to pool information and experiences in order vigorously and directly to attack drug abuse at all levels— local, State, Federal, and international; and

(3) to assist in formulating a national strategy (encompassing international, Federal, State, and local activities) to control trafficking in controlled substances and to prevent and treat drug abuse.

(b) SPECIFIC CONSIDERATIONS.—The Conference shall specifically review—

(1) the impact of recently enacted laws (including the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984 and the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Reduction Act of 1985) on efforts to control trafficking in controlled substances and to prevent and treat drug abuse,

(2) the recommendations of the President's Commission on Organized Crime as they relate to drug abuse and control;

(3) the extent to which the sanctions in section 481 of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2291) have been, or should be, used in encouraging foreign states to comply with their international responsibilities respecting controlled substances; and

(4) the circumstances contributing to the initiation of illicit drug usage, with particular emphasis on the onset of drug use by youth.

SEC. 645. CONFERENCE REPORT AND FOLLOW-UP ACTIONS.

(a) FINAL REPORT.—Not more than 6 months after the date on which the Conference is convened, a final report of the Conference shall be submitted to the President and the Congress. The report shall include the findings and recommendations of the Conference as well as proposals for any legislative action necessary to implement the recommendations of the Conference. The final report of the Conference shall be available to the public.

(b) FOLLOW-UP ACTIONS.—The President shall report to the Congress annually, during the 3-year period following the submission of the final report of the Conference, on the status and implementation of the findings and recommendations of the Conference.

SEC. 646. ORGANIZATION OF CONFERENCE.

(a) PARTICIPATION OF APPROPRIATE CABINET OFFICERS AND OTHER OFFICIALS.—The President shall—

(1) ensure the active participation in the Conference of appropriate cabinet officers, and

(2) shall provide for the involvement in the Conference of—

(A) elected officials at the Federal, State, and local levels;

(B) persons from business and industry;

(C) individuals distinguished in medicine, law, sociology, education, and law enforcement; and

(D) private citizens who have first-hand experience with drug abuse.

(b) ASSISTANCE OF FEDERAL AGENCIES.—All Federal departments, agencies, and instrumentalities shall provide such support and assistance as may be necessary to facilitate the planning and administration of the Conference.

(c) NO PAYMENT OF INDIVIDUAL EXPENSES.—Each participant in the Conference shall be responsible for his or her expenses related to attending the Conference and shall not be reimbursed from funds appropriated to carry out this subtitle.

(d) DETAIL OF STAFF.—Appropriate cabinet officers may detail employees to work on the planning and administering of the Conference without regard to section 3341(b) of title 5, United States Code.

(e) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 1987 to carry out this subtitle such sums as may be necessary.

(f) RESTRICTION ON EXPENDITURES AND CONTRACTING.—New spending authority or authority to enter contracts as provided in this subtitle shall be effective only to such extent and in such amounts as are provided in advance in appropriation Acts.

SEC. 647. DEFINITIONS.

In this subtitle:

(1) CONTROLLED SUBSTANCE.—The term "controlled substance" has the meaning given such term in section 102(6) of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 802(6)).

(2) APPROPRIATE CABINET OFFICER.—The term "appropriate cabinet officers" means the Attorney General, the Secretary of State, the Secretary of Health and Human Services, the Secretary of Defense, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Transportation, the Secretary of Education, and such other cabinet officers as have responsibilities respecting controlled substances abuse and control (including combating illicit production, trafficking, or distribution of controlled substances).

(3) STATE.—The term "State" includes the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Northern Mariana Islands, the Virgin Islands, Guam, and American Samoa.

SEC. 648. EFFECTIVE DATE.

This subtitle shall become effective on October 1, 1986.

Subtitle E—Career Criminals

SEC. 651. SHORT TITLE.

This subtitle may be cited as the "Career Criminal Amendments Act of 1986".

SEC. 652. EXPANSION OF PREDICATE OFFENSES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 924(e)(1) of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking out "for robbery or burglary, or both," and inserting in lieu thereof "for a violent felony or a serious drug offense, or both,".

(b) DEFINITIONS.—Section 924(e)(2) of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking out subparagraph (A) and all that follows through subparagraph (B) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(A) the term 'serious drug offense' means—

"(i) an offense under the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 801 et seq.), the Controlled Substances Import and Export Act (21 U.S.C. 951 et seq.), or the first section or section 3 of Public Law 96-350 (21 U.S.C. 955a et seq.), for which a maximum term of imprisonment of ten years or more is prescribed by law; or

"(ii) an offense under State law, involving manufacturing, distributing, or possessing with intent to manufacture or distribute, a controlled substance (as defined in section 102 of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 802)), for which a maximum term of imprisonment of ten years or more is prescribed by law; and

"(B) the term 'violent felony' means any crime punishable by imprisonment for a term exceeding one year that—

"(i) has as an element the use, attempted use, or threatened use of physical force against the person of another; or

"(ii) involves conduct that presents a serious potential risk of physical injury to another.".

SEC. 653. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The amendments made by this subtitle shall take effect November 15, 1986.

Subtitle F—Drug and Alcohol Dependent Offenders Treatment

SEC. 655 SHORT TITLE.

This subtitle may be cited as the "Drug and Alcohol Dependent Offenders Treatment Act of 1986".

SEC. 656. PERMANENT AMENDMENT RELATING TO DUTIES OF DIRECTOR OF ADMINISTRATIVE OFFICE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The section of title 18, United States Code, that is redesignated section 3672 by section 212(a) of the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984 is amended by adding at the end thereof:

"He shall have the authority to contract with any appropriate public or private agency or person for the detection of and care in the community of an offender who is an alcohol-dependent person, or an addict or a drug-dependent person within the meaning of section 2 of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 201). This authority shall include the authority to provide equipment and supplies; testing; medical, educational, social, psychological, and vocational services; corrective and preventive guidance and training; and other rehabilitative services designed to protect the public and benefit the alcohol dependent person, addict, or drug dependent person by eliminating his dependence on alcohol or addicting drugs, or by controlling his dependence and his susceptibility to addiction. He may negotiate and award such contracts without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (41 U.S.C. 5).

"He shall pay for presentence studies and reports by qualified consultants and presentence examinations and reports by psychiatric or psychological examiners ordered by the court under subsection (b) or (c) of section 3552, except for studies conducted by the Bureau of Prisons.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this section shall take effect on the date of the taking effect of such redesignation.

SEC. 657. INTERIM AMENDMENT RELATING TO DUTIES OF DIRECTOR OF ADMINISTRATIVE OFFICE.

The second paragraph of section 4255 of title 18, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"The Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts shall have the authority to contract with any appropriate public or private agency or person for the detection of and care in the community of an offender who is an alcohol-dependent person, or an addict or a drug-dependent person within the meaning of section 2 of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 201). Such authority includes the authority to provide equipment and supplies; testing; medical, educational, social, psychological, and vocational services; corrective and preventive guidance and training; and other rehabilitative services designed to protect the public and benefit the alcohol dependent person, addict, or drug dependent person by eliminating that person's or addict's dependence on alcohol or addicting drugs, or by controlling that person's or addict's dependence and susceptibility to addiction. Such Director may negotiate and award such contracts without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (41 U.S.C. 5).".

SEC. 658. REAUTHORIZATION OF CONTRACT SERVICES.

Section 4(a) of the Contract Services for Drug Dependent Federal Offenders Act of 1978 is amended—

(1) by striking out "and $6,000,000" and inserting "$6,500,000" in lieu thereof; and

(2) by striking out the two periods at the end and inserting in lieu thereof "; $12,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987; $14,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1988; and $16,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1989.".

Subtitle G—Drug Enforcement Enhancement

SEC. 661. SHORT TITLE.

This subtitle may be cited as the "Drug Enforcement Enhancement Act of 1986".

SEC. 662. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

(a) DRUG ENFORCEMENT ADMINISTRATION.—There is authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 1987 for the Department of Justice, in addition to any amounts appropriated before the date of the enactment of this subtitle for fiscal year 1987, $60,000,000 for the Drug Enforcement Administration.

(b) ASSISTANT UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS.—There is authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 1987 for the Department of Justice, in addition to any amounts appropriated before the date of the enactment of this subtitle for fiscal year 1987, $31,000,000 for United States attorneys for assistant United States attorneys.

(c) DRUG LAW ENFORCEMENT BY DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.—There is authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 1987 for the Department of Justice, in addition to any amounts appropriated before the date of the enactment of this subtitle for fiscal year 1987, $167,000,000 of which—

(1) $140,000,000 shall be made available for the construction of Federal penal and correctional institutions,

(2) $20,000,000 shall be made available for United States marshals, and

(3) $7,000,000 shall be made available for the Federal Prison System.

Funds appropriated under this subsection shall remain available until expended.

(d) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS FOR FISCAL YEARS 1988 AND 1989.—(1) In addition to any other amounts that may be authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 1988 for the Department of Justice, there is authorized to be appropriated $450,000,000 for fiscal year 1988 for the Department of Justice for the construction of Federal penal and correctional institutions.

(2) In addition to any other amounts that may be authorized to be appropriated for 1989 for the Department of Justice, there is authorized to be appropriated $527,000,000 for fiscal year 1989 for the Department of Justice, of which—

(A) $500,000,000 shall be made available for the construction of Federal penal and correctional institutions, and

(B) $27,000,000 shall be made available for the Federal Prison System for salaries.

(3) Funds appropriated under paragraphs (1) and (2) shall remain available until expended.

SEC. 663. OFFICE OF JUSTICE ASSISTANCE DRUG GRANT PROGRAM.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAM.—Title I of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 (42 U.S.C. 3712 et seq.) is amended—

(1) by redesignating part M as part N,

(2) by redesignating section 1301 as section 1401, and

(3) by inserting after part L the following new part:

"PART M—GRANTS FOR DRUG LAW ENFORCEMENT PROGRAMS

"FUNCTION OF DIRECTOR

"SEC. 1301. The Director shall provide funds to eligible States and units of local government pursuant to this part.

"DESCRIPTION OF DRUG LAW ENFORCEMENT FORMULA GRANT PROGRAM

"SEC. 1302. The Bureau is authorized to make grants under this part to States for the purpose of enforcing State and local laws that establish offenses similar to offenses established in the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 801 et seq.).

"FEDERAL PORTION OF PROGRAM

"SEC. 1303. (a) The amount of any grant made under section 1302 of this title shall be equal to 50 per centum of the cost of programs and projects specified in the application of such grant, except that in the case of funds distributed to an Indian tribe which performs law enforcement functions (as determined by the Secretary of the Interior) for any such program or project, the amount of such grant shall be equal to 100 per centum of such cost.

"(b) The non-Federal portion of the cost of any program or project for which a grant is made under section 1302 of this title shall be in cash.

"ELIGIBILITY

"SEC. 1304. The Bureau is authorized to make grants under section 1302 of this title available to a State for the use of the State, and units of local government in the State, for enforcing State and local laws that establish offenses similar to offenses established in the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 801 et seq.).

"APPLICATIONS

"SEC. 1305. No grant may be made by the Bureau to a State, or by a State to an eligible recipient, pursuant to this part unless the application for such grant sets forth programs and projects which meet the purpose specified in section 1302 of this title and identifies the State agency or unit of local government which will implement each such program or project. The application shall be amended if new programs are to be added to the application or if the programs contained in the original application are not implemented. The application shall include—

"(1) an assurance that following the first fiscal year covered by an application and each fiscal year thereafter, the applicant shall submit to the Bureau or to the State, as the case may be—

"(A) a performance report concerning the activities carried out pursuant to section 1302 of this title; and

"(B) an assessment by the applicant of the impact of those activities on the purposes of such section and the needs and objectives identified in the applicant's statement;

"(2) a certification that Federal funds made available under section 1302 of this title will not be used to supplant State or local funds, but will be used to increase the amounts of such funds that would, in the absence of Federal funds, be made available for drug law enforcement activities;

"(3) a certification that funds required to pay the non-Federal portion of the cost of each program and project for which such grant is made shall be in addition to funds that would otherwise be made available for drug law enforcement by the recipients of grant funds;

"(4) an assurance that fund accounting, auditing, monitoring, and such evaluation procedures as may be necessary to keep such records as the Bureau shall prescribe shall be provided to assure fiscal control, proper management, and efficient disbursement of funds received under section 1302 of this title;

"(5) an assurance that the applicant shall maintain such data and information and submit such reports in such form, at such times, and containing such data and information as the Bureau may reasonably require to administer other provisions of this title;

"(6) a certification that its programs meet all the requirements of this section, that all the information contained in the application is correct, that there has been appropriate coordination with affected agencies, and that the applicant will comply with all provisions of this title and all other applicable Federal laws (such certification shall be made in a form acceptable to the Bureau and shall be executed by the chief executive or such other officer of the applicant qualified under regulations promulgated by the Bureau);

"(7) an assurance that the State will take into account the needs and requests of units of local government in the State and encourage local initiative in the development of programs which meet the purpose of section 1302;

"(8) an assurance that the State application described in this section, and any amendment to such application, has been submitted for review to the State legislature or its designated body (for purposes of this section, such application or amendment shall be deemed to be reviewed if the State legislature or such body does not review such application or amendment within the 60-day period beginning on the date such application or amendment is so submitted); and

"(9) an assurance that the State application and any amendment thereto was made public before submission to the Bureau and, to the extent provided under State law or established procedure, an opportunity to comment thereon was provided to citizens and to neighborhood and community groups.

"REVIEW OF APPLICATIONS

"SEC. 1306. (a) The Bureau shall provide financial assistance to each State applicant under section 1302 of this title to carry out the programs or projects submitted by such applicant upon determining that—

"(1) the application or amendment thereto is consistent with the requirements of this title; and

"(2) before the approval of the application and any amendment thereto the Bureau has made an affirmative finding in writing that the program or project has been reviewed in accordance with section 1305.

Each application or amendment made and submitted for approval to the Bureau pursuant to section 1305 of this title shall be deemed approved, in whole or in part, by the Bureau not later than sixty days after first received unless the Bureau informs the applicant of specific reasons for disapproval.

"(b) Grant funds awarded under section 1302 of this title shall not be used for land acquisition or construction projects.

"(c) The Bureau shall not finally disapprove any application, or any amendment thereto, submitted to the Director under this section without first affording the applicant reasonable notice and opportunity for reconsideration.

"ALLOCATION AND DISTRIBUTION OF FUNDS

"SEC. 1307. (a) Of the total amount appropriated for this part in any fiscal year, 65 per centum shall be set aside for grants under section 1302 of this title and allocated to States as follows:

"(1) $250,000 shall be allocated to each of the participating States.

"(2) Of the total funds remaining after the allocation under paragraph (1), there shall be allocated to each State an amount which bears the same ratio to the amount of remaining funds described in this paragraph as the population of such State bears to the population of all the participating States.

"(b)(1) Each State which receives funds under subsection (a) in a fiscal year shall distribute among units of local government, or combinations of units of local government, in such State for the purpose specified in section 1302 of this title that portion of such funds which bears the same ratio to the aggregate amount of such funds as the amount of funds expended by all units of local government for criminal justice in the preceding fiscal year bears to the aggregate amount of funds expended by the State and all units of local government in such State for criminal justice in such preceding fiscal year.

"(2) Any funds not distributed to units of local government under paragraph (1) shall be available for expenditure by the State involved.

"(3) For purposes of determining the distribution of funds under paragraph (1), the most accurate and complete data available for the fiscal year involved shall be used. If data for such fiscal year are not available, then the most accurate and complete data available for the most recent fiscal year preceding such fiscal year shall be used.

"(c) No funds allocated to a State under subsection (a) or received by a State for distribution under subsection (b) may be distributed by the Director or by the State involved for any program other than a program contained in an approved application.

"(d) If the Director determines, on the basis of information available to the Director during any fiscal year, that a portion of the funds allocated to a State for that fiscal year will not be required or that a State will be unable to qualify or receive funds under section 1302 of this title, or that a State chooses not to participate in the program established by this part, then such portion shall be awarded by the Director to urban, rural, and suburban units of local government or combinations thereof within such State, giving priority to those jurisdictions with greatest need.

"(e) Any funds not distributed under subsections (b) and (d) with respect to a State shall be reallocated under subsection (a), excluding such State and the population of such State.

"STATE OFFICE

"SEC. 1308. (a) The chief executive of each participating State shall designate a State office for purposes of—

"(1) preparing an application to obtain funds under section 1302 of this title; and

"(2) administering funds received under such section from the Bureau, including receipt, review, processing, monitoring, progress and financial report review, technical assistance, grant adjustments, accounting, auditing, and fund disbursements.

"(b) An office or agency performing other functions within the executive branch of a State may be designated to carry out the functions specified in subsection (a).

"DESCRIPTION OF DRUG LAW ENFORCEMENT DISCRETIONARY GRANT PROGRAM

"SEC. 1309. The Administrator of the Drug Enforcement Administration (hereinafter in this part referred to as the 'Administrator') is authorized to make grants under this part to States and to units of local government for the purpose of enforcing State and local laws that establish offenses similar to offenses established in the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 801 et seq.). The Administrator shall have final authority over all grants awarded by the Administrator under this part.

"PERCENTAGE OF APPROPRIATION FOR DISCRETIONARY PROGRAM

"SEC. 1310. (a) Of the total amount appropriated for this part in any fiscal year, 20 per centum shall be reserved and set aside for grants under section 1309 of this title in a special discretionary fund for use by the Administrator in carrying out such section. Grants made with funds reserved under this subsection may be made for amounts up to 100 per centum of the cost of the programs and projects contained in the approved application.

"(b)(1) Of the total amount appropriated to carry out this part, 15 per centum shall be reserved and set aside for grants under section 1309 in a special discretionary fund for use by the Administrator in carrying out such section. The amount of any grant made with funds reserved under this subsection shall be equal to 50 per centum of the cost of the programs and projects specified in the approved application.

"(2) In making grants under this subsection, the Administrator shall give consideration to the severity of the following drug law enforcement problems in the jurisdictions applying for such grants:

"(A) the unlawful importation of controlled substances (as defined in section 102(6) of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 802(6));

"(B) the unlawful production and processing of such substances; and

"(C) the unlawful diversion, distribution, and sale of such substances.

"(3) In awarding grants under this subsection, the Administrator shall give priority to jurisdictions in which such grants will have the greatest national and regional impact on combatting illegal trafficking in such substances.

"(4) An applicant may not receive a grant made with funds reserved under this subsection unless such applicant certifies that funds required to pay the non-Federal portion of the cost of each program and project for which such grant is made shall be in addition to funds that would otherwise be made available by such applicant for drug law enforcement.

"APPLICATION REQUIREMENTS

(b) INSPECTION.—Section 501 of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 (49 U.S.C. App. 1401) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"INSPECTION BY LAW ENFORCEMENT OFFICERS

"(g) The operator of an aircraft shall make available for inspection an aircraft's certificate or registration upon request by a Federal, State, or local law enforcement officer.".

(c) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—That portion of the table of contents contained in the first section of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 which appears under the side heading is amended by adding at the end the following:

"Sec. 501. Registration of aircraft nationality."

"(g) Inspection by law enforcement officers.".

SEC. 703. CRIMINAL PENALTIES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subsection (q) of section 902 of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 (49 U.S.C. App. 1472(q)) is amended to read as follows:

"VIOLATIONS IN CONNECTION WITH TRANSPORTATION OF CONTROLLED SUBSTANCES

"(q)(1) It shall be unlawful, in connection with transportation described in paragraph (2) and with knowledge of such transportation, for any person—

"(A) who is the owner of an aircraft eligible for registration under section 501, to knowingly and willfully operate, attempt to operate, or permit any other person to operate such aircraft if the aircraft is not registered under section 501 or the certificate of registration of the aircraft is suspended or revoked;

"(B) to operate or attempt to operate an aircraft eligible for registration under section 501 knowing either that such aircraft is not registered under section 501 or that the certificate of registration is suspended or revoked;

"(C) to knowingly and willfully serve, or attempt to serve, in any capacity as an airman without a valid airman certificate authorizing him to serve in such a capacity;

"(D) to knowingly and willfully employ for service or utilize any airman who does not possess a valid airman certificate authorizing him to serve in such capacity;

"(E) to knowingly and willfully operate an aircraft in violation of any rule, regulation, or requirement issued by the Administrator with respect to the display of navigation or anticollision lights; or

"(F) to knowingly operate an aircraft with a fuel tank or fuel system that has been installed or modified on the aircraft, unless such tank or system and the installation or modification of such tank or system is in accordance with all applicable rules, regulations, and requirements of the Administrator.

"(2) The transportation referred to in paragraph (1) is the transportation by aircraft of any controlled substance where such transportation is punishable by death or imprisonment for a term exceeding one year under a State or Federal law or is provided in connection with any act that is punishable by death or imprisonment for a term exceeding one year under a State or Federal law relating to a controlled substance (other than a law relating to simple possession of a controlled substance).

"(3) A person violating this subsection shall be subject to a fine not exceeding $25,000, or imprisonment not exceeding 5 years, or both.

"(4) A person who, in connection with transportation described in paragraph (2), operates an aircraft on which a fuel tank or fuel system has been installed or modified and does not carry aboard the aircraft any certificate required to be issued by the Administrator for such installation or modification shall be presumed to have violated subparagraph (F) of paragraph (1).

"(5) In the case of a violation of subparagraph (F) of paragraph (1), the fuel tank or fuel system and the aircraft involved shall be subject to seizure and forfeiture. The provisions of law relating to—

"(A) the seizure, summary and judicial forfeiture, and condemnation of property for violation of the customs laws;

"(B) the disposition of such property or the proceeds from the sale thereof;

"(C) the remission or mitigation of such forfeitures; and

"(D) the compromise of claims and the award of compensation to informers in respect of such forfeitures; shall apply to seizures and forfeitures under this paragraph. The Secretary may authorize such officers and agents as are necessary to carry out seizures and forfeitures under this paragraph, and such officers and agents shall have the powers and duties given to customs officers with respect to the seizure and forfeiture of property under the customs laws.

"(6) For purposes of this subsection, the term 'controlled substance' has the meaning given such term by section 102(6) of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 802(6)).".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—That portion of the table of contents of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 which appears under the side heading

"(q) Violations in connection with transportation of controlled substances.".

SEC. 704. DRUGS AND HIGHWAY SAFETY.

(a) STUDY.—The Secretary of Transportation shall conduct a study to determine the relationship between the usage of controlled substances and highway safety. Such study shall include a simulation of driving conditions, emergency situations, and driver performance under various drug and dosage conditions. Such study shall determine the incidence of controlled substance usage in highway accidents resulting in fatalities and the dosage levels for controlled substances which are most likely to result in impairment of driver performance.

(b) REPORT.—Not later than one year after the date of the enactment of this title, the Secretary of Transportation shall submit to Congress a report on the results of the study conducted under subsection (a).

TITLE VIII—COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION AND LABOR

SECTION 801. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "Drug Abuse Education and Prevention Act of 1986".

SEC. 802. FINDINGS AND PURPOSE.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that drug abuse education and prevention programs are an essential component of a comprehensive Federal initiative to reduce the demand for and use of drugs throughout the Nation.

(b) PURPOSE.—It is the purpose of this title to establish programs of drug abuse education and prevention (coordinated with related community efforts and resources) through the provision of Federal financial assistance—

(1) to States for grants to local and intermediate educational agencies and consortia to establish, operate, and improve local programs of drug abuse prevention, early intervention, rehabilitation referral, and education in elementary and secondary schools (including intermediate and junior high schools);

(2) to States for grants to and contracts with community-based organizations for programs of drug abuse prevention, early intervention, rehabilitation referral, and education for school dropouts and for school-age children after school hours and during summer vacations and other periods of non-attendance;

(3) to States for model, demonstration, training, and technical assistance activities;

(4) to institutions of higher education to establish, implement, and expand programs of drug abuse education and prevention (including rehabilitation referral) for students enrolled in colleges and universities; and

(5) to institutions of higher education in cooperation with State and local educational agencies for teacher training programs in drug abuse education and prevention.

Subtitle A—Establishment of Programs to Improve Drug Abuse Education and Prevention

SEC. 803. NATIONAL ADVISORY COUNCIL ON DRUG ABUSE EDUCATION AND PREVENTION.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL ADVISORY COUNCIL.—There is established a National Advisory Council on Drug Abuse Education and Prevention. The Advisory Council shall attract and focus national attention on drug-related problems, support and publicize programs of drug abuse education and prevention and advise the Secretary on programs and activities under this title.

(b) MEMBERSHIP.—The Advisory Council shall be composed of not less than 15 and not more than 25 individuals who are nationally prominent and recognized as broadly representative of education groups, parent groups, student groups, community and philanthropic organizations, State and local elected officials, law enforcement officials, the entertainment industry, professional and amateur athletics, and business. Members of the Advisory Council shall be appointed by the President to 4 year terms. A vacancy in the Advisory Council shall be filled in the manner in which the original appointment was made.

(c) ADMINISTRATION.—The Advisory Council shall meet at the call of the President or the Secretary of Education. Members of the Council shall serve without pay, but may be reimbursed for actual and necessary travel and expenses incurred in the performance of their duties on the Council. Upon request of the Council, the head of any Federal agency is authorized to detail any of the personnel of such agency to the Council to assist the Council in carrying out its duties under this title.

SEC. 804. ESTABLISHMENT.

The Secretary of Education shall establish Federal financial assistance programs for drug abuse education and prevention in elementary and secondary schools and institutions of higher education in accordance with this title.

SEC. 805. ALLOTMENT OF FUNDS.

(a) RESERVED AMOUNTS FOR FEDERAL PROGRAMS.—From the sums appropriated or otherwise made available to carry out this title for any fiscal year, the Secretary shall reserve—

(1) 1 percent for payments to Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, and the Northern Mariana Islands, to be allotted in accordance with their respective needs;

(2) 1 percent for programs for Indian children under section 833;

(3) 5 percent for national programs under section 831; and

(4) 10 percent for programs with institutions of higher education under section 832.

(b) ALLOTMENTS TO STATES.—

(1) From the remainder of the sums not reserved under subsection (a), the Secretary shall allot to each State an amount which bears the same ratio to the amount of such remainder as the school-age population of the State bears to the school-age population of all States, except that no State shall receive less than an amount equal to 0.5 percent of such remainder.

(2) The Secretary may reallot any amount of any allotment to a State to the extent that the Secretary determines that the State will not be able to obligate such amount within two years of allotment. Any such reallotment shall be made on the same basis as an allotment under paragraph (1).

(3) For purposes of this subsection, the term "State" means any of the fifty States, the District of Columbia, and Puerto Rico.

Subtitle B—State and Local Programs of Drug Abuse Education and Prevention

PART I—GENERAL

SEC. 806. ALLOCATION OF STATE FUNDS.

(a) AMOUNTS RESERVED FOR STATE ACTIVITIES.—From the payment made to a State for each fiscal year under section 805, the Governor shall reserve—

(1) 10 percent for State activities under section 811; and

(2) an additional amount, consistent with the number of school dropouts in the State, for the purposes of section 813.

(b) GRANTS TO LOCAL AND INTERMEDIATE EDUCATIONAL AGENCIES AND CONSORTIA.—From the remainder of the payment under section 805 not reserved under subsection (a), the State educational agency, in consultation with the State advisory council (described in section 812(a)(4)), shall make grants to local educational agencies, intermediate educational agencies, and consortia for activities under part III.

PART II—STATE PROGRAMS OF DRUG ABUSE EDUCATION AND PREVENTION

SEC. 811. STATE ACTIVITIES.

(a) USE OF FUNDS.—Funds made available to a State under section 806(a)(1) may be used in accordance with an approved application for—

(1) the development, acquisition, dissemination, and implementation of drug abuse education and prevention model curricular materials for elementary and secondary schools throughout the State;

(2) demonstration projects of drug abuse education and prevention (including programs and activities during after school hours, summer vacations, and other periods of non-attendance);

(3) programs of inservice and preservice training in drug abuse education and prevention for teachers, counselors, other educational personnel, public service personnel (including law enforcement officials), and community leaders;

(4) technical assistance to help local and intermediate educational agencies and consortia of such agencies and community-based organizations—

(A) in the planning and implementation of drug abuse prevention, early intervention, rehabilitation referral, and education programs, and

(B) in undertaking the coordination of such programs with related community efforts and resources;

(5) other drug abuse education and prevention activities, consistent with the purposes of this title; and

(6) State administrative costs.

(b) LIMITATION.—Not more than 5 percent of the funds available to a State under section 806(a)(1) may be used for administrative costs in carrying out the State's responsibilities under this part.

SEC. 812. STATE APPLICATIONS.

(a) REQUIREMENTS.—In order to receive a payment under section 805 for any fiscal year a State shall submit to the Secretary for approval an application which—

(1) sets forth a comprehensive Statewide plan for programs under this subtitle which includes the criteria and priorities for award of grants and contracts by the State under this subtitle;

(2) contains an estimate of the cost for the establishment and operation of such programs;

(3) designates the State agency or agencies responsible for the administration and supervision of programs assisted under this subtitle;

(4) provides for a State advisory council on drug abuse education and prevention, appointed by the Governor and determined to be broadly representative of the general public, which shall include the chief State school officer and persons representative of—

(A) parents of elementary and secondary schoolchildren,

(B) teachers and counselors,

(C) officers of State and local government,

(D) medical and mental health professionals,

(E) social service workers,
(F) the law enforcement community, and
(G) community-based organizations, to advise the Governor and other appropriate State agencies on State programs, the allocation of funds to local and intermediate educational agencies and consortia, and the planning, development, support, implementation, and evaluation of State-assisted programs under this title;

(5) provides assurances that the State will provide financial assistance under this subtitle only to local educational agencies, intermediate educational agencies, and consortia which establish and implement mandatory drug abuse education and prevention programs in elementary and secondary schools;

(6) provides assurances that the State will ensure an equitable distribution throughout the State of funds available under this subtitle;

(7) describes the manner in which the State will coordinate its efforts under this subtitle with appropriate Federal, State, and local law enforcement officials and with other programs in the community related to drug abuse education, prevention, treatment, and rehabilitation;

(8) provides that the Federal funds made available under this title shall be used to supplement and, to the extent practical, to increase the level of funds that would, in the absence of such Federal funds, be made available by the recipient for the purposes described in this title, and in no case supplant such funds;

(9) provides for an annual evaluation of the effectiveness of programs in the State assisted under this title;

(10) provides that the State will keep such records and provide such information to the Secretary as may be required for fiscal audit and program evaluation;

(11) contains assurances that there is compliance with the specific requirements of this title, including the Federal share limitations of section 842(c); and

(12) includes such other information and assurances as the Secretary reasonably determines to be necessary.

(b) PERIOD OF APPLICATION.—An application under this section shall be for a period not to exceed 3 fiscal years and may be amended annually as may be necessary to reflect changes without filing a new application.

SEC. 813. PROGRAMS FOR SCHOOL DROPOUTS AND SCHOOL-AGE CHILDREN DURING AFTER SCHOOL HOURS AND SUMMER VACATIONS.

From the amounts reserved under section 806(a)(2), the Governor of each State shall make grants to and enter into contracts with community-based organizations of demonstrated performance for drug abuse education and prevention programs for school dropouts and programs for school-age children after school hours and during the summer vacation and other periods of non-attendance. Any such grant or contract shall be subject to the applicable provisions of section 822.

PART III—LOCAL PROGRAMS OF DRUG ABUSE EDUCATION AND PREVENTION

SEC. 821. LOCAL DESIGN OF PROGRAMS.

(a) USE OF FUNDS.—Funds made available to a local or intermediate educational agency or consortium under section 806(b) may be used in accordance with an approved application for—

(1) the development, acquisition, and implementation of drug abuse education and prevention curricula for elementary and secondary schools;

(2) school-based programs of drug abuse prevention and early intervention (other than treatment);

(3) drug abuse education programs, including programs for parents and other family members;

(4) drug abuse prevention counseling programs for students and parents, including professional and peer counselors and involving the participation (where appropriate) of parent or other adult counselors and reformed abusers;

(5) programs of drug abuse treatment and rehabilitation referral;

(6) programs of inservice and preservice training in drug abuse education and prevention for teachers, counselors, other educational personnel, public service personnel (including law enforcement officials), and community leaders;

(7) other drug abuse education and prevention activities, consistent with the purposes of this subtitle; and

(8) administrative costs.

(b) LIMITATION.—Not more than 5 percent of any grant from funds available under section 806(b) may be used for administrative costs in carrying out programs under this part.

SEC. 822. LOCAL APPLICATIONS.

(a) REQUIREMENTS.—In order to be eligible to receive a grant under section 806(b) for any fiscal year, a local educational agency, intermediate educational agency, or consortium shall submit an application to the State educational agency for approval. Such application shall—

(1) set forth a comprehensive plan for programs of the applicant under this part;

(2) contain an estimate of the cost for the establishment and operation of such programs;

(3) as appropriate, establish or designate a local or regional advisory council on drug abuse education and prevention composed of individuals who are parents, teachers, officers of State and local government, medical professionals, representatives of the law enforcement community, community-based organizations, and other groups with interest and expertise in the field of drug abuse;

(4) describe the manner in which the applicant will establish, implement, or augment mandatory age-appropriate, developmentally-based, drug abuse education and prevention programs in elementary and secondary schools from the early elementary level through grade 12, and provide assurances that the applicant enforces related rules and regulations of student conduct;

(5) describe the manner in which the applicant will coordinate its efforts under this part with other programs in the community related to drug abuse education, prevention, treatment, and rehabilitation;

(6) provide assurances that the applicant will coordinate its efforts with Federal, State, and local law enforcement officials;

(7) provide assurances that the Federal funds made available under this title shall be used to supplement and, to the extent practical, to increase the level of funds that would, in the absence of such Federal funds, be made available by the applicant for the purposes described in this title, and in no case supplant such funds;

(8) provide assurances of compliance with the provisions of this title, including the Federal share limitations of section 842(c);

(9) agree to keep such records and provide such information to the State educational agency as reasonably may be required for fiscal audit and program evaluation, consistent with the responsibilities of the State agency under this title; and

(10) include such other information and assurances as the State educational agency reasonably determines to be necessary.

(b) THREE-YEAR APPLICATION.—An application under this section shall be for a period not to exceed 3 fiscal years and may be amended annually as may be necessary to reflect changes without filing a new application.

Subtitle C—Federal Programs of Drug Abuse Education and Prevention

SEC. 831. NATIONAL PROGRAMS OF DRUG ABUSE EDUCATION AND PREVENTION.

(a) NATIONAL PROGRAMS OF DRUG ABUSE EDUCATION AND PREVENTION.—From sums reserved by the Secretary under section 805(a)(3) the Secretary shall carry out the purposes of this section.

(b) NATIONAL EDUCATION PROGRAM.—The Secretary of Education in conjunction with the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall establish a national education and prevention program on drug abuse. The Secretary shall coordinate such drug abuse education and prevention program with other appropriate Federal programs related to drug abuse. The Secretary shall—

(1) provide information on drug abuse education and prevention to the Secretary of Health and Human Services for dissemination by the clearinghouse for alcohol and drug abuse information established under section 507 of the Public Health Service Act (as added by section 905 of this Act);

(2) provide technical assistance to State, local, and intermediate educational agencies and consortia in the selection and implementation of drug abuse education and prevention curricula, approaches, and programs to address most effectively the needs of the elementary and secondary schools served by such agencies; and

(3) identify research and development priorities with regard to school-based drug abuse education and prevention, particularly age-appropriate programs focusing on kindergarten through grade 4.

(c) NATIONAL STUDY OF DRUG ABUSE EDUCATION AND PREVENTION.—The Secretary of Education in conjunction with the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall conduct, directly or by contract, a study of the nature and effectiveness of existing Federal, State, and local programs of drug abuse education and prevention and shall submit a report of the findings of such study to the President and to the appropriate committees of the Congress not later than one year after the date of the enactment of this title.

SEC. 832. GRANTS TO INSTITUTIONS OF HIGHER EDUCATION.

(a) USES OF FUNDS.—

(1) From sums reserved by the Secretary under section 805(a)(4) for the purposes of this section, the Secretary shall make grants to or enter into contracts with institutions of higher education for drug abuse education and prevention programs under this section.

(2) The Secretary shall make financial assistance available on a competitive basis to institutions of higher education which apply under this section. An institution of higher education which desires to receive a grant or enter into a contract under this section shall file an application with the Secretary at such time, in such manner, and containing or accompanied by such information as the Secretary may reasonably require.

(3) The Secretary shall make every effort to ensure the equitable participation of private and public institutions of higher education (including community and junior colleges) and to ensure the equitable geographic participation of such institutions. In the award of grants and contracts under this section, the Secretary shall give appropriate consideration to colleges and universities of limited enrollment.

(4) Not less than 50 percent of sums available for the purposes of this section shall be used to make grants under subsection (d).

(b) TRAINING.—Training grants shall be available for—

(1) preservice and inservice training and instruction of teachers and other personnel in the field of drug abuse education and prevention in elementary and secondary schools;

(2) summer institutes and workshops in instruction in the field of drug abuse education and prevention;

(3) research and demonstration programs for teacher training and retraining in drug abuse education and prevention;

(4) training programs for law enforcement officials, community leaders, parents, and government officials.

(c) CURRICULA DEVELOPMENT PROGRAMS.—Grants shall be available for model demonstration programs to be coordinated with local elementary and secondary schools for the development and implementation of quality drug abuse education curricula. In the award of grants under this subsection, the Secretary shall give priority consideration to joint projects involving faculty of institutions of higher education and teachers in elementary and secondary schools in the practical application of the findings of educational research and evaluation and the integration of such research into drug abuse education and prevention programs.

(d) STUDENT PROGRAMS OF DRUG ABUSE EDUCATION AND PREVENTION.—Grants shall be available under this subsection to develop, implement, operate, and improve programs of drug abuse education and prevention (including rehabilitation referral) for students enrolled in institutions of higher education.

SEC. 833. PROGRAMS FOR INDIAN CHILDREN.

(a) PROGRAMS UNDER THIS TITLE.—

(1) From the funds reserved pursuant to section 805(a)(2), the Secretary shall make payments and grants and enter into other financial arrangements for Indian programs in accordance with this subsection.

(2) The Secretary of Education shall enter into such financial arrangements as the Secretary determines will best carry out the purposes of this title to meet the needs of Indian children on reservations serviced by elementary and secondary schools operated for Indian children by the Department of the Interior. Such arrangements shall be made pursuant to an agreement between the Secretary of Education and the Secretary of the Interior containing such assurances and terms as they determine will best achieve the purposes of this title.

(3) The Secretary of Education may, upon request of any Indian tribe which is eligible to contract with the Secretary of the Interior for the administration of programs under the Indian Self-Determination Act or under the Act of April 16, 1934, enter into grants or contracts with any tribal organization of any such Indian tribe to plan, conduct, and administer programs which are authorized and consistent with the purposes of this title (particularly programs for Indian children who are school dropouts), except that such grants or contracts shall be subject to the terms and conditions of section 102 of the Indian Self-Determination Act and shall be conducted in accordance with sections 4, 5, and 6 of the Act of April 16, 1934, which are relevant to the programs administered under this paragraph.

(4) Programs funded under this subsection shall be in addition to such other programs, services, and activities as are made available to eligible Indians under other provisions of this subtitle and conducted in accordance with a tribal action plan in accordance with section 1106.

(b) PROGRAMS FOR INDIAN CHILDREN UNDER OTHER LAWS.—

(1) Section 304 of the Indian Elementary and Secondary School Assistance Act (20 U.S.C. 241cc) is amended by—

(A) striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (1);

(B) striking out the period at the end of paragraph (2) and inserting in lieu thereof "; and"; and

(C) adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(3) the training of counselors at schools eligible for funding under this title in counseling techniques relevant to the treatment of alcohol and substance abuse.".

(2) Section 423 of the Indian Education Act (20 U.S.C. 3385b) is amended—

(A) in subsection (a), by inserting "clinical psychology," after "medicine,"; and

(B) by adding at the end of the section the following new subsection:

"(e) Not more than 10 percent of the fellowships awarded under subsection (a) shall be awarded, on a priority basis, to persons receiving training in guidance counseling with a specialty in the area of alcohol and substance abuse counseling and education.".

(3) Section 1121 of the Education Amendments of 1978 is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(i)(1) All schools funded by the Bureau of Indian Affairs shall include within their curriculum a program of instruction relating to alcohol and substance abuse prevention and treatment. The Assistant Secretary shall provide the technical assistance necessary to develop and implement such a program for students in kindergarten and grades 1 through 12, at the request of—

"(A) any Bureau of Indian Affairs school (subject to the approval of the school board of such school); or

"(B) any school board of a school operating under a contract entered into under the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act (25 U.S.C. 450 et seq.).

"(2) In schools operated directly by the Bureau of Indian Affairs, the Secretary shall, not later than 120 days after the date of the enactment of this subsection, provide for—

"(A) accurate reporting of all incidents relating to alcohol and substance abuse; and

"(B) individual student crisis intervention.

"(3) The programs requested under paragraph (1) shall be developed in consultation with the Indian tribe that is to be served by such program and health personnel in the local community of such tribe.

"(4) Schools requesting program assistance under this subsection are encouraged to involve family units and, where appropriate, tribal elders and Native healers in such instructions."

(4) Section 1129 of the Education Amendments of 1978 is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(e)(1) A financial plan under subsection (b) for a school may include, at the discretion of the local administrator and the school board of such school, a provision for a summer program of academic and support services for students of the school. Any such program may include activities related to the prevention of alcohol and substance abuse. The Assistant Secretary of Indian Affairs shall provide for the utilization of any such school facility during any summer in which such utilization is requested.

"(2) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, funds authorized under the Act of April 16, 1934 (25 U.S.C. 452 et seq.) and the Indian Education Act may be used to augment the services provided in each summer program at the option, and under the control, of the tribe or Indian controlled school receiving such funds.

"(3) The Assistant Secretary of Indian Affairs, acting through the Director of the Office of Indian Education Programs, shall provide technical assistance and coordination for any program described in paragraph (1) and shall, to the extent possible, encourage the coordination of such programs with any other summer programs that might benefit Indian youth, regardless of the funding source or administrative entity of any such program.".

Subtitle D—General Provisions

SEC. 841. DEFINITIONS.

(a) GENERAL PROVISION—Except as otherwise provided, the terms used in this title shall have the meaning provided under section 595 of the Education Consolidation and Improvement Act of 1981.

(b) OTHER DEFINITIONS.—For the purposes of this title, the following terms have the following meanings:

(1) The term "drug abuse education and prevention" means prevention, early intervention, rehabilitation referral, and education related to the abuse of alcohol and the use and abuse of controlled, illegal, addictive, or harmful substances, as determined by the Secretary in consultation with the Secretary of Health and Human Services.

(2) The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Education.

(3) The term "school-age population" means the population aged five through eighteen, as determined by the Secretary on the basis of the most recent satisfactory data available from the Department of Commerce.

(4) The term "school dropout" means an individual aged five through eighteen who is not attending any school and who has not received a secondary school diploma or a certificate from a program of equivalency for such a diploma.

(5) The term "State" means a State, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, Guam, American Samoa, the Northern Mariana Islands, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, or the Virgin Islands.

(6) The terms "institution of higher education", "secondary school", and "nonprofit" have the meanings provided in section 1001 of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 in effect prior to October 1, 1981.

(7) The term "consortium" means a consortium of local educational agencies or local educational agencies and an intermediate educational agency.

(8) The term "community-based organization" means a private nonprofit organization which is representative of a community or significant segments of a community and

SEC. 842. FUNCTIONS OF THE SECRETARY OF EDUCATION.

(a) ADMINISTRATION.—The Secretary shall be responsible for the administration of the programs authorized by this title.

(b) APPLICABILITY OF GENERAL EDUCATION PROVISIONS ACT.—Except as otherwise provided, the General Education Provisions Act shall apply to programs authorized by this title.

(c) PAYMENTS; FEDERAL SHARE.—

(1) For any fiscal year for which a State has an approved application, the Secretary shall pay from the allotment for that State under section 805 the Federal share of the costs of carrying out the State and local programs under such application.

(2) The Federal share of the costs for State and local programs assisted under subtitle B shall be 100 percent for the first year and 75 percent for the second and any subsequent year of assistance. The non-Federal share of the costs of programs, services, and activities under subtitle B may be public or private assistance and contributions, in cash or in kind, fairly valued.

(3) The Secretary may waive the non-Federal share requirement under this section upon making a determination that the local applicant serves a distressed area and is unable to meet such requirement or that the waiver would be equitable due to exceptional or uncontrollable circumstances affecting the ability of the applicant to meet such requirements, such as a natural disaster or an unforeseen and precipitous decline in financial resources.

SEC. 843. PARTICIPATION OF CHILDREN AND TEACHERS FROM PRIVATE NONPROFIT SCHOOLS.

(a) PARTICIPATION OF CHILDREN.—To the extent consistent with the number of school-age children in the State or in the school attendance area of a local or intermediate educational agency or consortium receiving financial assistance under subtitle B who are enrolled in private nonprofit elementary and secondary schools, such State, agency, or consortium shall, after consultation with appropriate private school representatives, make provision for including services and arrangements for the benefit of such children as will assure the equitable participation of such children in the purposes and benefits of this title.

(b) PARTICIPATION OF TEACHERS.—To the extent consistent with the number of school-age children in the State or in the school attendance area of a local or intermediate educational agency or consortium receiving financial assistance under subtitle B who are enrolled in private nonprofit elementary and secondary schools, such State, State educational agency, or State agency for higher education shall, after consultation with appropriate private school representatives, make provision, for the benefit of such teachers in such schools, for such teacher training as will assure equitable participation of such teachers in the purposes and benefits of this title.

(c) WAIVER.—If by reason of any provision of law a State, local, or intermediate educational agency or consortium is prohibited from providing for the participation of children or teachers from private nonprofit schools as required by subsections (a) and (b) or, if the Secretary determines that a State, local, or intermediate educational agency or consortium has substantially failed or is unwilling to provide for such participation on an equitable basis, the Secretary shall waive such requirements and shall arrange for the provision of services to such children or teachers which shall be subject to the requirements of this section. Such waivers shall be subject to consultation, withholding, notice, and judicial review requirements in accordance with paragraphs (3) and (4) of section 557(b) of the Education Consolidation and Improvement Act of 1981.

SEC. 844. STUDY OF DRUG ABUSE AT THE WORKPLACE.

(a) STUDY BY SECRETARY OF LABOR.—The Secretary of Labor shall conduct a study concerning the incidence, severity, and impact of drug abuse at the workplace. The Secretary shall investigate the availability and extent of counseling and rehabilitation services and other employer programs of prevention and assistance. Not later than two years after the date of the enactment of this title, the Secretary of Labor shall submit a report of the findings of such study to the Committee on Education and Labor of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Labor and Human Resources of the Senate.

(b) SPECIFIC AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—In addition to any other sums authorized to be appropriated under this title, there are authorized to be appropriated $3,000,000 for fiscal year 1987 to enable the Secretary of Labor to carry out the purposes of this section.

SEC. 845. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

(a) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated $350,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1987, 1988, and 1989 to carry out the purposes of this title.

(b) AVAILABILITY OF APPROPRIATIONS ON SCHOOL-YEAR BASIS.—Appropriations for any fiscal year for payments made under this title in accordance with regulations of the Secretary may be made available for obligation or expenditure by the agency or institution concerned on the basis of an academic or school year differing from such fiscal year.

(c) AVAILABILITY OF APPROPRIATIONS.—Funds appropriated for any fiscal year under this title shall remain available for obligation and expenditure until the end of the fiscal year succeeding the fiscal year for which such funds were appropriated.

(d) OBLIGATIONAL AUTHORITY.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this title, no authority to enter into contracts or financial assistance agreements under this title shall be effective except to such extent or in such amount as are provided in advance in appropriation Acts.

SEC. 846. EFFECTIVE DATE.

This title shall take effect October 1, 1986.

TITLE IX—COMMITTEE ON ENERGY AND COMMERCE

SEC. 901. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "Drug Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act of 1986".

Subtitle A—Financial Assistance to States and Communities

SEC. 902. ALLOTMENTS TO STATES.

Title XIX of the Public Health Service Act is amended by adding at the end the following:

"PART D—EMERGENCY SUBSTANCE ABUSE TREATMENT AND PREVENTION

"AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 1935. For the purpose of the Agency for Substance Abuse Prevention and for allotments under sections 1937 and 1938, there is authorized to be appropriated $180,000,000 for fiscal year 1987.

"AGENCY FOR SUBSTANCE ABUSE PREVENTION

"SEC. 1936. Of the funds appropriated under section 1935, $30,000,000 shall be made available for the Agency for Substance Abuse Prevention established under section 507.

"ALLOTMENTS FOR TREATMENT SERVICES FOR DRUG ABUSE

"SEC. 1937. (a) From two thirds of the amount appropriated under section 1935 and available for allotments, the Secretary shall allot to each State an amount determined by a formula prescribed by the Secretary which is based equally on the population of each State and on the population of each State weighted by its relative per capita income. Any amount paid to a State from its allotment and remaining unobligated at the end of fiscal year 1987 shall be returned to the Treasury.

"(b) Amounts paid to a State under its allotment under subsection (a) shall be used to provide treatment and rehabilitation services for persons suffering from drug abuse. In using its allotment under subsection (a), a State shall give priority, to the extent practicable, to treatment and rehabilitation services for individuals in the age group 15 to 24.

"(c) In order to receive an allotment under subsection (a) each State shall transmit an application to the Secretary. Each such application shall be in such form and transmitted by such date as the Secretary shall require. Each such application shall contain a plan for the use of amounts paid to the State under its allotment in accordance with this section and section 1939.

"ALLOTMENTS FOR COMMUNITY-BASED PREVENTION ACTIVITIES

"SEC. 1938. (a) From one-third of the amounts appropriated under section 1935 and available for allotments, the Secretary, acting through the Agency for Substance Abuse Prevention established under section 507, shall allot to each State an amount determined on the basis of the relative population of each State in the age group of 5 through 24.

"(b) Amounts paid to a State under its allotment under subsection (a) shall be used for—

"(1) the development by the State of a substance abuse prevention education program,

"(2) the development of community-based substance abuse prevention activities among school-aged children which will make the use of drugs unattractive to such children,

"(3) the development by the State of educational programs relating to the risks presented by alcohol and drug abuse to pregnant women and children, and

"(4) the development by the State of an education program relating to the risks of acquired immune deficiency syndrome among individuals who use drugs intravenously and relating to the transmittal of acquired immune deficiency syndrome from pregnant women to unborn children.

"(c) In order to receive an allotment under subsection (a) each State shall transmit an application to the Secretary. Each such application shall be in such form and transmitted by such date as the Secretary shall require. Each such application shall contain a plan for the use of amounts paid to the State under its allotment in accordance with this section and section 1939.

"GENERAL PROVISIONS

"SEC. 1939. (a) A State may not use amounts paid to it under its allotment under section 1937 or 1938 to—

"(1) provide inpatient hospital services,

"(2) make cash payments to intended recipients of health services,

"(3) purchase or improve land, purchase, construct, or permanently improve (other than minor remodeling) any building or other facility, or purchase major medical equipment,

"(4) satisfy any requirement for the expenditure of non-Federal funds as a condition for the receipt of Federal funds,

"(5) pay administrative costs, or

"(6) provide financial assistance to any entity other than a public or nonprofit private entity.

"(b) The provisions of part B which are not inconsistent with subsection (a) or sections 1937 or 1938 shall apply with respect to allotments made under sections 1937 and 1938.".

(iv) the carrier operating the 2 comprehensive medical plans under section 8903(4) of title 5, United States Code, with the largest number of enrollments, as determined by the Office; and

(B) shall cover a sufficient number of enrollees and family members to provide an adequate basis on which to make any determination referred to in subsection (b).

(2) The demonstration project shall—

(A) to the extent that it involves the plans under clauses (i) through (iii) of paragraph (1)(A), be conducted within at least 1, and not more than 4, standard metropolitan statistical areas, as determined by the Office; and

(B) to the extent that it involves the carrier referred to in clause (iv) of paragraph (1)(A), be conducted within the standard metropolitan statistical area which includes Portland, Oregon.

A standard metropolitan statistical area may not be selected for inclusion under subparagraph (A) unless such area is one within which not less than 10,000, and not more than 25,000, employees and annuitants reside.

(d) BENEFITS.—Under the demonstration project, any contract under chapter 89 of title 5, United States Code, between the Office and the carrier offering a plan described in subsection (c)(1)(A)—

(1) shall, to the extent that such contract relates to individuals covered by the demonstration project, include benefits relating to—

(A) inpatient detoxification;

(B) patient assessment;

(C) outpatient therapy, including, wherever appropriate, worksite-based evening and weekend treatment programs, individual therapy, and group therapy;

(D) inpatient therapy;

(E) follow-up patient counselling; and

(F) counselling for family members of the individual having the abuse problem; and

(2) may, to the extent that such contract relates to individuals covered by the demonstration project, include benefits for related support services, including child care or other dependent care.

(e) CONSULTATION.—The Office shall consult with appropriate representatives of carriers, labor organizations representing Government employees, and agency heads with regard to—

(1) the determinations required under subsection (c)(2)(A);

(2) any maximums, limitations, exclusions, or other terms or conditions relating to the benefits described in subsection (d); and

(3) any other matter relating to the design, conduct, or evaluation of the demonstration project which the Office considers appropriate.

(f) COORDINATION WITH OTHER GOVERNMENT PROGRAMS.—The Office shall coordinate the demonstration project with any activities carried out under—

(1) section 7904 of title 5, United States Code (as added by section 1003), relating to employee assistance programs offered by Executive agencies with respect to drug abuse and alcohol abuse;

(2) subchapter VI of chapter 73 of title 5, United States Code (as added by section 1001), relating to programs and services for drug abuse and alcohol abuse;

(3) section 1002, relating to an educational program for Federal employees with respect to drug abuse and alcohol abuse; and

(4) other related programs.

(g) EVALUATION AND REPORTING REQUIREMENTS.—(1) The Office shall by contract provide for the periodic evaluation of the demonstration project with respect to—

(A) cost and efficacy;

(B) effects on employee productivity; and

(C) the feasibility and desirability of offering the benefits provided under the demonstration project on a general basis under chapter 89 of title 5, United States Code.

(2)(A) The Office shall—

(i) not later than March 15, 1990, submit an interim report to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Governmental Affairs of the Senate on the demonstration project; and

(ii) not later than April 1, 1991, submit to each of the committees referred to in clause (i) a final report on the project.

(B) Each report submitted under subparagraph (A) shall include a copy of the most recent evaluation received by the Office under paragraph (1).

(h) FUNDING.—(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, individual contributions and Government contributions under section 8906 of title 5, United States Code, shall be determined as if the preceding provisions of this section had not been enacted.

(2) There is authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out this section (including any additional administrative costs).

TITLE XI—COMMITTEE ON INTERIOR AND INSULAR AFFAIRS

Subtitle A—Indians and Alaska Natives

SEC. 1101. SHORT TITLE.

This subtitle may be cited as the "Indian Alcohol and Substance Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act of 1986".

PART I—GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 1102. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds and declares that—

(1) the Federal Government has a historical relationship and unique legal and moral responsibility to Indian tribes and their members,

(2) included in this responsibility is the treaty, statutory, and historical obligation to assist the Indian tribes in meeting the health and social needs of their members,

(3) alcoholism and alcohol and substance abuse is the most severe health and social problem facing Indian tribes and people today and nothing is more costly to Indian people than the consequences of alcohol and substance abuse measured in physical, mental, social, and economic terms,

(4) alcohol and substance abuse is the leading generic risk factor among Indians and Indians die from alcoholism at over 4 times the age-adjusted rates for the United States population and alcohol and substance misuse results in a rate of years of potential life lost nearly 5 times that of the United States,

(5) 4 of the top 10 causes of death among Indians are alcohol and drug related injuries (18 percent of all deaths), chronic liver disease and cirrhosis (5 percent), suicide (3 percent), and homicide (3 percent),

(6) primarily because deaths from unintentional injuries and violence occur disproportionately among young people, the age-specific death rate for Indians is approximately double the United States rate for the 15 to 45 age group,

(7) Indians between the ages of 15 and 24 years of age are more than 2 times as likely to commit suicide as the general population and approximately 80 percent of those suicides are alcohol-related,

(8) Indians between the ages of 15 and 24 years of age are twice as likely as the general population to die in automobile accidents, 75 percent of which are alcohol-related,

(9) the Indian Health Service, which is charged with treatment and rehabilitation efforts, has directed only 1 percent of its budget for alcohol and substance abuse problems,

(10) the Bureau of Indian Affairs, which has responsibility for programs in the fields of education, social services, law enforcement, and other programs, has assumed little responsibility for coordinating its various efforts to focus on the epidemic of alcohol and substance abuse among Indian people,

(11) this lack of emphasis and priority continues despite the fact that Bureau of Indian Affairs and Indian Health Service officials publicly acknowledge that alcohol and substance among Indian youth is the most serious health and social problem facing the Indian people, and

(12) the Indian tribes have the primary responsibility for protecting and ensuring the well-being of their communities and that the resources available through actions taken under this subtitle will be provided in order to assist Indian tribes in meeting those responsibilities.

SEC. 1103. PURPOSE.

It is the purpose of this subtitle to—

(1) authorize and develop a comprehensive, coordinated attack upon the illegal narcotics traffic in Indian country and the deleterious impact of alcohol and substance abuse upon Indian tribes and their members,

(2) provide needed direction and guidance to those Federal agencies responsible for Indian programs to identify and focus existing programs and resources, including those made available by this subtitle, upon this problem,

(3) provide authority and opportunities for Indian tribes to develop and implement a coordinated program for the prevention and treatment of alcohol and substance abuse at the local level, and

(4) to modify or supplement existing programs and authorities in the areas of education, family and social services, law enforcement and judicial services, and health services to further the purposes of this subtitle.

SEC. 1104. DEFINITIONS.

For purposes of this subtitle:

(1) The term "agency" means the local administrative entity of the Bureau of Indian Affairs serving one or more Indian tribes within a defined geographic area.

(2) The term "youth" shall have the meaning given it in any particular Tribal Action Plan adopted pursuant to section 1106, except that, for purposes of statistical reporting under this subtitle, it shall mean a person who is 18 years or younger or who is in attendance at a secondary school.

(3) The term "Indian tribe" means any Indian tribe, band, nation, or other organized group or community of Indians (including any Alaska Native village or regional or village corporation as defined in, or established pursuant to, the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act (43 U.S.C. 1601 et seq.) which is recognized as eligible for special programs and services provided by the United States to Indians because of their status as Indians.

(4) The term "prevention and treatment" includes, as appropriate—

(A) efforts to identify, and the identification of, individuals who are at risk with respect to, or who are abusers of, alcohol or controlled substances,

(B) intervention into cases of on-going alcohol and substance abuse to halt a further progression of such abuse,

(C) prevention through education and the provision of alternative activities,

(D) treatment for alcohol and substance abusers to help abstain from, and alleviate the effects of, abuse,

(E) rehabilitation to provide on-going assistance, either on an inpatient or outpatient basis, to help individuals reform or abstain from alcohol or substance abuse,

(F) follow-up or after-care to provide the appropriate counseling and assistance on an outpatient basis, and

(G) referral to other sources of assistance or resources.

(5) The term "service unit" means an administrative entity within the Indian Health Service or a tribe or tribal organization operating health care programs or facilities with funds from the Indian Health Service under the Indian Self-Determination Act through which the services are provided, directly or by contract, to the eligible Indian population within a defined geographic area.

PART II—COORDINATION OF RESOURCES AND PROGRAMS

SEC. 1105. INTER-DEPARTMENTAL MEMORANDUM OF AGREEMENT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of this subtitle, the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall develop and enter into a Memorandum of Agreement which shall, among other things—

(1) determine and define the scope of the problem of alcohol and substance abuse for Indian tribes and their members and its financial and human costs, and specifically identify such problems affecting Indian youth,

(2) identify and assess—

(A) the resources and programs of the Bureau of Indian Affairs and Indian Health Service, and

(B) other Federal, tribal, State and local, and private resources and programs, which would be relevant to a coordinated effort to combat alcohol and substance abuse among Indian people, and specifically among Indian youth, including those programs and resources made available by this subtitle,

(3) develop and establish appropriate minimum standards for each agency's program responsibilities under the Memorandum of Agreement which may be—

(A) the existing Federal or State standards in effect, or

(B) in the absence of such standards, new standards which will be developed and established in consultation with Indian tribes,

(4) coordinate the Bureau of Indian Affairs and Indian Health Service alcohol and substance abuse programs existing on the date of the enactment of this subtitle with programs or efforts established by this subtitle,

(5) delineate the responsibilities of the Bureau of Indian Affairs and the Indian Health Service to coordinate alcohol and substance abuse-related services at the central, area, agency, and service unit levels,

(6) direct Bureau of Indian Affairs agency and education superintendents and the Indian Health Service service unit directors to cooperate fully with tribal requests made pursuant to section 1106, and

(7) provide for an annual review of such agreements by the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Health and Human Services.

(b) CHARACTER OF ACTIVITIES.—To the extent that there are new activities undertaken pursuant to this subtitle, those activities shall supplement, not supplant, activities, programs, and local actions that are ongoing on the date of the enactment of this subtitle. Such activities shall be undertaken in the manner least disruptive to tribal control, in accordance with the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act (25 U.S.C. 450 et seq.), and local control, in accordance with section 1130 of the Education Amendments of 1978 (25 U.S.C. 2010).

(c) CONSULTATION.—The Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall, in developing the Memorandum of Agreement under subsection (a), consult with and solicit the comments of—

(1) interested Indian tribes,

(2) Indian individuals,

(3) Indian organizations, and

(4) professionals in the treatment of alcohol and substance abuse.

(d) PUBLICATION.—The Memorandum of Agreement under subsection (a) shall be submitted to Congress and published in the Federal Register not later than 190 days after the date of enactment of this subtitle. At the same time as publication in the Federal Register, the Secretary of the Interior shall provide a copy of this subtitle and the Memorandum of Agreement under subsection (a) to each Indian tribe.

SEC. 1106. TRIBAL ACTION PLANS.

(a) IN GENERAL—The governing body of any Indian tribe may, at its discretion, adopt a resolution for the establishment of a Tribal Action Plan to coordinate available resources and programs, including programs and resources made available by this subtitle, in an effort to combat alcohol and substance abuse among its members. Such resolution shall be the basis for the implementation of this subtitle and the Memorandum of Agreement under section 1105.

(b) COOPERATION.—At the request of any Indian tribe pursuant to a resolution adopted under subsection (a), the Bureau of Indian Affairs agency and education superintendents and the Indian Health Service service unit director providing services to such tribe shall cooperate with the tribe in the development of a Tribal Action Plan to coordinate resources and programs relevant to alcohol and substance abuse prevention and treatment. Upon the development of such a plan, such superintendents and director, as directed by the Memorandum of Agreement established under section 1105, shall enter into an agreement with the tribe for the implementation of the Tribal Action Plan under subsection (a).

(c) PROVISIONS.—

(1) Any Tribal Action Plan entered into under subsection (b) shall provide for—

(A) the establishment of a Tribal Coordinating Committee which shall—

(i) at a minimum, have as members a tribal representative who shall serve as Chairman and the Bureau of Indian Affairs agency and education superintendents and the Indian Health Service service unit director, or their representatives,

(ii) have primary responsibility for the implementation of the Tribal Action Plan,

(iii) have the responsibility for on-going review and evaluation of, and the making of recommendations to the tribe relating to, the Tribal Action Plan, and

(iv) have the responsibility for designating key Federal, tribal or other personnel for training in the prevention and treatment of Indians affected by alcohol and substance abuse as provided under section 1127, and

(B) the incorporation of the minimum standards for those programs and services which it encompasses which shall be—

(i) the Federal or State standards as provided in section 1105(a)(3), or

(ii) applicable tribal standards, if such standards are no less stringent than the Federal or State standards.

(2) Any Tribal Action Plan may, among other things, provide for—

(A) an assessment of the scope of the problem of alcohol and substance abuse for the Indian tribe which adopted a resolution for the adoption of the Tribal Action Plan and its members,

(B) the identification and coordination of the range of available programs and resources relevant to a program of alcohol and substance abuse prevention and treatment for tribal members,

(C) the establishment and prioritization of goals and efforts needed to meet those goals, and

(D) the identification of the community and family roles in any of the efforts undertaken as part of the Tribal Action Plan.

(d) GRANTS.—The Secretary of the Interior may make grants to Indian tribes adopting a resolution pursuant to subsection (a) to provide technical assistance in the development of a Tribal Action Plan. In allocating funds appropriated for such grants, the Secretary shall take into consideration—

(1) the population of the Indian tribe receiving the grant,

(2) the size of the tribe's reservation or service area,

(3) the scope of intended efforts under a Tribal Action Plan as identified by the tribe in its resolution adopted pursuant to subsection (a), and

(4) the commitment of the Indian tribe as measured by the tribal funds or other tribal resources made available to carry out the purposes of this subtitle.

There is authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $8,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1987, 1988, and 1989 for grants under this subsection.

(e) FEDERAL ACTION.—If any Indian tribe does not adopt a resolution as provided in subsection (a) within 180 days after the publication of the Memorandum of Agreement in the Federal Register as provided in section 1105, the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall require the Bureau of Indian Affairs agency and education superintendents and the Indian Health Service service unit director serving such tribe to enter into an agreement to identify and coordinate available programs and resources to carry out the purposes of this subtitle for such tribe. After such an agreement has been entered into for a tribe such tribe may adopt a resolution under subsection (a).

SEC. 1107. DEPARTMENTAL RESPONSIBILITY.

(a) IMPLEMENTATION.—The Secretary of the Interior, acting through the Bureau of Indian Affairs, and the Secretary of Health and Human Services, acting through the Indian Health Service, shall bear equal responsibility for the implementation of this subtitle in cooperation with Indian tribes.

(b) OFFICE OF ALCOHOL AND SUBSTANCE ABUSE.—

(1) In order to better coordinate the various programs of the Bureau of Indian Affairs in carrying out this subtitle, there is established within the Office of the Assistant Secretary of Indian Affairs an Office of Alcohol and Substance Abuse. The director of such office shall be appointed by the Assistant Secretary on a permanent basis at no less than a grade GS-15 of the General Schedule.

(2) In addition to other responsibilities which may be assigned to such Office, it shall be responsible for—

(A) monitoring the performance and compliance of programs of the Bureau of Indian Affairs in meeting the goals and purposes of this subtitle and the Memorandum of Agreement entered into under section 1105, and

(B) serving as a point of contact within the Bureau of Indian Affairs for Indian tribes and the Tribal Coordinating Committees regarding the implementation of this subtitle, the Memorandum of Agreement, and any Tribal Action Plan established under section 1106.

(c) INDIAN YOUTH PROGRAMS OFFICER.—

(1) There is established in the Office of Alcohol and Substance Abuse the position to be known as the Indian Youth Programs Officer.

(2) The position of Indian Youth Programs Officer shall be established on a permanent basis at no less than the grade of GS-14 of the General Schedule.

(3) In addition to other responsibilities which may be assigned to the Indian Youth Programs Officer relating to Indian Youth, such Officer shall be responsible for—

(A) monitoring the performance and compliance of programs of the Bureau of Indian Affairs in meeting the goals and purposes of this subtitle and the Memorandum of Agreement entered into under section 1105 as they relate to Indian youth efforts, and

(B) providing advice and recommendations, including recommendations submitted by Indian tribes and Tribal Coordinating Committees, to the Director of the Office of Alcohol and Substance Abuse as they relate to Indian youth.

SEC. 1108. CONGRESSIONAL INTENT.

It is the intent of Congress that—

(1) specific Federal laws, and administrative regulations promulgated thereunder, establishing programs of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, the Indian Health Service, and other Federal agencies, and

(2) general Federal laws, including laws limiting augmentation of Federal appropriations or encouraging joint or cooperative funding, shall be liberally construed and administered to achieve the purposes of this subtitle.

SEC. 1109. FEDERAL FACILITIES, PROPERTY, AND EQUIPMENT.

(a) FACILITY AVAILABILITY.—In the furtherance of the purposes and goals of this subtitle, the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall make available for community use, to the extent permitted by law and as may be provided in a Tribal Action Plan, local Federal facilities, property, and equipment, including school facilities. Such facility availability shall include school facilities under the Secretary of the Interior's jurisdiction, provided that the use of any school facilities shall be conditioned upon approval of the local school board with jurisidiction over such school.

(b) COSTS.—Any additional cost associated with the use of Federal facilities, property, or equipment under subsection (a) may be borne by the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Health and Human Services out of available funds, by other Federal funds if not otherwise prohibited by law, or by tribal, State or local, or private funds. This subsection does not require the Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary of Health and Human Services to expend additional funds to meet the additional costs which may be associated with the provision of such facilities, property, or equipment for community use. Where the use of Federal facilities, property, or equipment under subsection (a) furthers the purposes and goals of this subtitle, the use of funds other than those funds appropriated to the Department of the Interior or the Department of Health and Human Services to meet the additional costs associated with such use shall not constitute an augmentation of Federal appropriations.

(c) SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.—Subject to the availability of specific appropriations, the Secretary of the Interior shall—

(1) establish summer recreation, employment, and counseling programs for Indian youth on reservations,

(2) keep open for those weeks not within the normal school year such Bureau of Indian Affairs funded or contracted schools, subject to the approval of the school board involved, and as the Secretary determines to be necessary to provide facilities for the programs established under paragraph (1),

(3) take all steps necessary to preserve any school property made available for any programs established under paragraph (1) and to defray all expenses associated with such programs, including facility expenses, and

(4) provide, as needed, salaried coordinators for such programs.

PART III—INDIAN YOUTH PROGRAMS

SEC. 1110. REVIEW OF PROGRAMS.

(a) REVIEW.—In the development of the Memorandum of Agreement required by section 1105, the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Health and Human Services, in cooperation with the Secretary of Education shall review and consider—

(1) the various programs established by Federal law providing education services or benefits to Indian children,

(2) tribal, State, and local, and private educational resources and programs,

(3) the various programs established by Federal law providing family and social services and benefits for Indian families and children,

(4) various programs and resources established by Federal law relating to youth employment, recreation, cultural, and community activities, and

(5) tribal, State, and local, and private resources for programs similar to those cited in paragraphs (3) and (4), to determine their applicability and relevance in carrying out the purposes of this subtitle.

(b) PUBLICATION.—The results of the review conducted under subsection (a) shall be provided to each Indian tribe as soon as possible for their consideration and use in the development or modification of a Tribal Action Plan under section 1106.

SEC. 1111. INDIAN EDUCATION PROGRAMS.

(a) PILOT PROGRAMS.—The Assistant Secretary of Indian Affairs shall develop and implement a pilot program in selected schools to determine the effectiveness of summer youth programs in furthering the purposes and goals of the Indian Alcohol and Substance Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act of 1986. For the pilot program there are authorized to be appropriated $5,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1987, 1988, and 1989.".

(b) USE OF FUNDS.—Federal financial assistance made available to public or private schools because of the enrollment of Indian children pursuant to—

(1) the Act of April 16, 1934, as amended by the Indian Education Assistance Act, (25 U.S.C. 452 et seq.),

(2) the Indian Elementary and Secondary School Assistance Act (20 U.S.C. 241aa et seq.), and

(3) the Indian Education Act (20 U.S.C. 3385), may be used to support a program of instruction relating to alcohol and substance abuse prevention and treatment.

SEC. 1112. NEWSLETTER.

The Secretary of the Interior shall, not later than 120 days after the date of the enactment of this subtitle, publish an alcohol and substance abuse newsletter in cooperation with the Secretary of Health and Human Services and the Secretary of Education to report on Indian alcohol and substance abuse projects and programs. The newsletter shall—

(1) be published once in each calendar quarter,

(2) include reviews of programs determined by the Secretary of the Interior to be exemplary and provide sufficient information to enable interested persons to obtain further information about such programs, and

(3) be circulated without charge to—

(A) schools,

(B) tribal offices,

(C) Bureau of Indian Affairs' agency and area offices,

(D) Indian Health Service area and service unit offices,

(E) Indian Health Service alcohol programs, and

(F) other entities providing alcohol and substance abuse related services or resources to Indian people.

SEC. 1113. EMERGENCY SHELTERS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—A Tribal Action Plan adopted pursuant to section 1106 may make such provisions as may be necessary and practical for the establishment, funding, licensing, and operation of emergency shelters or half-way houses for Indian youth who are alcohol or substance abusers, including youth who have been arrested for offenses directly or indirectly related to alcohol or substance abuse.

(b) REFERRALS.—

(1) In any case where an Indian youth is arrested or detained by the Bureau of Indian Affairs or tribal law enforcement personnel for an offense relating to alcohol or substance abuse, other than for a status offense as defined by the Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act of 1974, under circumstances where such youth may not be immediately restored to the custody of his parents or guardians and where there is space available in an appropriately licensed and supervised emergency shelter or half-way house, such youth shall be referred to such facility in lieu of incarceration in a secured facility unless such youth is deemed a danger to himself or to other persons.

(2) In any case where there is a space available in an appropriately licensed and supervised emergency shelter or half-way house, the Bureau of Indian Affairs and tribal courts are encouraged to refer Indian youth convicted of offenses directly or indirectly related to alcohol and substance abuse to such facilities in lieu of sentencing to incarceration in a secured juvenile facility.

(c) DIRECTION TO STATES.—In the case of any State that exercises criminal jurisdiction over any part of Indian country under section 1162 of title 18 of the United States Code or section 401 of the Act of April 11, 1968 (25 U.S.C. 1321), such State is urged to require its law enforcement officers to—

(1) place any Indian youth arrested for any offense related to alcohol or substance abuse in a temporary emergency shelter described in subsection (d) or a community-based alcohol or substance abuse treatment facility in lieu of incarceration to the extent such facilities are available, and

(2) observe the standards promulgated under subsection (d).

(d) STANDARDS.—The Assistant Secretary of Indian Affairs shall, as part of the development of the Memorandum of Agreement set out in section 1105, promulgate standards by which the emergency shelters established under a program pursuant to subsection (a) shall be established and operate.

(e) HOUSING INVENTORY.—Upon the request of any Indian tribe, the Bureau of Indian Affairs shall include in its housing inventory for such tribe the lack of an emergency shelter or half-way house as an unmet housing need. The construction or renovation of such a facility shall be considered an eligible activity under the Bureau of Indian Affairs' Housing Improvement Program.

(f) FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE.—To assist Indian tribes in the construction, renovation, and operation of emergency shelters, half-way houses, or foster care homes to provide emergency care for Indian youth who are affected by alcohol and substance abuse there is authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $10,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1987, 1988, and 1989. The Secretary of the Interior shall allocate funds appropriated pursuant to this subsection on the basis of priority of need of the various Indian tribes and such funds, when allocated, shall be subject to contracting pursuant to the Indian Self-Determination Act.

SEC. 1114. SOCIAL SERVICES REPORTS.

(a) DATA.—The Secretary of the Interior, with respect to the administration of any family or social services program by the Bureau of Indian Affairs directly or through contracts under the Indian Self-Determination Act, shall require the compilation of data relating to the number and types of child abuse and neglect cases seen and the type of assistance provided. Additionally, such data should also be categorized to reflect those cases that involve, or appear to involve, alcohol and substance abuse, those cases which are recurring, and those cases which involve other minor siblings.

(b) REFERRAL OF DATA.—The data compiled pursuant to subsection (a) shall be provided annually to the affected Indian tribe and Tribal Coordinating Committee to assist them in developing or modifying a Tribal Action Plan and shall also be submitted to the Indian Health Service service unit director who will have responsibility for compiling a tribal comprehensive report as provided in section 1129.

(c) CONFIDENTIALITY.—In carrying out the requirements of subsections (a) and (b), the Secretary shall insure that the data is compiled and reported in a manner which will preserve the confidentiality of the families and individuals.

PART IV—LAW ENFORCEMENT AND JUDICIAL SERVICES

SEC. 1115. REVIEW OF PROGRAMS.

(a) LAW ENFORCEMENT AND JUDICIAL SERVICES.—In the development of the Memorandum of Agreement required by section 1105, the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Health and Human Services, in cooperation with the Attorney General of the United States, shall review and consider—

(1) the various programs established by Federal law providing law enforcement or judicial services for Indian tribes, and

(2) tribal and State and local law enforcement and judicial programs and systems to determine their applicability and relevance in carrying out the purposes of this subtitle.

(b) DISSEMINATION OF REVIEW.—The results of the review conducted pursuant to subsection (a) shall be made available to every Indian tribe as soon as possible for their consideration and use in the development and modification of a Tribal Action Plan.

PART V—BUREAU OF INDIAN AFFAIRS LAW ENFORCEMENT

SEC. 1116. TRIBAL COURTS, SENTENCING, AND FINES.

To enhance the ability of tribal governments to prevent and penalize the traffic of illegal narcotics on Indian reservations, paragraph (7) of section 202 of the Act of April 11, 1969 (25 U.S.C. 1302) is amended by striking out "for a term of six months and a fine of $500, or both" and inserting in lieu thereof "for a term of one year and a fine of $5,000, or both".

SEC. 1117. BUREAU OF INDIAN AFFAIRS LAW ENFORCEMENT AND JUDICIAL TRAINING.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of the Interior shall ensure, through the establishment of a new training program or through the supplement of existing training programs, that all Bureau of Indian Affairs and tribal law enforcement and judicial personnel shall have available training in the investigation and prosecution of offenses relating to illegal narcotics and in alcohol and substance abuse prevention and treatment. Any training provided to Bureau of Indian Affairs and tribal law enforcement and judicial personnel as provided in this subsection shall specifically include training in the problems of youth alcohol and substance abuse prevention and treatment. Such training shall be coordinated with the Indian Health Service in the carrying out of its responsibilities under section 1127.

(b) AUTHORIZATION.—For the purpose of providing the training required by subsection (a), there are authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $2,500,000 for each of the fiscal years 1987, 1988, and 1989.

SEC. 1118. MEDICAL ASSESSMENT AND TREATMENT OF JUVENILE OFFENDERS.

The Memorandum of Agreement entered into pursuant to section 1105 shall include a specific provision for the development and implementation at each Bureau of Indian Affairs agency and Indian Health Service service unit of a procedure for the emergency medical assessment and treatment of every Indian youth arrested or detained by Bureau of Indian Affairs or tribal law enforcement personnel for an offense relating to or involving alcohol or substance abuse. The medical assessment required by this subsection—

(1) shall be conducted to determine the mental or physical state of the individual assessed so that appropriate steps can be taken to protect the individual's health and well-being,

(2) shall occur as soon as possible after the arrest or detention of an Indian youth, and

(3) shall be provided by the Indian Health Service, either directly or through its contract health service.

SEC. 1119. SOURCE ERADICATION.

(a) MARIJUANA ERADICATION.—The Secretary of the Interior, in cooperation with appropriate Federal, tribal, and State and local law enforcement agencies, shall establish and implement a program for the eradication of marijuana cultivation within Indian country as defined in section 1151 of title 18, United States Code. The Secretary shall establish a priority for the use of funds appropriated under subsection (b) for those Indian reservations where the scope of the problem is most critical and such funds shall be available for contracting by Indian tribes pursuant to the Indian Self-Determination Act.

(b) AUTHORIZATION.—To carry out subsection (a), there are authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $1,500,000 for each of the fiscal years 1987, 1988, and 1989.

SEC. 1120. ILLEGAL NARCOTICS TRAFFIC ON THE PAPAGO RESERVATION.

(a) INVESTIGATION AND CONTROL.—The Secretary of the Interior shall provide assistance to the Papago Indian Tribe (Tohono O'odham) of Arizona for the investigation and control of illegal narcotics traffic on the Papago Reservation along the border with Mexico. The Secretary shall ensure that tribal efforts are coordinated with appropriate Federal law enforcement agencies, including the United States Customs Service.

(b) AUTHORIZATIONS.—For the purpose of providing the assistance required by subsection (a), there is authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $1,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1987, 1988, and 1989.

SEC. 1121. JUVENILE DETENTION CENTERS.

(a) PLAN.—The Secretary of the Interior shall develop and implement a plan for the construction or renovation and staffing of tribal juvenile detention and rehabilitation centers for Indian tribes. In the development of the plan and in the allocation of funds appropriated under subsection (b), the Secretary shall insure that the construction and operation of tribal juvenile detention centers shall be consistent with the Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act of 1974.

(b) AUTHORIZATION.—For the purpose of subsection (a), there are authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $24,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1987, 1988, and 1989.

SEC. 1122. MODEL INDIAN JUVENILE CODE.

The Secretary of the Interior, either directly or by contract, shall provide for the development of a Model Indian Juvenile Code which shall be consistent with the Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act of 1974 and which shall include provisions relating to the disposition of cases involving Indian youth arrested or detained by Bureau of Indian Affairs or tribal law enforcement personnel for alcohol or drug related offenses. The development of such model code shall be accomplished in cooperation with Indian organizations having an expertise or knowledge in the field of law enforcement and judicial procedure and in consultation with Indian tribes. Upon completion of the Model Code, the Secretary shall make copies available to each Indian tribe.

SEC. 1123. LAW ENFORCEMENT AND JUDICIAL REPORT.

(a) COMPILATION OF LAW ENFORCEMENT DATA.—The Secretary of the Interior, with respect to the administration of any law enforcement or judicial services program by the Bureau of Indian Affairs, either directly or through contracts under the Indian Self-Determination Act, shall require the compilation of data relating to calls and encounters, arrests and detentions, and disposition of cases by Bureau of Indian Affairs or tribal law enforcement or judicial personnel involving Indians where it is determined that alcohol or drug abuse is a contributing factor.

(b) REFERRAL OF DATA.—The data compiled pursuant to subsection (a) shall be provided annually to the affected Indian tribe and Tribal Coordinating Committee to assist them in developing or modifying a Tribal Action Plan and shall also be submitted to the Indian Health Service unit director who will have the responsibility for compiling a tribal comprehensive report as provided in section 1128.

(c) CONFIDENTIALITY.—In carrying out this section, the Secretary shall insure that the data is compiled and reported in a manner which will preserve the confidentiality of the families and individuals involved.

PART VI—INDIAN ALCOHOL AND SUBSTANCE ABUSE TREATMENT AND REHABILITATION

SEC. 1125. REVIEW OF PROGRAMS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—In the development of the Memorandum of Agreement required by section 1105, the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall review and consider—

(1) the various programs established by Federal law providing health services and benefits to Indian tribes, including those relating to mental health and alcohol and substance abuse prevention and treatment, and

(2) tribal, State and local, and private health resources and programs,

(3) where facilities to provide such treatment are or should be located, and

(4) the effectiveness of public and private alcohol and substance abuse treatment programs in operation on the date of the enactment of this subtitle, to determine their applicability and relevance in carrying out the purposes of this subtitle.

(b) DISSEMINATION.—The results of the review conducted under subsection (a) shall be provided to every Indian tribe as soon as possible for their consideration and use in the development or modification of a Tribal Action Plan.

SEC. 1126. INDIAN HEALTH SERVICE RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Memorandum of Agreement entered into pursuant to section 1105 shall include specific provisions pursuant to which the Indian Health Service shall assume responsibility for—

(1) the determination of the scope of the problem of alcohol and substance abuse among Indian people, including the number of Indians within the jurisdiction of the Indian Health Service who are directly or indirectly affected by alcohol and substance abuse and the financial and human cost,

(2) an assessment of the existing and needed resources necessary to adequately support a program for the prevention of alcohol and substance abuse and the treatment of Indians affected by alcohol and substance abuse, and

(3) an estimate of the funding necessary to adequately support a program of prevention of alcohol and substance abuse and treatment of Indians affected by alcohol and substance abuse.

SEC. 1127. ALCOHOL AND SUBSTANCE ABUSE TREATMENT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services, acting through the Indian Health Service, shall provide a program of comprehensive alcohol and substance abuse prevention and treatment which shall include—

(1) prevention, through educational intervention, in Indian communities,

(2) acute detoxification and treatment,

(3) community-based rehabilitation, and

(4) community education and involvement, including extensive training of health care, educational, and community-based personnel.

The target population of such a program shall be the members of Indian tribes, with particular emphasis on Indian youth. Additionally, efforts to train and educate key members of the Indian community should target those who are involved in the provision of health, education, judicial, law enforcement, legal, and social services to this population.

(b) DETOXIFICATION AND REHABILITATION.—The Secretary shall develop and implement a program for acute detoxification and treatment for Indian youth who are alcohol and substance abusers. The program shall include regional treatment centers designed to include detoxification and rehabilitation for both sexes on a referral basis. These regional centers shall be integrated with the intake and rehabilitation programs based in the referring Indian community.

(c) CENTERS.—The Secretary, with funds appropriated under this subsection, shall begin the construction of eleven regional treatment centers serving the Indian tribes under the jurisdiction of the area offices of the Indian Health Service. For purposes of the preceding sentence, the Area Offices of the Indian Health Service in Tucson and Phoenix, Arizona, shall be considered one area office. The regional treatment centers shall be appropriately staffed with health professionals, including psychologists, alcohol and substance abuse counselors, physical fitness professionals, nutritionists, physicians, nurses and administrative and support staff. There are authorized to be appropriated for the construction of the regional treatment centers not to exceed $4,000,000. There are also authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $8,250,000 for each of the fiscal years 1987, 1988, and 1989 to provide staff for such centers.

(d) REHABILITATION AND FOLLOW-UP SERVICES.—

(1) The Secretary in cooperation with the Secretary of the Interior, shall develop and implement within each Indian Health Service service unit community-based rehabilitation and follow-up services for Indian youth who are alcohol or substance abusers which are designed to integrate long-term treatment and to monitor and support the Indian youth after their return to their home community.

(2) Services under paragraph (1) shall be administered within each service unit by trained staff within the community who can assist the Indian youth in continuing development of self-image, positive problem-solving skills, and non-alcohol or non-substance abusing behaviors. Such staff shall include alcohol and substance abuse counselors, mental health professionals, and other health professionals and para-professionals, including community health representatives.

(3) For the purpose of providing the services authorized by paragraph (1), there are authorized to be appropriated $18,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1987, 1988, and 1989.

(e) COMMUNITY EDUCATION.—

(1) The Secretary, in cooperation with the Secretary of the Interior, shall develop and implement within each service unit a program of community education and involvement which shall be designed to provide concise and timely information to the community leadership of each tribal community. Such program shall include training in alcohol and substance abuse to the critical core of each tribal community, including political leaders, tribal judges, law enforcement personnel, members of tribal and health and education boards, and other critical parties.

(2) For the purpose of implementing the program established by paragraph (1), there are authorized to be appropriated $4,000,000 for fiscal year 1987, $1,000,000 for fiscal year 1988, and $500,000 for fiscal year 1989.

(f) TRAINING.—

(1) The Secretary shall require that existing health staff of the Indian Health Service, particularly those at the service unit level, shall receive the necessary training in alcohol and substance abuse to enable the Indian Health Service to address that problem in a coordinated manner with common approaches. In carrying out that responsibility, the Secretary shall make available to community health representatives funded by the Indian Health Service additional training in prevention strategies that will support a school-based program. Such training will also include techniques for early identification of symptoms of alcohol and substance abuse and support strategies for maintenance of alcohol and substance-free life-styles, including fitness programs, nutritional awareness programs, recreational alternatives, and cultural activities.

(2) For the purpose of providing training under paragraph (1), there are authorized to be appropriated $4,000,000 for fiscal year 1987, $2,000,000 for fiscal year 1988, and $500,000 for fiscal year 1989.

(g) PREVENTION.—

(1) The Secretary, in cooperation with the Secretary of the Interior, shall develop and implement a program of prevention of alcohol and substance abuse among Indian youth through education intervention. Such a program shall include—

(A) the training of counselors and supervisors employed in Head Start programs serving Indian tribes in methods to enhance the self-image of Indian children attending such Head Start programs,

(B) the development and implementation of a program of instruction in alcohol and substance abuse in the curricula of Bureau of Indian Affairs' schools operated under contracts entered into pursuant to the Indian Self-Determination Act, and

(C) the training of counselors, teachers, and other educational professionals in such schools in alcohol and substance abuse.

(2) For the purpose of carrying out—

(A) subparagraph (A) of paragraph (1), there are authorized to be appropriated $1,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1987, 1988, and 1989,

(B) subparagraph (B) of paragraph (1), there are authorized to be appropriated $1,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1987, 1988, and 1989, and

(C) subparagraph (C) of paragraph (1), there are authorized to be appropriated $1,250,000 for each of the fiscal years 1987, 1988, and 1989.

(h) FEDERALLY OWNED STRUCTURES.—

(1) The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall, acting through the Indian Health Service, identify and use, wherever appropriate and consistent with the needs of an Indian tribe or tribal organization, existing federally owned structures suitable as residential alcohol and substance abuse treatment centers for Indian youths.

(2) The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall, in consultation with professionals involved in the clinical treatment of alcohol and substance abuse among Indian youth, establish guidelines for determining the suitability of any such federally owned structure to be used as a residential alcohol and substance abuse treatment center. No clinically inappropriate or structurally unsound building shall be used as such a treatment center.

(3) Any structure described in paragraph (1) may be used under such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon by the Secretary of Health and Human Services and the agency having responsibility for the structure.

(4) The Secretary of Health and Human Services may, directly or by contract, renovate any facility described in paragraph (1). Any such renovation shall conform with—

(A) such terms and conditions as have been agreed upon under paragraph (3), and

(B) such clinical requirements for alcohol and substance abuse treatment centers as are determined to be appropriate by alcohol and substance abuse treatment professionals.

(5) There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out paragraphs (1) through (4).

SEC. 1128. NAVAJO ALCOHOL REHABILITATION DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM.

(a) DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall make grants to the Navajo Tribe to establish a demonstration program in the city of Gallup, New Mexico, to rehabilitate adult Navajo Indians suffering from alcoholism or alcohol abuse.

(b) EVALUATION AND REPORT.—The Secretary, acting through the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism, shall evaluate the program established under subsection (a) and submit a report on such evaluation to the appropriate Committees of Congress by January 1, 1990.

(c) AUTHORIZATION.—There are authorized to be appropriated for the purposes of grants under subsection (a) $400,000 for each of the fiscal years 1988, 1989, and 1990. Not more than 10 percent of the funds appropriated for any fiscal year may be used for administrative purposes.

SEC. 1129. INDIAN HEALTH SERVICE REPORTS.

(a) COMPILATION OF DATA.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services, with respect to the administration of any health program by an Indian Health Service service unit, directly or through contract, including a contract under the Indian Self-Determination Act, shall require the compilation of data relating to the number of cases or incidents which any of the Indian Health Service personnel or services were involved and which were related, either directly or indirectly, to alcohol or substance abuse. Such report shall include the type of assistance provided and the disposition of these cases.

(b) REFERRAL OF DATA.—The data compiled under subsection (a) shall be provided annually to the affected Indian tribe and Tribal Coordinating Committee to assist them in developing or modifying a Tribal Action Plan.

(c) COMPREHENSIVE REPORT.—Each Indian Health Service service unit director shall be responsible for assembling the data compiled under this section and sections 1114 and 1123 into an annual tribal comprehensive report which shall be provided to the affected tribe and to the Director of the Indian Health Service who shall develop and publish a biennial national report on such tribal comprehensive reports.

TITLE XII—COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT OPERATIONS

SEC. 1201. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "National Antidrug Reorganization and Coordination Act".

SEC. 1202. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds that—

(1) the Federal Government's response to drug trafficking and drug abuse is divided among several dozen agencies and bureaus of the Government, ranging from the Department of Defense to the Department of Health and Human Services;

(2) numerous recent congressional hearings and reports, reports by the Comptroller General, and studies by Executive branch agencies have documented the waste and inefficiency caused by this division of responsibilities;

(3) interagency competition for credit and budget dollars imposes critical obstacles to efficient application of national resources in combating drug trafficking and drug abuse; and

(4) successfully combating such trafficking and drug abuse requires coherent planning that includes intelligent organization and operations of Executive branch agencies.

SEC. 1203. SUBMISSION OF LEGISLATION.

Not later than 6 months after the date of enactment of this title, the President shall submit to each House of Congress recommendations for legislation to reorganize the Executive branch of the Government to more effectively combat international drug traffic and drug abuse. In the preparation of such recommendations, the President shall consult with the Comptroller General, State and local law enforcement authorities, relevant committees of the Congress, and the Attorney General and the Secretaries of State, the Treasury, Transportation, Health and Human Services, Defense, and Education.

The CHAIRMAN. No other amendment to the bill are in order except the amendments contained in House Report 99-810, which shall be considered only in the order listed, and if ordered by the Member indicated in the report, shall not be subject to amendment or to a demand for a division of the question unless otherwise specified in House Resolution 541, and each amendment shall be debatable for the time indicated in House Report 99-810, equally divided and controlled by the proponent of the amendment and a Member opposed to the amendment.

AMENDMENTS OFFERED BY MR. WRIGHT

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I offer amendments en bloc.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendments offered by Mr. WRIGHT: Page 31, after line 7, insert the following:

SEC. 144. REPORTS TO CONGRESS REGARDING FOREIGN COOPERATION IN ILLICIT DRUG ERADICATION PROGRAMS.

The Secretary of State shall transmit to Congress, as part of the presentation materials for assistance programs proposed for each fiscal year, a full and complete report, with respect to cooperation and progress made by each country proposed as a recipient of assistance, in carrying out illicit drug eradication programs.

Subtitle H—Miscellaneous

SEC. 671. ASSIGNMENT OF JUDGES.

It is the sense of Congress that the judicial branch of the Government should increase the exercise of its authority under chapter 13 of title 28, United States Code, to reassign Federal judges temporarily and otherwise provide additional Federal judges to district courts in districts with large backlogs of pending criminal cases arising out of drug enforcement efforts.

Page 224, insert after line 13 the following:

Subtitle H—Miscellaneous

SEC. 671. DRUG PARAPHERNALIA.

(a) OFFENSE.—It is unlawful for any person—

(1) to make use of the services of the Postal Service as part of a scheme to sell any item which constitutes drug paraphernalia; or

(2) to offer for sale and transportation in interstate commerce any item which constitutes drug paraphernalia.

(b) PENALTY.—Anyone convicted of an offense under subsection (a) of this section shall be imprisoned for not more than three years and fined not more than $100,000.

(c) FORFEITURE.—Any drug paraphernalia involved in any violation of subsection (a) of this section shall be subject to seizure and forfeiture. Any such paraphernalia shall be delivered to the Administrator of General Services, General Services Administartion, who may order such paraphernalia destroyed or may authorize its use for law enforcement or educational purposes by Federal, State, or local authorities.

(d) DEFINITIONS.—The term "drug paraphernalia" means all equipment, products, or materials of any kind which are used, intended for use, or designed for use, in manufacturing, compounding, converting, concealing, producing, processing, preparing, injecting, ingesting, inhaling, or otherwise introduced into the human body a controlled substance in violation of the Controlled Substances Act (title II of Public Law 91-513). It includes, but is not limited to, items used, intended for use, or designed for use, in ingesting, inhaling, or otherwise introducing marijuana, cocaine, hashish, hashish oil, PCP, or amphetimines into the human body, such as:

(1) metal, wooden, acrylic, glass, stone, plastic, or ceramic pipes with or without screens, permanent screens, hashish heads, or punctured metal bowls;

(2) water pipes;

(3) carburetion tubes and devices;

(4) smoking and carburetion masks;

(5) roach clips: meaning objects used to hold burning material, such as a marijuana cigarette, that has become too small or too short to be held by the hand;

(6) miniature spoons with level capacities of one-tenth cubic centimeter or less;

(7) chamber pipes;

(8) carburetor pipes;

(9) electric pipes;

(10) air-driven pipes;

(11) chillums;

(12) bongs;

(13) ice pipes or chillers;

(14) wired cigarette papers; or

(15) cocaine freebase kits.

(e) EVIDENCE.—In determining whether an item constitutes drug paraphernalia, in addition to all other logically relevant factors, the following may be considered:

(1) instructions, oral or written, provided with the item concerning its use;

(2) descriptive materials accompanying the item which explain or depict its use;

(3) national and local advertising concerning its use;

(4) the manner in which the item is displayed for sale;

(5) whether the owner, or anyone in control of the item, is a legitimate supplier of like or related items to the community, such as a licensed distributor or dealer of tobacco products;

(6) direct or circumstantial evidence of the ratio of sales of the item(s) to the total sales of the business enterprise;

(7) the existence and scope of legitimate uses of the item in the community; and

(8) expert testimony concerning its use.

(f) EFFECTIVE DATE.—This section shall become effective 90 days after the date of enactment of this title.

Page 241, strike out lines 1 through 3 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

(1) the development, acquisition, and implementation of elementary and secondary school drug abuse education and prevention curricula which clearly and consistently teach that drugs are wrong and harmful;

Page 241, line 8, insert "(which teach that drugs are wrong and harmful)" after "programs".

Page 241, strike out lines 6 and 7 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

(3) family drug abuse prevention programs, including education for parents about the symptoms and effects of drug use;

Page 245, after line 3, insert the following new paragraph (and redesignate the subsequent paragraphs accordingly):

(2) develop, publicize the availability of, and widely disseminate audio-visual and other curricula materials for drug abuse education and prevention programs in elementary and secondary schools throughout the Nation;

Page 232, insert before the period in line 20 the following: "and who shall include physicians and other health care professionals who have training or experience in drug abuse prevention".

Page 267, insert before the period in line 5 the following: "and shall include physicians and other health care professionals who have training or experience in drug addiction problems".

SEC. 907. NATIONAL STUDY OF DRUG ABUSE TREATMENT PROGRAMS.

The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall conduct, directly or by contract, a study of the nature and effectiveness of Federal, State, and local programs of drug abuse treatment (including programs to treat cocaine free base (known as "crack") addiction) and shall submit a report of the findings of such study to the President and to the appropriate committees of Congress not later than one year after the date of the enactment of this title.

SEC. 907. CONGRESSIONAL REQUEST THAT THE ENTERTAINMENT INDUSTRY TAKE CERTAIN STEPS TO ASSIST IN THE NATIONAL WAR AGAINST ILLEGAL DRUGS.

It is the sense of the Congress that, whereas illegal drug consumption and the trafficking of those illegal drugs is a major problem in the United States; whereas this problem is particularly prevalent among and harmful to the Nation's young people; whereas the values and mores portrayed in various forms of commercially produced entertainment have a profound effect on the attitudes of young people in this country, the entertainment industry should voluntarily refrain from producing material meant for general entertainment which in any way glamorizes or encourages the use of illegal drugs and the entertainment industry further is encouraged to develop films, television programs, records, and videos which encourage the rejection of illegal drug usage.

Mr. WRIGHT (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendments be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, and I do not intend to object, but I ask consent to permit the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WRIGHT] to explain the amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would inform the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN] that there will be 10 minutes' debate on the amendments.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, it would be my intention to explain each of the 14 provisions contained, at least briefly, to clarify exactly what is involved in this amendment.

Mr. GILMAN. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WRIGHT] will be recognized for 5 minutes and a Member opposed will be recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment and wish to claim the 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN] will be recognized at the appropriate time for 5 minutes.

The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WRIGHT].

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. ENGLISH].

PERFECTING AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. ENGLISH

Mr. ENGLISH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for a perfecting amendment to title XII of the bill.

On page 333, line 26, the word "international" appears. This word was deleted in the Government Operations Committee because that section applies to all drug trafficking, not just international trafficking. The drafters of the Omnibus Act did not take note of the committee amendment. It should be corrected at this time, and I ask that it be stricken.

The minority is in complete agreement with this request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, while I do not object, I ask the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. ENGLISH] if he would explain this technical provision.

Mr. ENGLISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. ENGLISH. Mr. Chairman, this word was deleted in the Committee on Government Operations because it applies to all drug trafficking. This section of the bill applies to all drug trafficking, not just international trafficking. The drafters of the Omnibus Act evidently overlooked this particular provision and it should be corrected at this time.

For that reason, I am asking unanimous consent.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman and I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I consumed?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas has consumed 45 seconds.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, this is a compilation of 14 different amendments offered by Democratic and Republican Members. They are thought to be relatively noncontroversial. They require that a criminal offense will be made to use the Postal Service to sell drug paraphernalia. It expresses the sense of Congress that the Federal judicial branch should reassign judges temporarily to districts with large backlogs of drug cases.

It requires the Secretary of Education to develop and distribute audiovisual materials on drug abuse prevention to elementary and secondary schools.

It expresses the sense of Congress that the entertainment industry should refrain from producing programming which glamorizes drug use and should produce programs rejecting the use of drugs.

It adds medical and mental health officials to the list of those who would serve on the Council of Drug Abuse Education Prevention, as well as physicians and other health care professionals.

It allows the Department of Defense to loan additional aircraft and radar aerostats for the use in drug interdiction.

It requires the Health and Human Services to study the effectiveness of Federal, State, and local drug abuse prevention programs, clarifies that the information volunteered by banks under the money laundering statute will be sufficient to allow the Government to obtain a grand jury subpoena. It requires a report to Congress on the cooperation and progress of drug eradication by countries which receive U.S. aid. It requires that funds for local education projects will be used to support cirricular and counseling programs to teach that drug use is wrong and harmful, and specifies that family drug abuse prevention programs include education of parents about the symptoms and effects of drug abuse.

□ 1110

There is one additional provision which will be discussed under the Morrison exclusion, and will be discussed by the gentleman from Connecticut and the gentleman from California.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from California [Mr. LEWIS].

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I want to mention at the outset of this discussion that the majority leader, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WRIGHT] has been most cooperative with the minority relative of some of the noncontroversial items.

This specific item, the one in question that we will be discussing here, was brought to our attention by way of a letter from the sponsor, the letter indicating that the item was not controversial in a straight forward basis. The leaders together accepted that as the case.

Needless to say, I believe without publicly saying so, the leader is probably embarrassed by this circumstance. I am disconcerted, because it interferes with our ability to work together.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment in dispute, No. 5, is not noncontroversial, and is not technical in nature. It is anything but that. Unfortunately, I have to say with all sincerity that it is in part an anti-law-enforcement, prodrug use amendment. I do not think it was drawn to be that; I do not think it was intended to be that, but that is in fact the interpretation of the concept that I received from the DEA, from the FDA, and from the State orgnizations of substance control authorities.

Now, all of those cannot be wrong. What this amendment says is, if you have an M.D. or Ph.D. after your name; and you have in any way a research connection with the FDA, even if it is with schedule 5, which is like with cough syrup, you can be involved in designer drugs that we have, in every other instance in this bill, put under schedule 1. That is the toughest restraints that we have.

Why? Because designer drugs are the new epidemic of drugs in this country.

Just today there is an article in the Washington Post about a Ph.D. who happens to be a laboratory chemist for the Navy, who is involved in the course of his work in manufacturing fentanyl analogs; that is, heroin analogs that are 2,500 times more potent than raw heroin on the streets.

Had that person had the knowledge, after this bill was passed with the Morrison amendment in it, and received a research registration from DEA under schedule 5, but then involved himself in creating a new heroin analog, he could not have been arrested nor stopped until he actually distributed it for money.

He could use it on himself, he could use it on his wife, he could use it on others; as long as he said he was doing it in his own research protocol, not following the schedule 1 protocol. That is the problem with this amendment.

This amendment makes a distortion of the entire designer drug bill, which is a part of the overall bill, the designer drug bill that I have been working for the last 2 years.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MORRISON].

Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, this is, in fact, a highly technical issue, and it has to do with making sure that in our very legitimate effort to criminalize the designer drug industry we do not criminalize legitimate research.

We have taken all drugs on schedules 1 and 2 and said all analogs of those drugs are to be treated as schedule 1 drugs. As a result of that proposed change, legitimate research permitted under current law might be made criminal.

It is one thing, and an important thing, to crack down on the designer drug industry. It is another thing to cut off, in an arbitrary fashion through the threatening use of criminal sanctions, legitimate research.

This amendment does not raise the kind of horrible specter that the gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN] has suggested. If refinements of this amendment are needed, they can well be worked out further in the legislative process of enacting this bill, and as the gentleman from California knows, we have worked hard to find satisfactory language and are willing to continue that kind of process in the future.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Chairman how much time do I have remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. WRIGHT] has 1 minute remaining.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, do I have 2½ minutes remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Chairman, quite simply, this is the Timothy Leary bailout amendment. This says, basically, that if you happen to be a psychiatrist that was of the kind that distributed MDMA, or ecstasy, to others until we made it illegal, we are going to allow you to continue doing that sort of thing.

The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MORRISON] says that I have brought up a horror that does not exist. Well, in fact, in response to my request about this type of amendment, Mr. Lawn, who is the Administrator of the DEA, had this to say:

> Such activities have, in fact, occurred with regard to at least one such analog. This analog has been synthesized in unknown and undocumented facilities and administered in dosage forms of unknown and uncertain quality and quantity by a few physicians, in an apparently informal manner. This activity undoubtedly risks the health of those concerned.

The fact of the matter is, there are some few doctors and psychiatrists in this country who say they do not come under the FDA. Why? Because the FDA requires that you do animal studies for toxicity before you ever give it to humans; and if you have a human study, you do a blind study. You go through the proper protocol.

These doctors do not want to be under the thumb, as they say, of the FDA, because they would be required to do animal studies first, and then do absolutely scientific studies.

One of them testified to us that he should have the right to test it on himself. He has also testified elsewhere that he has tested it on his wife, and there have been suggestions that others have used students.

We are creating an absolute loophole here for those who happen to have M.D. or Ph.D. behind their name, who have any registration with the DEA, to do any type of investigation they want even though we are saying for everybody else under every other circumstance, they are subject to schedule 1.

This is a terrible distortion of our whole effort. This is exactly the type of dual standard we have been trying to get away from. We have been trying to say that everybody is equal under the law with respect to drug abuse in this country, and this amendment, unfortunately, says everybody is equal except if you had Ph.D. or M.D. after your name.

Let us be very clear: We are talking about people dealing in psychedelic drugs. That is what we are talking about. That is what the one doctor who appeared before us, pleading his case, was talking about. He says we have a right to expand the horizons of everybody's perceptions. It is argued that we have any obligation to have the Government say there are certain scientific standards.

I would just remind my colleagues that coming out of the Nuremberg trials, we have the Nuremberg protocols with respect to research.

No. 1 on the list of protocol is that animal research should always be done before research.

I support the rest of the amendment, but this is a tragic flaw in this amendment, sending the wrong signal at the wrong time.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time to close debate.

Mr. Chairman, I am impressed by the concern expressed by the gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN]. There is a legitimate disagreement as to the intent and working of that provision. It was not the intention and is not the intention of the authors to do other than to permit legitimate research by legitimate researchers.

In order that we may be sure, I would ask that we vote aye on this entire bloc of amendments, there being so many good and beneficial and uncontroversial things contained therein; and I would assure the gentleman from California that I would ask the conferees to look with care into the wording of this portion of the amendment to make certain that it does not open a loophole of the type feared by the gentleman from California.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, is gentleman will yield, I thank the gentleman for that offering. I am sorry that is the way we have to do it under the rule. I know the gentleman was amenable to my unanimous consent to have it voted on separately; that was objected to.

At this time, Mr. Chairman, I submit for the RECORD three pieces of correspondence that I have received from various agencies regarding the bill:

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
DRUG ENFORCEMENT ADMINISTRATION
Washington, DC, September 10, 1986.

Hon. DANIEL E. LUNGREN,
U.S. House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN LUNGREN: Thank you for your letter of August 26, 1986 concerning the important issue brought about by the clandestine synthesis and distribution of controlled substance analogs during recent years. The questions which you have set out in your letter raise complex issues which could be elaborated on at length. Nevertheless, I shall respond to them here as briefly as possible and provide such additional information or discussion as you may require hereafter.

First, let me state that I strongly urge the enactment of S. 1437, "The Controlled Substance Analogs Enforcement Act of 1985," a bill which has been carefully crafted with our participation to deal effectively with problems of illicit traffic while protecting the interests of legitimate industry and the research community.

In response to your first question concerning the appropriate schedule for these substances, I wish to point out that we are here concerned only with drugs of abuse which have no accepted medical use. With respect to these drugs, the Food and Drug Administration's procedures for establishing safety and effectiveness for any projected medical purpose have not been complied with. Therefore, should these substances be placed in any schedule other than Schedule I additional risks would result because of their extended availability for use in improperly controlled and speculative circumstances. Such activities have, in fact, occurred with regard to at least one such analog. This analog has been synthesized in unknown and undocumented facilities and administered in dosage forms of unknown and uncertain quality and quantity by a few physicians, in an apparently informal manner. This activity undoubtedly risks the health of those concerned.

It has often been observed that poor and undocumented research is worse than no research at all because so much careful study is then required to disprove dubious and unprofessional reports. The Schedule I classification is a safeguard against this in the controlled substances area because legitimate researchers must submit a scientific protocol for approval. This ensures that only those who are professionally capable to conduct such research have access to these drugs for that purpose. More than 2,000 such researchers are currently registered by DEA. If these analogs were to be scheduled in other schedules the disadvantages and risks become obvious from the foregoing. Moreover, this would create an anomaly within the drug control structure unintended by Congress and which has never previously occurred. Therefore, the answer to your second question is that there are no other instances in which an unapproved new drug with a high potential for abuse has been placed into Schedule II. Some special considerations have been made regarding certain drugs because of treaty obligations.

Question three concerning the merit of special exemptions for research with psychedelic drugs is an issue also within the purview of the Department of Health and Human Services. I am aware of no sound reason why this type of research should be exempted from the regular approval process required for other drugs. Also, it is clear that the Congress felt that, with regard to drugs with a high potential for abuse, the additional requirement of a special registration with DEA was also necessary. I believe this also satisfactorily responds to question four.

Finally, question five also raises a matter of health and research policy in which the Department of Health and Human Services possesses special expertise. Nevertheless, it is difficult to imagine how subjects participating in studies utilizing these drugs would be at less risk than in studies involving other classes of drugs since these drugs may have powerful effects on mood and personal disposition and, in some cases, are believed to cause long-term brain damage. It would appear that the risks could be very significant.

I hope this has answered your questions. As I have stated, this is a brief response concerning some very complex issues. As always, both my staff and I are available to discuss these issues in greater detail.

Sincerely,

JOHN C. LAWN,
Administrator.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF STATE CONTROLLED SUBSTANCES AUTHORITIES
Lexington, KY, September 4, 1986.

Hon. DANIEL E. LUNGREN,
2440 Rayburn House Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN LUNGREN: I am pleased to respond to a request for comment from your office and to have the opportunity to express concerns about possible amendments to federal controlled substance analog legislation relating to:

(1) exemption of DEA-registered practitioners in Schedules II-V to use (or conduct research with) Schedule I controlled substance analogs, including MDMA, without meeting any further research requirements under the Controlled Substances Act (CSA) or the Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act (FDCA), and

(2) movement of controlled substance analogs to Schedule II.

The following points are respectfully offered for you and your colleagues to consider:

(1) If, as proposed, a practitioner, licensed in a State and registered only for Schedules II-V under Federal Law, comes into possession of a substance that is controlled in Schedule I under that State law, the person could be exposed to criminal prosecution for unlawful possession. The likelihood that analogs would be placed in Schedule I by States is discussed in item 2, below. Exposure to State criminal prosecution would be an unintended consequence precipitated by the Federal government's exemption. This loophole in Federal law would have no parallel under State laws.

Some State laws enable practitioners to register as a researcher before using drugs in State Schedule I. But if the research subjects are humans, bonafide research protocols as well as animal studies would likely be required, not just an explanation of a hoped-for innovation in clinical practice as appears to be the case with current so-called medical uses of MDMA.

If this exemption proposal should somehow survive the legislative process and be signed into law, I would recommend that an affirmative responsibility be placed on the person or researcher to file with the Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA) and the State a letter from the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) certifying that the proposed use of the drug under this exemption is "permitted under the FDCA."

(2) If, as proposed, analogs are placed in Federal Schedule II, absent any evidence of approval under the FDCA, you should be aware that it is likely that States will consider controlling these substances in Schedule I. This would happen because most States' uniform controlled substances laws (USCA) exclusively reserve Schedule I for those substances with "no accepted medical use in treatment in the U.S." According to a survey of the State Scheduling Agencies I conducted in June, 1985 (enclosed), eighty-seven percent of the forty-three States responding stated unequivocally that they rely on a definition of "accepted medical use" which means "lawfully marketed under the FDCA," and that "FDA approval of an NDA establishes this acceptance." The uniform act does not contain any provision which would allow these scheduling tests to be bypassed.

The States, in following a uniform standard derived from the CSA, could be placed in the untenable position of prohibiting, without any discussion, those activities which the Federal government sought to permit. And again, a practitioner in possession of a federal Schedule II analog would be exposed to criminal prosecution for a Schedule I violation at the State level.

(3) If, as proposed, Congress and subsequently the DEA, were to place substances in Schedule II-V which are not accepted under the FDCA, the distinction between Schedule I and Schedule II-V disappears. Further, the "accepted medical use" test would be rendered meaningless, as there would be IND drugs in Schedule I which would be much closer to approval than analogs in Schedule II. The integrity of the CSA would disintegrate because the scheduling tests for a criminal statute would become vague or perhaps altogether abandoned.

It has always been my understanding that a principal purpose of the Congress in enacting the FDCA was to protect the public health by assuring that the drugs that reach patients are safe and effective. These proposals apparently seek to circumvent or create a loophole in that principal and, in my opinion, establish a dangerous precedent and should be rejected. That some clinicians want to avoid applying for an IND to use new drugs on patients is not a widely held standard of medical practice in the U.S., and I urge you to consult with groups representing organized medicine, such as the American Medical Association.

Public policy should not be dominated by such an exceptionally narrow view of what is accepted medical use of a drug, no matter how loudly or forcefully the case is stated. Mechanisms exist to conduct research with Schedule I drugs and should be used. If there are problems with the mechanism it can be revised, but it should not be rejected.

Some of the issues raised by these possible amendments are the subject of a DEA administrative law proceeding in the matter of MDMA scheduling, to which I am a party, representing the State of Wisconsin, Controlled Substances Board. These issues are also being discussed as the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws drafting committee, to which I serve as an advisor, prepares the first complete revision of the UCSA since 1970. I believe that some of the issues may require clarification by the Congress, but not in the manner currently being discussed. I would be pleased to discuss these issues with you.

Thank you for the opportunity to comment. Please call on me if I can be of any assistance to you.

Very truly yours,

DAVID E. JORANSON,
President.

DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES,
Rockville, MD, September 9, 1986.

Hon. DANIEL E. LUNGREN,
House of Representatives,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. LUNGREN: I am pleased to respond on behalf of Commissioner Frank E. Young, to the questions raised in your letter of August 26, 1986. The response to your specific questions is enclosed. I would also like to provide some information from the perspective of the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) on the regulation of controlled substance analogs that have a potential for abuse.

The clinical investigation of controlled substance analogs does not differ from other classes of unapproved new drugs. A new drug is defined as a drug that is not generally recognized, among experts qualified by scientific training and experience to evaluate the safety and effectiveness of drugs, as safe and effective for use under conditions prescribed, recommended, or suggested in the labeling that accompanies the drug. [21 U.S.C. 321(p)]. Courts have broadly interpreted this definition as calling for well-substantiated scientific evidence of the safety and effectiveness of a drug. Under this interpretation, most drugs are new drugs.

For the most part, controlled substance analogs are simply one subgroup of unapproved new drugs. Moreover, unlike many unapproved new drugs, controlled substance analogs produce alterations in mental state and have a potential for abuse.

We are unaware of any scientific basis to exempt these analogs from the established procedures designed to provide safeguards for the subjects of clinical research. These safeguards are embodied in the rules and regulations governing investigational new drugs (IND).

There is no scientific reason not to apply the new drug provisions of the Act to the investigation and use of controlled substance analogs. These requirements do not impose any inappropriate burdens on researchers. Moreover, placement of controlled substance analogs in schedule I of the Controlled Substances Act does not significantly affect research on the substance. Placement in schedule I does, however, ensure continued protection of the health and safety of research subjects and protection of the public from diversion of the substance.

In summary, the FDA's regulation of the development of new drugs applies to all drugs regardless of drug class. We are not aware of any valid reason for special exemptions or privileges for a select group of practitioners to use a particular class of unapproved substance analogs on patients without the safeguards already provided for in statute.

If we can be of any further assistance, please let us know.

Sincerely yours,

HUGH C. CANNON,
Associate Commissioner for Legislative Affairs.

RESPONSE TO QUESTIONS CONTAINED IN AUGUST 26, 1986 LETTER FROM THE HONORABLE DANIEL E. LUNGREN

1. What are the consequences of excluding unapproved new drugs with a potential for abuse and diversion, i.e. controlled substance analogs, from schedule I of the Controlled Substances Act (CSA)?

(a). What are the advantages and disadvantages to investigators?

(b). What are the advantages and disadvantages to society?

(c). What effect might this have on current scheduling of drugs and the CSA?

The placement of a substance in schedule I represents a finding by the Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA) that the substance: (1) has a high potential for diversion and abuse; (2) has no recognized medical use; and (3) has a lack of accepted safety for use of the substance under medical supervision. The use of a schedule I substance in humans is limited by the CSA to qualified investigators (researchers) who are registered with and specifically authorized by DEA to possess and use a specific substance. Registrants for other schedules do not need DEA's special permission to possess drugs in those schedules. Under this scheme, practitioners normally register possession of drugs in schedules II through V while researchers register for possession of specific substances in schedule I.

As noted above, a decision to grant a registration to an investigator/researcher to use a schedule I substance in humans is made by DEA. Registration is obtained by application which must include detailed information described in 21 CFR 1301.33 (copy enclosed) or a certification from the investigator that he has filed for an Investigational new Drug Exemption (IND) with FDA. Even if an IND has been filed, DEA requests FDA to determine the qualifications and competency of each health investigator requesting registration for a schedule I substance, as well as the merits of the research protocol, even if no IND has been filed. This information is given by FDA to DEA routinely. DEA's registration process and FDA's IND process are independent.

Your proposed placement of a controlled substance analog in a schedule of the CSA other than schedule I would nullify the requirement that investigators must apply for and obtain registration from the DEA to possess a controlled substance analog. This is a serious consequence because it would permit practitioners to have uncontrolled access for unrestricted use in patients of highly abusable substances for which no medical benefits has ever been shown. Another serious consequence could be the disruption to the established system for tracking the possession of controlled substance analogs and the consequent impairment of DEA's control over the distribution of these substances.

(1a) The advantages of not requiring investigators to register for possession of substances with specific abuse potential e.g., schedule I substances, which are currently restricted to researchers only, would:

Remove paperwork requirements necessary to register for possession of each substance with abuse potential;

Make such substances available to all practitioners, rather than limiting them to researchers; and Reduce the accountability for use and/or distribution of such substances by practitioners.

Moreover, all practitioners would become researchers without any evaluation of their competency as investigators or merit of the research.

In addition to the fundamental regulatory problems discussed above, the proposed revision alluded to in your letter would be accompanied by the following disadvantages to investigators:

Increased civil liability arising from the use of abusable, potentially unsafe substances; and Probable lack of access to Institutional Review Board evaluation or independent peer review, thereby being denied assistance and evaluation on whether the research is an adequate and proper study.

(1b) We are unaware of any advantages that the proposed revision would provide to society. The disadvantages to society would be:

The entire population would be exposed to the use of untested and unapproved drugs which are of unknown toxicity, potency, purity, and pharmacological effects;

There would be no requirement for patient/subject consent;

That would be a potential for the unrestricted availability and distribution of substances which could be abused; and

There would be an increase in the potential for drug diversion because of the disruption to the current tracking system.

(1c) The process of scheduling controlled substance analogs would be disrupted if these substances were automatically excluded from schedule I. The FDA, with the advice of the National Institute on Drug Abuse, makes recommendations about the scheduling of these substances as directed by the requirements of the CSA. The FDA's findings are based upon a set of analyses that consider the substance's relative potential for abuse and diversion, the medical and societal risks arising from such abuse and diversion, and whether the drug has a bona fide medical use. If a scientific and medical determination is made that a substance has a high potential for abuse and diversion and the substance in question is not approved by FDA, the Agency recommends that the substance be placed in schedule I. The automatic placement of an unapproved new drug (i.e., a drug without a recognized medical use) with a high potential for abuse and diversion in a schedule other than schedule I would, for nonscientific reasons, avoid this type of medical review and would be in conflict with the current regulatory scheme of the Controlled Substances Act [see 21 U.S.C. 812(b)] (copy attached).

2. Has an unapproved new drug with a high potential for abuse ever been placed in schedule II?

No. An unapproved substance has never been recommended by FDA for any schedule other than schedule I.

3. Is there any basis to grant individuals conducting research with psychedelic drugs special exemptions from the requirements of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, supporting regulations, and enabling policies?

There is no reason to grant special exemptions from the requirements of the Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act to investigators working with any class of controlled substance analogs, psychedelic drugs in particular. In the Agency's view, controlled substance analogs, in particular those that cause psychedelic effects, require enhanced rather than reduced regulatory attention. Furthermore, we are unaware of any consensus among psychopharmacologists, psychiatrists, neurologists or academic physicians that special efforts are required to promote the conduct of research with "psychedelic" drugs.

4. Specifically, is psychedelic drug research so important and useful, and encumbered under current laws and regulations, that it should be allowed to proceed outside the established rules for all other drug research?

It is difficult to imagine a situation in which psychedelic substances should be considered so important or useful that our usual protections should be reduced. In fact, the Agency believes that any such exemptions would be inappropriate and unjustified. Indeed, if there is a need to single out psychedelic drugs for special treatment, it is to impose additional controls, not to remove them. In addition to the unknown risks associated with the experimental use of any new drug, the experimental use of new psychedelic substances is, by definition, associated with the production of an altered mental state. Whether an altered mental state induced by a psychedelic drug will be benefical, temporarily harmful, or permanently injurious cannot be reliably predicted. With respect to controlled substance analogs in general, we know of no reason to believe that subjects receiving them in investigations are at a lesser risk than subjects receiving other unapproved new drugs. Patients receiving unapproved analogs would be subject to as much if not greater risk if there is reduced regulatory controls.

From the Agency's perspective, and that of responsible investigators, the administration of any new substance to humans before it has been adequately characterized and tested for toxicity in animal studies is, in most cases, reckless and unethical. This is true even when the substances seem promising and the diseases are serious. Admittedly, if a patient were near death and a potentially life-saving experimental substance were available, a case might be made for using the new agent before animal testing was completed. In these cases, we are prepared to act quickly to allow treatment of particular individuals on an emergency basis. But the overall development of such a substance requires attention to needed animal data, good study design, careful assessment of effectiveness and safety, etc. Most studies under IND's proceed unencumbered; required submissions include chemistry and toxicologic data, protocols for clinical studies, periodic progress reports and reports of important adverse effects. Any responsible investigator would develop or obtain most of this data whether or not an IND existed.

5. Are subjects participating in studies using unapproved new drugs, i.e., controlled substance analogs, at any less risk than those involved in the study of any class of unapproved new drug? If so, why?

There is no basis for assuming that a new drug, by virtue of its being a controlled substance analog, will be any less toxic than drugs used in the treatment of, for example, heart disease or depression. The intended uses of a drug, or its collateral properties, do not predict its potential risk. Accordingly, the agency relies heavily upon the results of animal testing to estimate the potential risks associated with the proposed human testing of a new drug.

The unpredictability of drug associated risk is well known. Consider the recent example wherein a street chemist, attempting to synthesize an analog of meperidine, inadvertently made a product contaminated by N-methyl tetrahydropyridine (MPTP). The MPTP contaminant caused irreversible neurological injury among the addicts who used this particular "designer" drug. Examples of this sort may not be uncommon. Indeed, preliminary findings in animal studies suggest that the infamous "designer" drug MDMA, also known as "Ecstasy," may cause identifiable injury to brain tissue. These examples document why the Agency feels so strongly against granting anyone working with controlled substance analogs a special exemption from existing laws and regulations.

21 CFR 1301.33

§ 1301.33 Research protocols

(a) A protocol to conduct research with controlled substances listed in Schedule I shall be in the following form and contain the following information where applicable:

(1) Investigator:

(i) Name, address, and DEA registration number; if any.

(ii) Institutional affiliation.

(iii) Qualifications, including a curriculum vitae and an appropriate bibliography (list of publications).

(2) Research project:

(i) Title of project.

(ii) Statement of the purpose.

(iii) Name of the controlled substances or substances involved and the amount of each needed.

(iv) Description of the research to be conducted, including the number and species of research subjects, the dosage to be administered, the route and method of administration, and the duration of the project.

(v) Location where the research will be conducted.

(vi) Statement of the security provisions for storing the controlled substances (in accordance with § 1301.75) and for dispensing the controlled substances in order to prevent diversion.

(vii) If the investigator desires to manufacture or import any controlled substance listed in paragraph (a)(2)(iii) of this section, a statement of the quantity to be manufactured or imported and the sources of the chemicals to be used or the substance to be imported.

(3) Authority:

(i) Institutional approval.

(ii) Approval of a Human Research Committee for human studies.

(iii) Indication of an approved active Notice of Claimed Investigational Exemption for a New Drug (number).

(iv) Indication of an approved funded grant (number), if any.

(b) In the case of a clinical investigation with controlled substances listed in Schedule I, the applicant shall submit three copies of a Notice of Claimed Investigational Exemption for a New Drug (IND) together with a statement of the security provisions (as prescribed in paragraph (a)(2)(v) of this section for a research protocol) to, and have such submission approved by, the Food and Drug Administration as required in 21 U.S.C. 355(i) and § 130.3 of this title. Submission of this Notice and statement to the Food and Drug Administration shall be in lieu of a research protocol to the Administration as required in paragraph (a) of this section. The applicant, when applying for registration with the Administration, shall indicate that such notice has been submitted to the Food and Drug Administration by submitting to the Administration with his DEA (or BND) Form 225 three copies of the following certificate:

I hereby certify that on ——— (Date), pursuant to 21 U.S.C. 355(i) and 21 CFR 130.3, I, ——————————— (Name and Address of IND Sponsor) submitted a Notice of Claimed Investigational Exemption for a New Drug (IND) to the Food and Drug Administration for:

——————————— (Name of Investigational Drug).

——————— (Date)

——————————— (Signature of Applicant).

(c) In the event that the registrant desires to increase the quantity of a controlled substance used for an approved research project, he shall submit a request to the Registration Branch, Drug Enforcement Administration, Post Office Box 28083, Central Station, Washington, D.C. 20005, by registered mail, return receipt requested. The request shall contain the following information: DEA registration number; name of the controlled substance or substances and the quantity of each authorized in the approved protocol; and the additional quantity of each desired. Upon return of the receipt, the registrant shall be authorized to purchase the additional quantity of the controlled substance or substances specified in the request. The Administration shall review the letter and forward it to the Food and Drug Administration together with Administration comments. The Food and Drug Administration shall approve or deny the request as an amendment to the protocol and so notify the registrant. Approval of the letter by the Food and Drug Administration shall authorize the registrant to use the additional quantity of the controlled substance in the research project.

(d) In the event the registrant desires to conduct research beyond the variations provided in the registrant's approved protocol (excluding any increase in the quantity of the controlled substance requested for his research project is outlined in paragraph (c) of this section), he shall submit three copies of a supplemental protocol in accordance with paragraph (a) of this section describing the new research and omitting information in the supplemental protocol which has been stated in the original protocol. Supplemental protocols shall be processed and approved or denied in the same manner as original research protocols.

CONTROLLED SUBSTANCES ACT (21 USC 812)

SCHEDULES OF CONTROLLED SUBSTANCES

SEC. 202. [812] (a) There are established five schedules of controlled substances, to be known as schedules I, II, III, IV, and V. Such schedules shall initally consist of the substances listed in this section. The schedules established by this section shall be updated and republished on a semiannual basis during the two-year period beginning one year after the date of enactment of this title and shall be updated and republished on an annual basis thereafter.

(b) Except where control is required by United States obligations under an international treaty, convention, or protocol, in effect on the effective date of this part, and except in the case of an immediate precursor, a drug or other substance may not be placed in any schedule unless the findings required for such schedule are made with respect to such drug or other substance. The findings required for each of the schedules are as follows:

(1) SCHEDULE I.—

(A) The drug or other substance has a high potential for abuse.

(B) The drug or other substance has no currently accepted medical use in treatment in the United States.

(C) There is a lack of accepted safety for use of the drug or other substance under medical supervision.

(2) SCHEDULE II.—

(A) The drug or other substance has a high potential for abuse.

(B) The drug or other substance has a currently accepted medical use in treatment in the United States or a currently accepted medical use with severe restrictions.

(C) Abuse of the drug or other substances may lead to severe psychological or phyical dependence.

(3) SCHEDULE III.—

(A) The drug or other substance has a potential for abuse less than the drugs or other substances in schedules I and II.

(B) The drug or other substance has a currently accepted medical use in treatment in the United States.

(C) Abuse of the drug or other substance may lead to moderate or low physical dependence or high psychological dependence.

(4) SCHEDULE IV.—

(A) The drug or other substance has a low potential for abuse relative to the drugs or other substances in schedule III.

(B) The drug or other substance has a currently accepted medical use in treatment in the United States.

(C) Abuse of the drug or other substance may lead to limited physical dependence or psychological dependence relative to the drugs or other substances in schedule III.

(5) SCHEDULE V.—

(A) The drug or other substance has a low potential for abuse relative to the drugs or other substances in schedule IV.

(B) The drug or other substance has a currently accepted medical use in treatment in the United States.

(C) Abuse of the drug or other substance may lead to limited physical dependence or psychological dependence relative to the drugs or other substances in schedule IV.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, I would just like to offer a word of explanation concerning a provision which was included in the en bloc amendment just adopted by the House. Included in the en bloc amendment is a provision which I have offered which calls on the entertainment industry to refrain from producing movies, music videos, and other entertainment products, which encourage or glamorize drug use, and it also calls on the entertainment industry to produce products which encourage our young people to say "no" to drugs. This language is identical to my legislation, House Joint Resolution 712, which has over one-half of the Members of this House as original cosponsors. It is my hope that the entertainment industry will take careful note of this action, and join in the war on drugs which this country must fight. The entertainment industry must realize that their movies and videos do have an impact on the values and perceptions of the people who watch them, especially on our young people, and that it is imperative that drug use be portrayed realistically, as the destructive, addictive thing that it is, instead of glamorizing the use of dangerous drugs.

On a final note, I would like to commend the House for adopting this provision, and give a special thanks to the 200-plus Members of this House who agreed to become original cosponsors of the initial legislation. Their support for this bill was vital to its adoption in the omnibus drug package.

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, today the House is considering an omnibus antidrug bill that is a sincere effort to fight the tremendous drug abuse and narcotics trafficking crisis that is plaguing our Nation. I have served as a member of the House Anti-Drug Task Force and seen the commitment and work that members and staffs have devoted to shaping this legislative effort. I believe the Nation is becoming increasingly aware of the seriousness of the drug-abuse problem and that the issue is touching every portion of our population. The attention of the media, national figures, and political leaders has elevated this issue to new heights, and it is certainly about time.

As a member of the Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse for the past 7 years, I have long been concerned with the dangers that drug abuse and narcotics trafficking pose to individuals and to society as a whole. In August 1985, I and several other members of the select committee, visited South American countries where we reviewed the status of illicit narcotics production and trafficking. Having visited Bolivia, Peru, and Colombia and discussed the issue with Presidents Paz, Garcia, and Betancur, I am convinced that the laboratories are the vulnerable choke points of the cocaine trade. I applauded the decision of the administration earlier this summer to assist the Government of Bolivia in eliminating cocaine laboratories. Crop substitution efforts in these South American countries are difficult and expensive; coca is grown by poor campesinos in remote areas, and it is difficult to outbid narcotics traffickers.

During that South American experience I also got a firsthand and very realistic view of just how difficult a task we face in narcotics interdiction. Our military and intelligence efforts prove costly and are not nearly effective enough to make a dent in the surge of drugs pouring into this country every day. The interdiction of cocaine shipments to the United States is also failing because of the drug's small bulk and high concentration.

I am convinced that we devote a disproportionate share of our resources to the supply side of the narcotics trade—to foreign crop eradication, interdiction at or beyond our borders, and law enforcement efforts to apprehend drug traffickers in the United States. I do not denigrate these efforts, but too such illegal money is involved to be able to predict success.

In my 18 years of experience, too little of our resources have been devoted to the demand side of the equation—toward drug-abuse education. We must increase public awareness and provide drug-abuse education particularly to our impressionable youth in their formative years. Our elementary and secondary school students must learn that drugs are harmful. We must dispell the myth that getting high is just a harmless feeling of euphoria. We have increasing evidence that cocaine and its derivative crack are highly addictive and can kill.

Last month in the Labor, HHS and Education appropriations bill, I offered a successful amendment to transfer money to the Secretary of Education's discretionary fund. I established legislative history surrounding this money asking that it be used by the Department of Education for the production, publicity, and distribution of a series of audiovisual aids. These films should be geared toward elementary and secondary school students and distributed to every school in the country to enhance a drug abuse curriculum.

Today I have asked to have included under title VIII, the Education and Labor portion of the omnibus drug bill, this very same concept. Under section 831, "National Programs of Drug Abuse Education and Prevention," I have asked that the Secretary and Department of Education be required to develop, publicize the availability of, and widely disseminate audiovisual and other curricula materials for drug abuse education and prevention programs in elementary and secondary schools throughout the Nation.

I believe that the audiovisual medium is a very effective and influential way to reach today's youth. Utilizing information and situations that are relevant to their lives, that is factual and realistic, is essential if we are to provide quality educational materials for students to learn from, and teachers to utilize effectively.

It is imperative that the Department of Education take responsibility and become involved in this capacity to help lessen the demand for illegal drugs in this country. We have got to make a national commitment to drug-abuse education and there isn't a more appropriate and necessary place to begin this national initiative.

For awhile it appeared as though the Department was not going to become involved in the drug issue except to take a zero-tolerance stance, kicking all drug users and dealers out of the schools and into the streets. I agree that we should not tolerate drugs and that we should enforce our convictions especially in the schools. Education can, however, be a more powerful weapon against drug abuse.

It encourages me to see that the Secretary of Education and the Department have indicated that they will be participating and coordinating drug-abuse education and prevention programs. I believe that a series of drug-abuse prevention films put out by the Department of Education would be a valuable contribution to any anti-drug-abuse curriculum.

By learning and becoming more aware, our children will be given the power of choice—the choice to say no to drugs, and to know that they are doing the right thing.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, first, I would like to state my strong support of this legislation. The evidence is clear—we have a very serious problem with drug abuse in this country. Something must be done to address its causes and to promote prevention and rehabilitation. I believe that this legislation takes a significant first step toward solving the drug crisis in this country. I would like to commend the majority leader for his long and tireless work on this important legislation.

It is my understanding that the Rules Committee has allowed an amendment of mine to be offered en bloc. I thank the Rules Committee for this opportunity. My amendment is simple. It ties U.S. foreign assistance to the drug eradication efforts in foreign countries. This is accomplished by calling upon the President to submit to the Congress a full report of the progress achieved by each country proposed for assistance in that country's illicit drug eradication programs. This report must be submitted prior to consideration of request for foreign assistance programs for each fiscal year.

An integral part of developing a comprehensive program to head off the growing drug crisis in this country is addressing the problem at the source. We must look at where the drugs are being grown, produced, and trafficked. We must clearly know which governments are being cooperative in addressing this problem and which governments are not. This is the kind of long-term approach we need. We have an obligation to ensure that the U.S. taxpayers dollars are not used to support the growth, manufacture, production, and trade of illicit drugs which have such an adverse consequence here. I urge my colleagues to accept my amendment and to support this legislation, which goes a long way toward stopping a very serious crisis in this country.

Mr. LEVINE of California. Mr. Chairman, I am offering an amendment in the package here today which would ban the mail order sales of drug paraphernalia. Conviction of selling drug paraphernalia would result in imprisonment of up to 3 years and a fine of not more than $100,000. The amendment also provides for the seizure and forfeiture of drug paraphernalia being used for sale in interstate commerce. If passed, this legislation will end the sale of drug paraphernalia through the mails.

Drug abuse is one of the most serious problems facing our Nation. It is a drain on our economy. It contributes to violent crime. It ruins the lives of our young people. Although drug abuse cuts across ethnic, class, and age groups, I am particularly concerned about the high rates of abuse among young people. According to estimates by the National Institute on Drug Abuse [NIDA] the drug abuse rates among America's youth are among the highest found in any developed country in the world. Nearly two-thirds of all high school seniors in 1984 had tried an illicit drug before graduation; 40 percent had tried a drug other than marijuana. And at least 1 in every 20 high school seniors is smoking marijuana on a daily basis. Most shocking however, is the early age at which children are experimenting with drugs. According to NIDA, 32 percent of high school students graduating in 1984 had experimented with marijuana before entering high school.

In fact, for most illegal drugs, including inhalants, barbiturates, nitrites, heroin, PCP, amphetamines, methaqualone, and tranquilizers, between 40 and 50 percent of the eventual users initiated use prior to high school.

Among the total population, it is estimated that more than 20 million Americans use marijuana on a regular basis and approximately 8 to 20 million are regular cocaine users.

The sale of illicit drugs grossed an estimated $110 billion in 1984. The cost of prevention, treatment, and law enforcement efforts related to drug abuse approached $100 billion.

The drug paraphernalia industry both glamorizes the use of illegal drugs and contributes to the problem of drug abuse. It has been estimated that this industry produces more than $3 billion annually.

The open sale of drug paraphernalia misleads many young Americans to believe that drugs are acceptable to use. Advertisements in catalogs touting the paraphernalia ignore the serious consequences of drug abuse—health risks, addiction, progression to stronger drugs—and instead sell the idea that drug use is a normal and acceptable activity. A further danger, again especially for young people, is the idea that if drug paraphernalia can be openly sold through the mails, then society is not serious about enforcing drug laws, that the health risks are not really so great, and that the legal consequences are not serious.

Our children are victims of drug abuse while a few manufacturers profit from open trade in drug paraphernalia.

Dr. Carlton Turner, Director of the White House Office on Drug Abuse Policy, stated at the annual Conference of the National Federation of Parents for a Drug-Free Youth that "it is now time for a National Paraphernalia Act to be passed." Banning the sale of drug paraphernalia through the mail will help in the effort to end drug abuse by reemphasizing that society is completely opposed to any glamorization or acceptance of dangerous drug use.

I first became concerned with the issue of drug paraphernalia sales as a member of the California State Legislature. There I sponsored the first drug paraphernalia bill to pass the California assembly and be signed into law. To date a total of 38 States have passed laws, similar to this amendment, banning the sale of drug paraphernalia. Although State laws have been successful in closing down local headshops, paraphernalia dealers are circumventing these laws and continuing their illicit sales through the mails. My amendment seeks to shut this final loophole.

This amendment is identical to legislation I introduced last year with the distinguished chairman and ranking minority member of the Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control. This legislation received wise bipartisan support and has been cosponsored by 70 Members of this body. Hearings on this legislation were conducted by the Subcommittee on Crime.

Mr. Chairman, representatives from the tobacco industry have expressed some concern that this amendment might be misconstrued by some to ban the mail order sales of tobacco pipes. This amendment clearly is not intended to include traditional tobacco pipes in the ban on drug paraphernalia. I would like to highlight three sections of the amendment which make clear the intent of this language. First, section (e), the evidence section of this amendment states that "in determining whether an item constitutes drug paraphernalia * * * the following may be considered" and the amendment lists eight items. Item 5 states that among the factors to be considered is "whether the owner, or anyone in control of the item, is a legitimate supplier of like or related items to the community, such as a licensed distributor or dealer of tobacco products." In other words, distributors of tobacco pipes are not to be included in this ban.

Second, section (d), the definition section of this amendment states that "The term 'drug paraphernalia' means all equipment, products or materials of any kind which are used, intended for use, or designed for use in manufacturing, compounding, converting, concealing, producing, processing, preparing, injecting, ingesting, inhaling, or other introducing into the human body a controlled substance in violation of the Controlled Substances Act." Since tobacco is not a substance on the Controlled Substances Act, tobacco pipes clearly are not included in the definition of drug paraphernalia.

Third, also under section (d), this amendment states that the definition of drug paraphernalia "includes, but is not limited to, items used, intended for use, or designed for use in ingesting, inhaling, or otherwise introducing marijuana, cocaine, hashish, hashish oil, PCP, or amphetamines into the human body." Again, tobacco is not included on this list and although the list is not limited the intent nonetheless is clear, drug paraphernalia consists only of items used with illegal drugs.

In addition to highlighting the intent of these three sections, I would like to state explicitly for the record that the intent of this amendment is not to interfere in anyway with the sale of tobacco pipes. Let me also say I assured my distinguished colleague from Ohio, Congressman REGULA, who has called me regarding this issue, that the intent of this amendment is not to penalize pipe tobacco manufacturers or sellers, but rather this language seeks only to halt the sale of drug paraphernalia.

The legal and easy availability through the mails of drug paraphernalia intended and designed for use with controlled substances is antithetical and detrimental to the goal of ending the abuse of drugs. In the midst of the war against illicit drug use, we are allowing these mail order profiteers to glamorize the illegal use of drugs.

I urge my colleagues to support these amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

The question is on the amendments offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WRIGHT].

The amendments were agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, amendment No. 15 will be in order.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. SMITH OF FLORIDA

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SMITH of Florida: Page 23, insert after line 19 the following:

(d) REWARD CONCERNING JORGE LUIS OCHOA VASQUEZ.—It is the sense of the Congress that the authority of section 36(b) of the State Department Basic Authorities Act of 1956 (22 U.S.C. 2708(b)), as amended by section 502(a) of the Omnibus Diplomatic Security and Antiterrorism Act of 1986 (Public Law 99-399; enacted August 27, 1986), should be used expeditiously to establish a reward of up to $500,000 for information leading to the arrest or conviction of Jorge Luis Ochoa Vasquez for narcotics-related offenses.

Mr. SMITH of Florida [during the reading]. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

□ 1120

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Chairman, I request equal time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman opposed to the amendment?

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Chairman, I am in support of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will be recognized for 5 mintues in opposition to the amendment.

Under the rule the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SMITH] will be recognized for 5 minutes and the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN] will be recognized in opposition for 5 minutes.

The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I believe that this amendment is not controversial. It deals with a matter that occurred after the Foreign Affairs Committee's markup of the antidrug bill. This amendment must be offered now if the House is to address these troubling events.

This amendment to section 126 of the bill deals with narcoterrorism. I propose a new section (d) which would recommend that the administration approve a reward of $500,000 for information leading to the arrest or conviction of the notorious drug trafficker Jorge Ochoa.

Since a number of my colleagues have asked me who Jorge Ochoa is, I'd like to provide a little background. In 1984, Mr. Jorge Luis Ochoa Vasquez was indicted in Miami for smuggling 1,500 kilograms of cocaine into the United States through Nicaragua. The indictments resulted from testimony—and pictures—provided by Barry Seal, a pilot and drug smuggler working for the DEA. Mr. Seal had indicated that Ochoa personally directed Seal to a Managua airport where Frederico Vaughan, an aide to Interior Minister Thomas Borge, and other Sandinistas helped load the cocaine into the plane. Pictures of this operation have been shown on national television. You may recall that Mr. Seal was murdered in Louisiana earlier this year, and Mr. Ochoa is suspected of having a hand in the murder.

In 1984, Ochoa was arrested in Spain. The United States and Colombia both sought extradition, but Ochoa was extradited to Colombia on a bill importing charge. In August 1986, a Colombian judge released Ochoa before the latter could be tried on narcotics trafficking charges. Ochoa has since dropped out of sight. According to press reports, the judge was ousted and is under investigation.

I sponsored the provision of the antiterrorism law (Public Law 99-239) that authorizes such rewards, and I believe that the administration should use that authority to try to catch one of the "top 10" traffickers in the Western Hemisphere.

This amendment does not add to the bill. I hope that the committee will support it.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Florida. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FASCELL], the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. FASCELL. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, on our side for the committee, we think it is a very good amendment. I commend the gentleman for his leadership. We accept the amendment.

Mr. ENGLISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Florida. I yield briefly to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. ENGLISH. I thank the gentlemen for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say very quickly I comment the gentleman for his amendment. It is an outstanding amendment.

I also want to commend the gentleman for his fight in the war on drugs.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. I thank the gentleman for his comments.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida has 2 minutes remaining.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Chairman, I regret that due to time constraints that we have to utilize this procedure in this manner. I am not opposed to the measure, Mr. Chairman, and I rise in support of the measure, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. Chairman, Colombia has been shaken in recent years by the extraordinarily bold, ruthless actions of its narcotics traffickers. They assassinated the Colombian Minister of Justice and then, adding insult to injury, killed the judge who was investigating the murder. The perpetrators of that murder went a step further, offering to pay off the nation's multibillion-dollar foreign debt if they would be granted amnesty.

As noted by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SMITH] a key narcotics kingpin Jorge Ochoa, was recently—outrageously—released by a Colombia judge. The Smith amendment expresses the sense of Congress that the administration should place a price of $500,000 on Ochoa's head, using the authorities provided in Public Law 99-239 to establish rewards for the capture of important narcotics traffickers.

The gentleman's efforts in this regard are highly appreciated on this side of the aisle, as are all his efforts as chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee's Task Force on International Narcotics Matters, as an active member of the Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control, and as an active member of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Accordingly, I urge the adoption of the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL], our minority leader.

Mr. MICHEL. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I certainly do not intend to oppose the amendment, but I only take this opportunity, without asking unanimous consent for the opportunity to proceed under another order, to compliment the majority leader for the manner in which we have resolved the last group of amendments en bloc. We both recognize that in our speed to put together as expeditiously as we possibly could a package here that there might be an occasion, as just happened, where with a little bit more care and time we could have avoided the conflict. I appreciate the fact that notwithstanding the misunderstanding we were able to also avoid scuttling the balance of those amendments in the package that were good and deserving of our support. I appreciate the conciliatory attitude on the part of those, particularly Mr. LUNGREN, who feel so strongly about this issue. It was worthwhile to have the legislative history evolve here as it did on the floor of the House, so that it can be considered at some later date when surely the other body will have to be taking up this piece of legislation before it ever becomes law.

Mr. GILMAN. I thank the minority leader for his remarks.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GARCIA].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. GARCIA] is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. GARCIA. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to engage the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FASCELL] in a colloquy.

Mr. Chairman, I am interested in seeking clarification from you regarding the amount of assistance this bill provides for Latin America. How much of the international assistance provided for in this bill is expected to be allocated to Latin America?

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARCIA. I yield to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FASCELL], the chairman of the committee.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, title I of the bill authorizes $48 million in new appropriations for foreign drug interdiction and eradication efforts, and increases the current authorization of international narcotics control from $57.5 million in fiscal year 1987 to $65.4 million. It also authorizes an additional $35 million for international narcotics control purposes if the President requests the appropriation of such funds, and details how such funds would be used. The only specific geographic earmark in the bill is for $10 million in already authorized foreign military assistance funds for the lease or loan of aircraft for narcotics eradication and interdiction efforts, of which half must be used in Latin America.

Mr. GARCIA. Is it the intent of this legislation that the bulk of these new assistance funds be directed toward drug interdiction and eradication efforts in Latin America?

Mr. FASCELL. That is indeed our intention. There is a very clear consensus in Congress and in the administration that our efforts as a nation must be directed at the interdiction and eradication of cocaine production in Latin America, which is the source of all illegal cocaine coming into this country.

Mr. GARCIA. Which Latin American countries do you believe are helping us the most with the cocaine problem, and should they deserve receiving the majority of our funds because of their cooperation?

Mr. FASCELL. Clearly, Ecuador is one of the Latin American countries that is cooperating the most with United States authorities to interdict and eradicate the coca problem. As a result, Ecuador should be one of the principal beneficiaries of our international drug assistance funds. I believe we must support them as long as they are willing to help us in this fight.

And I feel the same way about any other country.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN] yield time to this side so that we may complete our statement?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has yielded back the time, and there is no more time remaining.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Chairman, may I reclaim my time?

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN] be permitted to reclaim his time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN] is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to yield that 2 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FASCELL], the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. FASCELL. I thank the gentleman for yielding the time to me.

Mr. Chairman, likewise, the Government of Ecuador, under the leadership of President Febres Cordero, has demonstrated vigorous regional leadership in the struggle against drug trafficking and illicit narcotics. Ecuador has promoted regional cooperation and vigorous law enforcement against the illicit coca trade, and is willing to do more if we help them with additional assistance.

And I think that is the kind of principle of philosphy that we ought to have with all the Latin countries.

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I thank the gentleman for his comments.

Mr. Chairman, since taking office in August 1985, President Victor Paz Estenssoro of Bolivia has made very encouraging strides in addressing the illicit cocaine traffic in his country.

Through the end of July 1986, the Government of Bolivia has impounded 3,705 kilos of cocaine, which exceeds the amount impounded in all of 1985. This is a very impressive accomplishment, and one we should continue to promote and support.

As a result of the recent cocaine raids in Bolivia undertaken by the United States and Bolivian Governments, the average coca leaf price in that country has dropped from $700 per 100 lbs. (during the first half of 1985) to $20 today. Seven labs with a weekly production capability of 11,000 pounds of cocaine paste were found and destroyed. The DEA reports that these raids have virtually halted the production of cocaine in Bolivia. Fifteen drug traffickers, of which three are considered major dealers, were arrested and will be tried shortly.

The Government of Bolivia has made a public commitment to eradicate illegal cocaine production in Bolivia under a 3-year plan to be developed bilaterally between our two countries. The objectives of this plan include the destruction of all cocaine-refining laboratories in the country, the destruction of all past-producing laboratories, the reduction of coca leaf production by 140,000 tons by eliminating 55,000 coca-producing hectares and introducing substitute crops in these areas, and other related projects.

The recent United States-Bolivian raids represent an impressive first step by Bolivia to eliminate the cocaine problem, and clear evidence of President Paz Estenssoro's serious commitment to this goal. For it represents a tremendous challenge to Bolivia to achieve, combining economic, social, political, and logistical difficulties of the highest order. Bolivia is the poorest country in South America, and simply does not have all of the financial and technical means to do the job alone. The United States must recognize Bolivia's bold efforts toward drug eradication and support their actions with sufficient economic and political assistance to achieve their goal.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired on this amendment.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SMITH].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the order of the House of September 10, 1986, amendment No. 22 by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SMITH] is now in order.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. SMITH OF FLORIDA

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SMITH of Florida: Page 34, line 7 strike out "MURDER OF DEA AGENT CAMARENA" and insert in lieu thereof "TORTURE AND MURDER OF DEA AGENTS".

Page 34, line 17, strike out "and".

Redesignate paragraph (2) as paragraph (3).

Page 34, insert after line 17 the following:

(2) has fully investigated the 1986 detention and torture of Drug Enforcement Administration agent Victor Cortez, Junior, and

Page 34, line 19, after "murders" insert "and those responsible for that detention and torture".

Mr. SMITH of Florida (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SMITH] will be recognized for 5 minutes and a Member opposed thereto will be recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN] will be recognized for 5 minutes after the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SMITH] is recognized.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Florida. I thank the Chair.

Mr. Chairman, I want to take this opportunity to thank the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN] as the cochair of the International Narcotics Task Force of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, who has been a great help in putting this bill together, and certainly all the amendments thereto.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that the amendment is not controversial. It deals with a matter that occurred after the Foreign Affairs Committee's markup of the antidrug bill. This amendment must be offered now if the House is to address these troubling events.

The amendment to section 161(a) establishes a second condition on the $1 million that is being withheld from drug assistance to Mexico. The bill already withholds these funds until those responsible for the torture and murder of DEA agent Enrique Camarena Salazar are brought to justice. Unfortunately, we have been confronted by yet another atrocity against a DEA agent. While carrying out his duties in Guadalajara, Victor Corte was kidnaped by Mexican police officials and brutally tortured. It was a repeat of the Camarena case: The same city, same police unit, and so forth. Only this time our agent was fortunate enough to be released with his life.

I believe that justice must be served by the effective prosecution of those responsible for both the Cortez kidnaping and the Camarena murder. I, therefore, propose that we also condition the $1 million on action against the Cortez kidnapers.

This amendment does not add money to the bill. I hope that the committee will support it.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Florida. I yield to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FASCELL], the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. FASCELL. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, we have examined this amendment, we think it is a good amendment, and we are prepared to accept it on this side.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. I thank the gentleman, and I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN].

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Chairman, I regret that the procedure requires that I had to rise in opposition to save time and I withdraw my opposition and rise in support of the amendment by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. Chairman, I cannot think of a more shocking incident in recent months in our fight against narcotics than the revelation last month that even as American and Mexican officials at the highest levels were meeting on the problem of United States-Mexican cooperation in the struggle against narcotics, an American DEA agent was being tortured by Mexican policemen in an effort to subvert our cooperative relationship with Mexico.

I fully agree with the gentleman that we need a lever to encourage the Mexican authorities to act effectively to bring the torturers of DEA agent Victor Cortez, Jr., to justice, and I support his amendment to condition the release of a symbolic $1 million of our antinarcotics assistance funds on a Presidential certification that Mexicans have commenced an effective prosecution of his torturers, as well as the effective prosecution of the murderers of DEA agent Enrique Camarena Salazar and his pilot, Alfredo Zavala Avelar.

Mr. Chairman, I commend the gentleman from Florida for his efforts to focus attention on the Cortez outrage. I joined with him in writing in the strongest terms to the Mexican authorities after the incident came to light. The minority accepts this amendment and I urge its adoption.

□ 1135

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILMAN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Chairman, I just want to say that I commend the gentleman from Florida. As a Congressman who had Enrique Camarena for a constituent and who appreciated his services for the DEA, I appreciate the gentleman and the ranking member on the select committee and their statements.

I think it is very important that we send a strong message to Mexico, because I understand that some of the same people in the Mexican authorities, some of the same authorities, were involved in torturing this latest drug enforcement agent. They were the same people who participated in the torture and at least apprehension of Enrique Camarena. I think the seriousness of this must be made clear to the Mexican Government.

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the efforts of both gentlemen.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his statement.

I might note that it has now been reported that the legal proceedings in Guadalajara concerning the injuries against DEA agent Victor Cortez have been suspended because the judge does not have enough evidence to order the arrest of 11 Jalisco judicial policemen who are presumably the ones responsible for the assault. The Mexican authorities state that they now need a declaration by Cortez, but he has not made one, and that seems to be the latest status of this investigation by the Mexican authorities.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. YATRON].

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Smith amendment and in support of title I, as reported out by the Foreign Affairs Committee.

Mr. Chairman, this very important amendment is designed to encourage the Mexican Government to bring to justice those persons responsible for the torture of Agent Victor Cortez and the murder of Agent Camarena.

Mr. Chairman, if the criminal justice systems in a country where our agents are working do not provide legal recourse, as we have seen with these two cases, there will be greater temptation on the part of those who don't respect the law, including drug traffickers, to commit heinous crimes against our people.

I strongly urge our colleagues to support this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Foreign Affairs Committee and as an original cosponsor of this title, I want to commend Chairman FASCELL, Congressman BROOMFIELD, and members of the committee for bringing this important piece of legislation to the floor.

I rise in strong support of H.R. 5352, to combat international narcotics trafficking.

As we all know, the widespread abuse of illegal drugs today has become a threat to our civilization as we know it. Drug abuse has permeated our country and the world. The International Narcotics Control Act of 1986 is a comprehensive plan to arrest the spread of this cancer.

Mr. Chairman, I strongly support the entire bill, and I would like to take a few moments to address three provisions of this measure which I find of particular importance.

First are the U.N. activities relating to narcotics control. This bill calls for greater international coordination and additional contributions by other countries to the U.N. Fund for Drug Abuse and Control, and directs the United States to give high priority to U.S. participation in the U.N. International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking to be held in June 1987.

Section 503 calls for a study of the effectiveness of U.N. entities relating to narcotics prevention and control, including an evaluation of the potential savings and greater coordination that might be attained by consolidating various U.N. agencies and affiliations. The final section of this title urges a speedy completion of the proposed new narcotics control convention and calls for more effective implementation of existing conventions.

As a vice-chairman of the Mexican-American Interparliamentary Conference, I strongly support the provision regarding Mexico. Section 602 urges the President to begin negotiations for the creation of a United States-Mexico Intergovernmental Commission on Narcotics. This Commission proposal was originally approved by the 26th Mexico-United States Interparliamentary Conference.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I would like to address the modification of the Mansfield amendment, which would prohibit U.S. officials from being present during narcotics raids overseas. Section 203 waives this prohibition in the case of a foreign country where the Secretary of State determines that it would be in the U.S. national interest, and would not be detrimental to U.S. relations with that country. The Secretary is to keep the Congress apprised of those activities carried out by U.S. employees pursuant to those determinations. I strongly support this section, as the Mansfield amendment has had a limiting effect on the ability of U.S. officials to monitor antinarcotics actions abroad.

In conclusion, this legislation will strengthen and enhance our ability to confront the menace of global drug abuse, which threatens the welfare of virtually every nation. I strongly urge my colleagues to support this bill.

I also want to commend the Public Works and Transportation Committee and Chairman JIM HOWARD for including in their section of the bill increased penalties against pilots convicted of drug smuggling. Current laws revoke a pilot's license for only 1 year. This bill will increase pilot license revocation fivefold. I think this will be very helpful in providing sufficient punishment and deterrence to drug trafficking by pilots, I commend my colleague from New Jersey for his leadership on this issue.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. YATRON] be granted 1 additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Chair would advise the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN] that the rule confines the gentleman to 1 remaining minute.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire how much time I have remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. SMITH] has 1 minute remaining.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN].

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to rise to commend the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. YATRON] for his long-standing and diligent efforts in battling narcotics. As cochairman of our Interparliamentary Conference between the United States and Mexico, the gentleman from Pennsylvania has done an outstanding job of bringing this issue to the floor of that interparliamentary body in seeking greater cooperation between the United States and Mexico in combating narcotics trafficking and abuse.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the remainder of my time.

Mr. Chairman, let me close by saying first of all that I want to commend the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who not only as the vice chair of the Interparliamentary Conference, but also as the chairman of the Human Rights Subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, has tried desperately to get those countries to battle narcotics trafficking as well.

I also want to take this opportunity to tell the Members in this Chamber that this is the kind of thing we must continue to do if we are going to fight the war on drugs worldwide. Whatever leverage we have must be used.

One hundred and three people have been arrested in the Camarena, but in a year and a half, not one has been brought to trial, no indictments, nothing. This is the way to proceed with foreign countries. Use the leverage we have. This is the kind of thing that is going to bring eventual success.

Mr. Chairman, I urge the committee to adopt the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SMITH].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, amendment 16 is in order.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. BENNETT

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BENNETT: Page 41, strike out line 23 through line 5 on page 42 and redesignate the succeeding subsections accordingly.

Page 43, insert after line 2 the following:

SEC. 207. ENHANCED AUTHORITY OF MEMBERS OF THE ARMED FORCES IN DRUG INTERDICTION ACTIVITIES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 374 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(d)(1) Subject to paragraph (2), the Secretary of Defense, upon request from the head of a Federal agency with jurisdiction to enforce the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 801 et seq.) or the Controlled Substances Import and Export Act (21 U.S.C. 951 et seq.), may assign members of the armed forces under the Secretary's jurisdiction to assist drug enforcement officials of that agency in searches, seizures, and arrests outside the land area of the United States (or of any territory or possession of the United States) in connection with the enforcement of such Acts.

"(2) Members may be assigned to provide assistance under paragraph (1) only if—

"(A) the Attoney General certifies that there are insufficient law enforcement resources available to ensure the success of the operation;

"(B) the assistance is approved by the Secretary of Defense with the concurrence of the Secretary of State; and

"(C) Federal drug enforcement officials maintain control over the activities and direction of any drug enforcement operation.

"(3) Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to transfer the responsibility for the enforcement of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 801 et seq.) or the Controlled Substance Import and Export Act (21 U.S.C. 951 et seq.) to the Department of Defense."

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 375 of such title is amended by inserting "(other than under section 374(d))" after "under this chapter".

Mr. BENNETT (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. BENNETT] will be recognized for 10 minutes, and a Member opposed will be recognized for 10 minutes.

Does any Member seek recognition in opposition?

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DICKINSON] will be recognized for 10 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Florida [Mr. BENNETT].

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL].

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, we have examined the amendment. We know how much effort the gentleman has put into this drug problem, and we commend the gentleman for the work he has done. This side has no objection to the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 6 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment is an amendment which has already passed the House by a record vote of 364 to 51. By definition, all it does is enable the military to be used in very restricted circumstances to assist in the fight against drugs. It has solid bipartisan support.

The Conference of Mayors and Municipalities emergency narcotics discussion convened by the gentleman from New York [Mr. RANGEL] and Mayor Koch have approved. The President's Commission on Organized Crime has approved. It follows the tradition of our Nation.

There has been some talk about what the traditions of our Nation are in this matter. I point out that President Washington mobilized the military to put down the Whisky Rebellion in 1794. President Eisenhower used the military in the Little Rock situation to enforce integration. Presidents Eisenhower, Kennedy, and Johnson in various civil rights matters did similarly. And in 1981, Congress passed the posse comitatus amendment to allow the military to provide limited assistance in the war against illegal drug traffic.

This is not a piece of legislation that is subject to the criticism that is going to create a "banana republic." Just exactly the opposite is true. The criticism would be well founded against a piece of legislation if it turned over to the military civilian functions, and that is what we think about when we think about a banana republic. This is just exactly the reverse. This is the civilian branch of the Government using the militry to enforce laws that have been enacted by Congress to protect the country in various aspects, and it will in no way infringe upon the responsibilites or protections of the American people in any aspect of their lives.

So it is a good piece of legislation. It is a moderate piece of legislation. I offer this amendment not only on my own behalf but on behalf of particularly the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW] and others who have expressed an interest in it. Mr. SHAW and I have really drafted this legislation, therefore, it really is the Bennett-Shaw amendment. I want to pay tribute to him for his great leadership in this field.

Another amendment will be offered shortly and I might as well talk a little bit about that. It will add to the amendment. It will not subtract from the amendment. It is a little confused in the RECORD as it stands. If you read the RECORD, you might think that it was going to substitute for the amendment that I am offering. I have been advised by the Parliamentarian that what actually happened is the amendment by Mr. HUNTER of California will be addition to and not otherwise involve this matter. Therefore, as I understand it, we can vote for or against Mr. HUNTER's proposal and then we can vote for or against the proposal that I have with that added or with it out.

I would like to say a little bit on how I feel about Mr. HUNTER's proposal. Mr. HUNTER's proposal is a more dramatic proposal. It has "hot pursuit" in it. I personally favor that, but I would be very distressed if I felt that in some way that carried down and destroyed the very temperate amendment which I have offered here. So I am expressing my personal feelings about it, but I want to put it in the proper context.

Mr. ENGLISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNETT. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. ENGLISH. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I would simply like to commend the gentleman from Florida. His leadership in this area and particularly the use of the military is well known and well founded. I remember back in 1981 with the change of posse comitatus it made a lot of this possible. He is the father, so to speak, of involvement of the military.

I certainly want to commend the gentleman and commend him for this amendment. It is excellent.

Mr. BENNETT. I thank the gentleman. God bless you.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNETT. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FASCELL. I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by my distinguished colleague from Florida, Mr. BENNETT.

Despite the outstanding efforts of Federal, State, and local law enforcement agencies, south Florida continues to be a haven for drug traffickers. Since 1981, the military has been loaning equipment to Federal law enforcement agencies to fight drug smuggling. The amendment before us would enhance existing military cooperation and allow military personnel to assist in certain aspects of Federal antidrug efforts outside U.S. borders.

This House overwhelmingly approved the use of military personnel in the war against drugs last year when CHARLIE BENNETT offered this language to the fiscal year 1986 Department of Defense authorization bill. Let's escalate the war against drug trafficking and approve the Bennett amendment once again.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNETT. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. RANGEL. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I stand in support of the Bennett amendment that has been worked on by a member of the Select Narcotics Committee, Mr. SHAW. I think we all are concerned when it appears as though the military is usurping civilian authority. Clearly, you have more protection in this bill where the Attorney General and the Secretary of Defense are clearly giving assistance to the civilian authority which needs more help now than ever before.

It is a good amendment, and I am certain that we are going to pass it into law.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHEUER].

Mr. SCHEUER. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I strongly support this amendment. Tightening up these borders with the assistance of the military may be our last, best hope. Eradication of crops abroad on the poppy fields of Laos, Burma, Thailand, Turkey, our Latin American neighbors, a whole horde of them, simply has not worked. The cash values of the crops are too high, the corruption and inefficiency in those governments is too great. We have spent hundreds of milions of dollars, and yet the drugs keep flowing over our borders and into the mouths or veins of our kids.

I myself sponsored an amendment with Senator Ed Muskie 15 years ago to start crop substitution efforts in Turkey. It has worked in Turkey, but in most of the rest of the developing world, it has not worked. We know from experience that once the drugs get off of those fields, are processed, and get into our country, our law enforcement process breaks down. It is corrupting. Our police are virtually overwhelmed with the burden of law enforcement. We cannot cope with the avalanche of drugs once it crosses our borders.

Stopping it at the border is our last, best chance, Mr. Chairman. The very sophisticated drug traffickers who are operating in this $100 billion-plus industry have the most exquisite advances in high-technology communications, transportation, intelligence and the like. They use "mules" at the border as intelligence. They encourage large numbers of people to cross our border illegally not only carrying drugs across but to send back to them information as to when the borders are less manned and when they are more manned and what would be the best time for them to send their deadly poison across the border.

We urgently need the latest advances in communications, in transportation, in surveillance, in intelligence, and finally in sheer, brute firepower that only the armed services can provide.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW].

Mr. SHAW. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, under the rule I know that in order to claim the time on our side on this particular amendment that you would have to rise in opposition, but I am sure that the gentleman from Alabama is going to listen very carefully to this debate and that in a few minutes he is not only going to favor it, but he may even stand up and speak in favor of it because of the wisdom of what we are saying here on the floor of the House.

We have traveled down this road many times. Unfortunately, here in the House, despite the fact that we have overwhelmingly passed on this issue time and time again, the wisdom of the House just does not seem to be heard down at the other end of the corridor and the other body has not embraced this concept.

What we have now I think is a new spirit in this country, and it is a spirit of the people that is rising up and saying, "Enough is enough; we have gotten ourselves into a situation where this drug problem is affecting and threatening our very future and our very presence in the workplace and in the schools."

All across this country drugs are the biggest, biggest threat that we have ever had to our national security. What country, what country would go after the greatest threat to its national security without in any way involving in a significant manner the Armed Forces of the United States?

The budget of this country has overwhelmingly been weighted in favor of the military over the last several years. I have favored such buildup because it has been absolutely necessary. But why have all of those men and women and machinery and equipment, airplanes, ships, all of that talent, all of that manpower, why keep it bottled up and suppressed and not use it against the greatest threat to this country that we have? Why not put it out there and use it to its fullest extent against the drug dealers and those who would smuggle drugs into this country?

The Bennett-Shaw amendment merely says that we are going to be giving the Armed Forces the right to make searches and seizures and arrests. This means that they will have their trained personnel, and they will be trained, in order to accomplish this mission. They will not fail us. We are going to put the first line into the battle.

We do not have sufficient funds nor sufficient capacity in order to put the necessary funds into the DEA, the Coast Guard, the Customs and the other agencies that we have depended upon exclusively as the first line of defense against drugs.

□ 1155

It is now time to bring the military to the front. I compliment my friend, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. BENNETT], who has steadfastly stood firm in this particular matter as it has come before the House time and time again.

Mr. Chairman, I would say to the conferees and to my colleagues here today that this, if it survives the conference process, is the most important and most vital thing in this bill, and it is the one thing that is going to make the difference if we are to win our war against drugs.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the very distinguished gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HARTNETT].

Mr. HARTNETT. Mr. Chairman, I want to commend my colleague, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. BENNETT], for doing something about the one major threat we really face, as was pointed out by my immediate predecessor at this podium. This is bigger than our imbalanced budget, and it is bigger than the tax bill. It is the most important thing facing us. It is chemical warfare of the most hideous and horrible kind.

This chemical warfare is being waged against our people, not against armies in the field that are prepared to combat this threat but against the innocent minds and bodies of our young people, our older people, our innocent people.

It is time that the Congress of the United States put its money where its mouth is. We spend almost $300 billion every year to preserve our national security against a potential threat when year after year after year larger numbers of our citizens are suffering and dying from this threat to our national security, a threat worse than any nuclear warfare or any chemical warfare waged on any battlefield. It is time that we commit the resources of this country against the greatest threat to our national security, this chemical warfare of the worst and most horrible kind.

Mr. Chairman, I say to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. BENNETT] that I commend him for his tenacity, for his stick-to-it-iveness and for coming back year after year. It is time that we agreed to commit all the resources of this country, including our Armed Forces, to combat this horrible threat to our national security.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MCKINNEY], who offered this amendment to the armed services defense authorization bill initially.

Mr. MCKINNEY. Mr. Chairman, let me say to the Members of the House that, as they probably recall, I spoke in a somewhat impassioned manner on this amendment when the gentleman from Florida [Mr. BENNETT] first offered it last year. We both had had very, very personal experiences with the drug, cocaine. Therefore, I rise in strong support of this amendment which would allow the use of Defense Department personnel to assist drug enforcement officials in drug interdiction functions.

There are some amazing figures here, and let us get some of these figures down before we start discussing this. There are 25 million people in the United States who have tried cocaine. There are 5 million current users of the drug. There are approximately 1.2 million American citizens who are addicted to the drug.

There are 25 million American citizens who use marijuana regularly, and there are 550,000 or about half a million active heroin addicts. I would point out that it is estimated that 150 million tons of cocaine, 12 tons of heroin, and 30,000 to 60,000 tons of marijuana will enter the United States during 1986.

Mr. Chairman, we are willing to tax the American people to pay $292 billion in order to be prepared to defend ourselves against an evil power known as the Soviet Union, a country that would have to destroy itself to attack us. It is time we are willing to put similar might against a danger that is destroying our families every day and every night.

These animals who sell drugs to our kids are not taking any risk except that of getting rich. the State of Virginia just sold a drug kingpin's house for $4.1 million. The only thing that can happen to drug pushers is that they will probably get arrested, and then I am sure they will get a light sentence, instead of getting burned as many of them ought to be.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. HUNTER TO THE AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. BENNETT

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HUNTER to the amendment offered by Mr. BENNETT:

After the section inserted by the Bennett amendment, insert the following:

SEC. 208. USE OF ARMED FORCES FOR INTERDICTION OF NARCOTICS AT UNITED STATES BORDERS.

(a) GENERAL REQUIREMENT.—

(1) AUTHORITY TO LOCATE, PURSUE, AND SEIZE AIRCRAFT AND VESSELS.—Within 30 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the President shall deploy equipment and personnel of the Armed Forces sufficient to halt the unlawful penetration of United States borders by aircraft and vessels carrying narcotics. Such equipment and personnel shall be used to locate, pursue, and seize such vessels and aircraft and to arrest their crews. Military personnel may not make arrests of crew members of any such aircraft or vessels after crew members have departed the aircraft or vessels, unless the military personnel are in hot pursuit.

(2) RADAR COVERAGE.—Within 30 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the President shall deploy radar aircraft in sufficient numbers so that during the hours of darkness there is continuous aerial radar coverage of the southern border of the United States.

(3) PURSUIT AIRCRAFT.—The President also shall deploy sufficient numbers of rotor wing and fixed wing aircraft to pursue and seize intruding aircraft detected by the radar aircraft referred to in paragraph (2). The President shall use personnel and equipment of the United States Customs Service and the Coast Guard to assist in carrying out this paragraph.

(4) USE OF NATIONAL GUARD AND RESERVES.—In carrying out this section, the President shall use members of the National Guard and the Reserves. The tours of such members shall correspond to their training commitments and shall be considered to be within their mission. The President shall withhold Federal funding from any National Guard unit whose State commander does not cooperate with the drug interdiction program required by this Act.

(5) EXPENSES.—The expenses of carrying out this section shall be borne by the Department of Defense.

(b) 45-DAY DEADLINE.—The President shall substantially halt the unlawful penetration of United States borders by aircraft and vessels carrying narcotics within 45 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(c) REPORT.—Within 60 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the President shall report to Congress the following:

(1) The effect on military readiness of the drug interdiction program required by this section and the costs in the areas of procurement, operation and maintenance, and personnel which are necessary to restore readiness to the level existing before commencement of such program.

(2) The number of aircraft, vessels, and persons interdicted during the operation of the drug interdiction program and the number of arrests and convictions resulting from such program.

(3) Recommendations for any changes in existing law that may be necessary to more efficiently carry out this program.

(d) REQUEST FOR FUNDING.—Within 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the President shall submit to Congress a request for—

(1) the amount of funds spent as a result of the drug interdiction program required by this section; and

(2) the amount of funds needed to continue operation of the program through fiscal year 1987.

Such request shall include amounts necessary to restore the readiness of the Armed Forces to the level existing before commencement of the program.

(e) BUDGET REQUESTS.—Beginning with the budget request for fiscal year 1988 and for each fiscal year thereafter, the President shall submit in his budget for the Department of Defense a request for funds for the drug interdiction program required by this section in the form of a separate budget function.

Mr. HUNTER (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, under my reservation I would like to propound a parliamentary inquiry, if I may.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, it was my understanding that there would be 10 minutes allocated to each side on the pending amendment, after which it would be in order for the gentleman from California [Mr. HUNTER] to offer his amendment. If that were true, I had assumed that the gentleman from Florida [Mr. BENNETT] would make the closing argument on his amendment, and that I still had 3 unallocated minutes.

I was wondering if the procedure has been changed or whether I am correct in my assessment that we still have some time left, 3 minutes on my side on the Bennett amendment before we get to the Hunter amendment, or would that follow the Hunter amendment?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CARR). The Chair will state that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DICKINSON] and the gentleman from Florida [Mr. BENNETT] have reserved their time on the Bennett amendment, and that reservation stays in effect.

The gentleman from California [Mr. HUNTER] is entitled to offer his amendment at any time during the consideration of the current pending amendment, and the gentleman has sought to do so. The gentleman's time will be protected.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, I had not sought to reserve my time, but I shall do so.

Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Hunter amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the gentleman from California [Mr. HUNTER] will be recognized for 10 minutes and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] will be recognized for 10 minutes in opposition.

The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. HUNTER].

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, let me say to my colleagues that this is an amendment that is offered by himself and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. It is an amendment that complements very closely the amendment that is offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. BENNETT], an amendment that calls for use of the Armed Forces outside the United States in interdicting this terrible drug traffic.

The problem is that we have literally hundreds of aircraft and ships penetrating our borders on an annual basis and bringing in 150 tons—that is 300,000 pounds—of cocaine to our children annually.

I can give the Members my own experience from my own area of the border, which is the California-Mexican border. In the last 8 years Customs has interdicted by aerial pursuit this many aircraft bearing narcotics: Zero, not a single one.

The amendment that the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and I are offering very simply says that the President, within 30 days after the enactment of the act, shall deploy sufficient resources, radars, aircraft, et cetera, to interdict aircraft that are penetrating American borders and that the American military shall have only the right to arrest where there is hot pursuit. They cannot kick in doors in Sacramento or Alabama or anywhere else. And right now they have the right to arrest anyway if a plane comes in over 10,000 feet. Right now we have jurisdiction by altitude. North American Air Defense will interdict fast-moving aircraft that moves in at 10,000 feet, and they will arrest people, whether they are civilian, military, or whatever. They will bring those planes down. Under 10,000 feet, they say, "Well, we are going to give that jurisdiction to Customs." Customs is not up to the job.

Let me just tell the Members that this is a good package that we put together in the Committee on Armed Services calling for aerostat balloons that will cover the southern borders of the United States. The problem is that it will take at least a year to construct those balloons. I think it will take about 1½ to 2 years, so it is going to be close to 1988 or thereafter when we have them.

Mr. Chairman, this is an important amendment. If Members are interested in closing the door now on narcotics in a very reasonable way, this complements the Bennett amendment, and I will ask the Members for their support.

□ 1205

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HUNTER. I cannot yield, unless I have some time at the end, and then I will be happy to yield.

Mr. Chairman, first I yield 2 minutes to the Republican whip, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOTT].

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

I want to congratulate the gentleman from Florida [Mr. BENNETT] for his amendment and also urge the adoption of the amendment by the gentleman from California [Mr. HUNTER] to the Bennett amendment which will be supported also by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON].

It is a very narrowly drawn amendment. It is one I think we should support. It allows the use of military equipment and personnel in sufficient numbers to halt the unlawful penetration of drug traffickers across our borders. The military could locate, pursue, seize, and arrest crews of aircraft and vessels that are trafficking in drugs. The military could make arrests only along the U.S. borders.

Now, lawyers will argue that there are some constitutional problems here. Well, I am a law graduate. I served on the Judiciary Committee. I am a lawyer, but I think there have been exceptions to the posse comitatus rule. I know the history of why it was put into place.

I think there is no question that this is not an unconstitutional amendment. It is one that we should adopt, even though we will hear these legalistic arguments.

Also, there will be those who will say, well, this is not a military role that our Armed Forces should be involved in. Well, then what should they be involved in?

There was a Governor of Wisconsin a few years ago who got elected Governor by saying that the Government at the Federal level should defend the shores, deliver the mail, and stay the hell out of our lives.

Now, if this is not defending the shores, I do not know what is, with the illegal and illicit drugs that are invading our country, polluting our children, harming the economy, and undermining the social fiber of our country.

Also, I had a constituent tell me, "You guys quit talking about the war on drugs if you are not going to wage war." This is war.

Are we serious about stopping the drug traffic coming into this country? If we are, should we not make full use of our military in using their radar to locate these people, seizing and arresting these people when you catch them in the act on a vessel or an aircraft?

Mr. Chairman, we should support the amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. HUNTER] to the amendment of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. BENNETT]. Vote "yes" on the war on drugs.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire as to how much time we have left?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. HUNTER] has 5½ minutes remaining.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, we reserve the balance of our time.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to this amendment, and I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment introduced by the gentleman from California is neither frivolous nor careless. It stems from the same frustration that affects every Member in this Chamber, and indeed, the same frustration which has led the bipartisan leadership of this House to create the omnibus drug bill in the first place. But that very frustration inherent in this amendment has caused the author to look for an instant solution.

What this amendment proposes is to use the full military resources of the United States to seal our borders in one rapid operation. What the amendment seeks is to stop the flood of illicit narcotics across our borders. There is no question that such a mobilization can result in a substantially closed border for a short period of time. That is not an issue here. The issue is, that once we have used massive resources to close our borders, what relevance does that have to our overall national war on drugs, and what long-term effect will this step have in stopping the drugs?

The answer is, that in the short term, this would be a very satisfying maneuver. It would very much relieve all of our frustration to throw massive resources at one aspect of this problem, the physical aspect of interdiction, for so long as the level of effort could be sustained.

But once we had done so, what would we really have accomplished in combating illegal drugs?

Mr. Chairman, in cooperation with our distinguished colleague from Oklahoma, his Government Operations Subcommittee, and both the House and Senate Appropriations Committees, we have been working for almost 4 years to build a permanent, effective, and successful drug interdiction system for this country, one that took advantage of our military capability and linked it to our law enforcement agencies in all the jurisdictions. We know where the drugs come from, how they get in, and what it will take, day in and day out, year in and year out, to fashion an effective interdiction system, and we have been building that system. This omnibus bill could not have come at a better time to coordinate all of the actions necessary to include such an interdiction system, and to effectively link it with means to disrupt, apprehend, and prosecute the smugglers.

But the key to years of effort is that to be ultimately successful, and halt, rather than just harass, the flow of illegal drugs. We have had to create a system. At any point over the last 4 years, the President could have ordered 95 percent of what this amendment seeks to accomplish. And why hasn't he? No one in this Chamber can question his concern at stemming the flow of these drugs.

And the reason that he has not created a domestic Iron Curtain, using our military, is that it alone cannot work. And that it, in conjunction with coordinated and effective law enforcement, is not necessary.

Title II of this bill, before you today, is a logical, orderly, and balanced culmination of 4 years effort. It represents how we can build in the remaining assets needed for the military contribution to a border interdiction system which will work. It is not dramatic, and it doesn't provide short-term, instant gratification. The gentleman from California's amendment is sincere, and it comes from the heart, and it captures all of our frustration.

But it will not work. It encapsulates all of the mistakes we have tried and discarded in building a permanent interdiction system. We have found that throwing military resources at the problem by themselves results in no long-term benefit, and eventually does nothing but destroying the military readiness of the units without halting the drug flow. We have tried using dedicated E-2C's from the Atlantic and Pacific Fleets. We have tried using dedicated AWACS missions. We have tried massive coastal blockages near the exporting countries. The smugglers know that these incredibly expensive and wasteful tactics can't be sustained. So for a month or 6 weeks, they lay back or resort to smaller and more secret shipments.

In essence, we have learned that we can use some of the capabilities of some military systems and units some of the time, to profitably support law enforcement operations. But if we try to substitute the military for adequate law enforcement, then it results in two negative effects. Military readiness to perform its wartime missions immediately suffers, and what we get is very expensive and not-very-successful interdiction for a short period of time.

I share the gentleman from California's frustration, and his concern. There is no more serious problem facing our country than these illicit drugs. But I say to him that past a short time period, 1 or 2 months only, his amendment will not have an appreciable effect on the problem. And in the longer term will actually siphon off precious resources which should be applied to a balanced law enforcement effort. I urge the defeat of the amendment and the passage of title II as found in the leadership's bill.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DICKINSON].

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WHITEHURST].

Mr. WHITEHURST. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Hunter amendment. Although I support and applaud the motives of my friend from California, I believe his amendment is both unnecessary in light of improvements in drug interdiction capabilities provided in this bill and unwise from a military readiness point of view.

Briefly, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from California argues that his amendment is necessary because the civilian law enforcement agencies do not have the resources or the know-how to get the job done—namely, stop—or greatly diminish—the flow of illegal drugs into this country. Moreover, the gentleman asserts that putting military personnel in a direct interdiction, search, seizure, and arrest role would be excellent military training. Unfortunately, none of these premises is correct.

With regard to underfunding of civilian law enforcement agencies, I couldn't agree more. That's why this and other titles of the omnibus drug bill provide significant plus-ups for the Customs Service, the Coast Guard, the Drug Enforcement Agency and so on. I would submit that the gentleman's amendment is unnecessary and could be somewhat redundant given all that we propose to give the civilian drug enforcement organizations.

With regard to the know-how to get the job done, my friend from California would have you believe that civilian drug enforcement officials are bumblers—Keystone cops—in comparison to military personnel and that military personnel are in an excellent position to immediately step in and halt the drug problem. This perception couldn't be farther from reality, Mr. Chairman. First, far from being bumblers, our civilian drug agents are highly trained and capable individuals. Their perennial problem has not been incompetence, but a lack of resources—and we propose to fix that today in this bill. Second, military personnel are not trained in law enforcement procedures and are, therefore, not in a position to step into this fray immediately. Sure, an Army soldier is trained to handle a weapon and could forcibly detain and arrest a drug smuggler at gunpoint. But if he doesn't follow proper arrest procedures—procedures our military personnel currently do not know or practice—a smart drug lawyer could easily have the case thrown out of court after wasting months of the soldier's valuable time in litigation. So the bottom line is: If you want to get the military more involved, you have to give them the proper training—something the 30-day limit of this amendment would not permit.

Finally, with regard to the claim that a direct interdiction, search, seizure, and arrest role for the military would be excellent military training, I believe that the gentleman is misguided. True, pursuing a drug aircraft gets a military pilot in the cockpit and permits very limited flight training, but in no way does it provide the kind of training in maneuverability, attack, and defense techniques that our pilots need to counter the Soviet threat. You might think of it this way: Sending Mario Andretti out on a driving errand may get the job done and may give Mario some experience behind the wheel, but it certainly doesn't help him prepare for the Indy 500. And why pay for an expensive Mario Andretti when others can perform the job just as capably at a much lower cost?

In sum, Mr. Chairman, this amendment is well intentioned but bad policy. I urge my colleagues to keep the primary responsibility for drug law enforcement where it belongs—in the hands of capable, well-resourced, and experienced civilian law enforcement agencies. I ask for a no vote on this measure.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, let me join with my colleagues. The three of us, the gentleman from California [Mr. HUNTER], the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], and I all serve together on the Armed Services Committee.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Hunter amendment because it is not practical. It is not doable. We all are attempting to do the same thing, that is to halt the influx of drugs into this country.

I originally had told the gentleman from California [Mr. HUNTER] that I would support this because I favor the concept of trying to do everything within our power to keep this from happening, but the way this amendment is drafted, Mr. Chairman, you cannot do it.

This mandates, this is not discretionary, this mandates that the Secretary of Defense will do these things within 30 days, and then another section says 45 days. You cannot physically do it.

What the gentleman from Florida [Mr. BENNETT] says, and I support it now that I understand it, he says that the Attorney General may call the Secretary of Defense for whatever assistance he needs.

It also says there will be a study made by spring of next year by the administration saying what they need.

Now, this is discretionary. Everybody wants to do it. It is a good thing.

This says, and I do not know if the American people are aware of this, but there are 290,000 registered and 4,000 unregistered general aviation aircraft. This thing mandates that we have got to interdict the influx of drugs by aircraft. How do you know which ones are carrying it? You cannot do this. This is a well-intentioned, but a badly thought-through amendment. It is not discretionary. It makes no difference whether the military is in a position to do it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DICKINSON] is recognized for 1 additional minute.

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman.

As I said in my remarks on general debate yesterday, we are all working to achieve the same end. We would like to prohibit all influx of drugs into this country, but this amendment the Department of Defense says they cannot do it. It does not make it discretionary. There are not funds in here with which to pay for what is being ordered done.

Under this a sheriff in a local community could just call on the National Guard and say, "Hey, send me a helicopter. I need it pretty soon."

The Department of Defense is not in charge of anything. Our civilian agencies have a mandate, they can mandate the Department of Defense to furnish them anything they want. There is no way to pay for it. There is no control. It is a bad amendment, well-intentioned, but a bad amendment.

I would hope that Members would support the Bennett amendment, but vote against the Hunter amendment.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DANIEL. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the amendment to the omnibus drug bill offered by the distinguished gentleman from Florida [Mr. BENNETT]. As my colleagues are fully aware, Representative BENNETT has been a strong and effective leader in the fight against narcotics trafficking and drug abuse.

The Bennett amendment would allow members of the armed services to assist civilian drug law enforcement officials in drug searches, seizures, and arrests outside the land area of the United States. Strong safeguards are provided under conditions of their use. First, in order for such assistance to take place, the action would have to be certified by the Attorney General as being necessary because the law enforcement resources are insufficient to ensure success of the operation without the armed service's participation; second, military assistance must be approved by the Secretary of Defense with the concurrence of the Secretary of State, and third, Federal drug enforcement officials must maintain control over the activities and direction of any drug enforcement operation. Under the Bennett amendment, the military is specifically restricted in enforcing certain Federal civilian law enforcement statutes. Civilian control over military assistance for civilian drug enforcement operations is clearly stipulated in this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, we are all too aware of the fact that drug trafficking and drug abuse have reached epidemic proportions in this Nation and our law enforcement officials are hard pressed to deal with the situation. In April, President Reagan signed a national security decision directive stating that drug trafficking is a threat to our national security. While we have increased some forms of military assistance to civilian drug law enforcement agencies under provisions of the posse comitatus statute amendments of 1981, this assistance does not fully address the true national security threat that we face. If we are to truly wage a war against drugs, we must use all the resources that are available to our Nation to fight that war.

Military assistance to our civilian drug law enforcement agencies would be a clear sign to the traffickers that we mean business, and that we do not intend to fight a war with one hand tied behind our backs. There must be no mistaken impression about the power and resources of the enemy we face. The military assistance proposed in this amendment is a small but vital step in our Nation's efforts. Accordingly, I urge my colleagues to support the Bennett amendment.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. EDWARDS].

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to both amendments.

Mr. Chairman, this important piece of legislation has in it many provisions that will improve our efforts to halt the flow of illegal drugs into this country. Moreover, it has substantial components on education and rehabilitation, which law enforcement professionals believe are the only really effective solutions to the drug problem.

As introduced, the bill does not infringe the civil or constitutional rights of our citizens. However, several Members, seeking an opportunity to exploit the drug issue, have rushed forward with time-worn amendments that are unwarranted and constitutionally suspect. Among the most dangerous of these amendments are those that would authorize the expanded use of the military to enforce the drug laws.

Mr. Chairman, we can all understand the frustration that has led to these proposals. After 6 years of this administration's budget priorities, the military sometimes seems like the only place to look for help. Certainly, the administration hasn't put adequate resources into the law enforcement agencies responsible for drug interdiction. In fact, the combined staffing of the two agencies with primary responsibility for drug interdiction—the Customs Service and the Coast Guard—is less today than 6 years ago, and these agencies would have suffered even deeper cuts if the administration had gotten its way.

Law enforcement officials admit they are intercepting at most 5 to 15 percent of the drugs coming into this country. So it is easy to understand how some would want to place greater reliance on the military. However, is a job for which the military is neither trained nor equipped. Military personnel simply do not have the knowledge of criminal procedure. Their arrests will almost certainly be challenged in court, and prosecutions will be jeopardized.

Moreover, these proposals strike at something fundamental: the strict separation we have maintained between civilian and military authorities. These amendments would break down that separation. They would bring the military, with its awesome power and its unique mission, into the civilian law enforcement business.

Mr. Chairman, the strongest argument against the use of the military is found in the very bill before the House today. Provisions already in the bill make changes in the role of the military unnecessary. First, the bill significantly increases funding for the Coast Guard for personnel and equipment. We are finally giving the Coast Guard the resources it needs to do its job. Second, the legislation expands the Taclets program which places Tactical Law Enforcement Teams consisting of Coast Guard personnel trained in law enforcement on board Navy ships to carry out searches, seizures, and arrests. This means that the military won't need the power to arrest. Third, the bill increased the commitment of military resources to the gathering of drug-related intelligence outside the United States and providing that information to the civilian agencies so they can act upon it.

This keeps the military out of the search and seizure and arrest area and limits the military to a support role, which is the most it should play.

The amendment offered by Mr. HUNTER is absolutely unprecedented. It would authorize, apparently, use of the military in making searches, seizures and arrests within the United States. For the first time ever, the military would have a permanent, daily role in law enforcement. The amendment orders the President to deploy military equipment and personnel sufficient to halt the flow of illegal drugs. Nobody in their wildest dreams has ever expected that we could halt the flow of illegal drugs. Yet this amendment requires substantial compliance within 45 days. The cost of such a provision can only be described as astronomical. The impact on military preparedness has to be catastrophic.

The Hunter amendment is sometimes described as a "hot pursuit" amendment. But it states that the military shall "locate" vessels and aircrafts bringing illegal drugs into the country, regardless of where those vessels and aircraft are at the time. It says the military may seize such vessels and aircraft and arrest their crews, regardless of where those vessels and aircraft are found. This amendment puts the military at the front lines of law enforcement in all 50 States. It fundamentally contradicts the intention of the Framers, who didn't even contemplate a need for a standing army and believed that law enforcement should be mainly a matter of State and local responsibility.

Mr. BENNETT's amendment differs only in that it limits the military to searches, seizures and arrests outside the land area of the United States. Yet it would still allow military arrests in our harbors and on our navigable waterways.

Mr. BRYANT's amendment, to be considered next, appears to avoid the arrest problem by authorizing the military only to participate in interdiction. This limitation gives no comfort. Webster's dictionary defines the verb "interdict" as "to impede or hinder or isolate by firepower and bombing." Keep in mind this amendment applies in the United States as well as overseas. Is this what we want our Armed Forces doing in this country?

Mr. Chairman, drugs are a law enforcement problem, not a national security problem. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. ENGLISH] has documented extensively how we have failed to give our civilian agencies the resources they need to interdict illegal drugs. The military has been turned to only in desperation because the military seems to have so many resources. This bill for the first time provides those resources to the civilian agencies. It makes the involvement of the military unnecessary. This country has gotten into serious problems in the past when it has too broadly defined the concept of national security. I believe we should place our trust, and our resources, in our civilian law enforcement agencies. I urge the members to reject all of these amendments.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAY].

Mr. RAY. Mr. Chairman, I favor a strong but reasonable and common sense drug enforcement program by our local, State, and Federal officials. But I rise in opposition to the Hunter amendment.

My opposition to this amendment is not against the good intentions of my colleague, but it stems from a statute that is over 100 years old and has its roots in our U.S. Constitution. That doctrine is posse comitatus, which Mr. Edwards referred to. It is a rule which prohibits the military from taking away the powers of our States and acting as a police force in domestic matters. We only have to look into Central and Latin America governments and others around the world to see military units which are heavily involved in enforcement of citizen activities.

This is a doctrine which provides a distinct separation between the policing functions of our society and our military. Now, we might think that the idea of a military police force enforcing civic law is far-fetched. And our military is run by a civilian.

I believe that with its new beefed-up budget, the Drug Enforcement Administration will be better able to do a better job. This tight enforcement agency will make strong inroads into the serious drug problems. I also believe that with the new awareness of this problem by the American people and with the strength of this bill, we will have a potent and effective weapon against all who seek to contaminate our society and our children with drugs.

This amendment, as I see it and as the Department of Defense sees it, would damage the posse comitatus safeguard. I quote from a letter written by Under Secretary William Taft to Chairman LES ASPIN:

> This amendment would encourage reliance on military forces rather than civilian law enforcement officials in the drug interdiction effort. This would have the effect of using the defense budget to fund this activity which would act as a disincentive to proper budgeting for civilian agencies, with a parallel negative impact on the accounts that fund military readiness. Such backdoor budgeting is contrary to the best interests of drug interdiction and national defense.

For almost 10 years I was senior staff person to Senator SAM NUNN, a recognized expert on defense, when the first series of exception amendments were passed to the posse comitatus statutes. I witnessed the intense deliberations which were undertaken before the strictly defined exceptions were written into law. These exceptions already allow DOD to aid in drug enforcement efforts in many ways. For example, in the last year alone, the Defense Department provided over 10,000 hours of aerial surveillance for civilian agencies and loaned over $88 million in equipment.

The proper role for Defense is to provide aid and not to become enforcers. The Hunter amendment goes too far in this respect. The Supreme Court agrees with this position, also. In 1972, Chief Justice Burger, in writing for the Court, addressed the subject of the separation of military and civilian affairs:

> The traditional and strong resistance of Americans to any military intrusion into civilian affairs * * * has deep roots in our history and found an early expression, for example, in the third amendment's explicit prohibition against quartering soldiers in private homes without consent and in the constitutional provisions for civilian control of the military. These prohibitions * * * explain our traditional insistence on limitations on military operations in peacetime.

The overall bill in general is a good one and deserves positive attention. But this is our battle as civilians and law enforcement officials. I am going to be doing my part to get tough against drugs. I will start today with my votes to assure that D.E.A. has the funds it needs to stop drugs at the source.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 seconds to the gentlewoman from Maryland [Mrs. BENTLEY].

Mrs. BENTLEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Hunter-Robinson amendment.

The only way we are going to be able to get at this massive flow of drugs across the border is to have a massive amount of manpower down there. As has been said already on the floor, the Customs Service does not have the reservoir of people needed to do that, but the Defense Department does.

Earlier this summer I suggested to the President that he assign the reservists and the National Guard to do their training maneuvers down on the border for the very reason that has been outlined here today so that we will have the manpower necessary in order to hold down drug smuggling.

As radical as this proposal may sound, the border patrol has said an army is necessary to stop the staggering flow of illegal drugs. Why not our soldiers—already scheduled to be in the field—to defend us against a toxic invasion as deadly as any military invasion.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BRYANT].

Mr. BRYANT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in well-considered support of the Hunter-Robinson amendment today.

To those who are concerned about the implications of this amendment for civil liberties, I would make the following observation: The greatest threat to civil liberties in the United States is an exasperated public that is losing faith rapidly in our current system of civil liberties and is impatient with the insistence that many of us have for protecting that system when they experience every day in their homes the unlimited rash of crime that breaks out all across this Nation as a direct result of drugs.

Drugs are not simply a problem of usage. Drugs are a problem that translates directly into garden variety crimes in the neighborhood. In my own community, an increase of 18 percent in crime in my city last year was accompanied by a doubling in the number of drug related deaths, a doubling in the amount of drugs confiscated in our region. There is a clear statistical connection.

Mr. Chairman, I strongly urge a vote for the Hunter-Robinson amendment. Contrary to some of the things that have been said, it relates only to interdiction and law enforcement at the borders of the United States.

Ask your citizens, they will tell you, they believe already that we are using the Armed Forces for protecting our borders, because it is a simple commonsense assumption. It is a commonsense proposal that is made today by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and the gentleman from California [Mr. HUNTER].

I urge you to support it. I think nothing less than this is going to make a dramatic impact on the smuggling of drugs into the United States.

□ 1220

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from California [Mr. LEWIS].

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Chairman, in part as a response to the comments and concern about posse comitatus of the gentleman from Florida, Mr. DANTE FASCELL, I would suggest that the reason that both of these amendments are effectively before us is because the Department of Defense has used that historical issue as an excuse, often, for not cooperating with private and civilian agencies. As a matter of fact, we need to use our resources to carry out this war against drugs. We ought to send a message to DOD here and now regarding our intent in that regard.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 30 seconds.

Mr. Chairman, listening to this debate one would think that the Defense Department has not been active in support of civilian law enforcement agencies. The fact is that over the past 4 years they have spent $300 million; last year alone it was $80 million. The Defense Department is contributing its share in support of civilian law enforcement within constitutional restraints.

Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the able gentleman from New York [Mr. RANGEL] to conclude the debate for the opposition.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman I rise in opposition to the Hunter amendment. Nobody can claim more credit in fighting against this surge of drugs than the gentleman from California [Mr. HUNTER] and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. There is no question in my mind that the overwhelming number of citizens believe that the military can and should be doing more. It is the popular thing to do, just to tell the President in 30 days put them out there and stop these drugs from coming into the United States.

But what we are doing today if we allow the Hunter-Robinson amendment to pass is to hold hostage the work that has been done by this committee and by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. BENNETT]. We have already broken new ground today in allowing the military to be doing more of what they should be doing, without putting the restrictions on that are in the Duncan-Robinson amendment, which we have not had hearings on, and we really do not know whether they violate the civil liberties of individuals that are entitled to have civilians control, and not the military control.

I am just hoping that we can take a look at what Mr. BENNETT is trying to do, and to realize what the parliamentary situation that we face today is that Mr. HUNTER is attempting to perfect. If it turns out that there is something that he has overlooked, that the President cannot respond in 30 days, that we cannot get this thing moving in 45 days, then all of the good work that we have done in 1981, the passage of the Bennett amendment, all of that is wasted.

It would seem to me that we should stick with Bennett and that we should ask the gentleman to reconsider, because we have Governors from all over the country asking for the Bennett amendment. They have testified on behalf of it. I would just hate for us to move in what appears to be popular, to move in what I believe is the right direction, without having the constitutional safeguards and without having to jeopardize the work that we have done on Mr. BENNETT's amendment.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. SKEEN].

Mr. SKEEN. Mr. Chairman, I think that maybe we ought to take a little different slant on this thing, and I understand all the provisions and the exceptions and have great respect for all those, but what segment of our society today is most under attack from the use of drugs? The military. If you are going to have a war, let us have a war and use the resource that you have at your command, because if you do not do something about drugs today, you will not have the kind of people that you need to handle the assignments in the military coming up. Why not use the military to do exactly that?

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. HUNTER]. I believe the amendment is an appropriate response to the invasion of drugs that threatens our Nation's future. The Hunter amendment would truly add meaning to the rhetorical phrase we all use in this Chamber alluding to America's "war on drugs."

The Hunter amendment directs the President to use military equipment and personnel to interdict aircraft and ships which are coming into our country. As a representative of a border district, I can say firsthand that our southern frontier is open to anyone who wants to profit from the lucrative drug smuggling trade. The U.S. Customs Service does a great job for the resources they have and as ranking member of the Appropriations Subcommittee that has jurisdiction over Customs, I am happy to say that we included $68 million over the fiscal year 1986 Customs funding level. However, we need to support the Hunter amendment to supplement our border defenses.

DRUG PARAPHERNALIA

Speaking of the Customs Service, I would also like to take the opportunity to thank my good friend from Nebraska, Mr. DAUB, for introducing two of my amendments relating to the Ways and Means Committee markup of this bill.

I introduced H.R. 5282, the Antidrug Paraphernalia Act of 1986 which would amend the Tariff Act of 1930 to provide U.S. Customs officials with the authority to confiscate drug paraphernalia imported into this country. I am pleased that the Ways and Means Committee adopted my bill as an amendment to H.R. 5484. My amendment would not be difficult to implement because it would merely provide Customs agents with the legal authority to seize any paraphernalia they find during the course of their routine inspections or enforcement operations.

Included in the drug paraphernalia import ban are cocaine free base kits, any product or material that is specifically designed for planting, growing, harvesting or processing marijuana, hashish, or cocaine, and any array of other drug utensils.

TOTO

The Ways and Means Committee also adopted an amendment which would authorize $350,000 for a feasibility and application study for a low-level radar detection system for Los Alamos National Laboratory in New Mexico. There exists a huge radar gap along the 2,000-mile southern border and the Los Alamos technology looks very promising based on recent test results.

CONCLUSION

Again, let me commend my good friend, Mr. HUNTER, for introducing his timely amendment. I believe it's a good idea and if we are serious about the war on drugs, let's fight the battles with adequate resources and manpower.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire how much time I have remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. HUNTER] has 2½ minutes remaining.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DELAY].

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Chairman, I just want to say that this bill is going to cost about $4 billion, and that is peanuts. Most of that money is going to education programs and other things that we have been doing for years that are having a slight effect. But the key to the war on drugs is to get it off the streets, out of your town, out of your county, out of your State, and out of this Nation, and to stop it from coming into this Nation.

Now $4 billion is peanuts when we are spending well over $280 billion on our defense budget, while at the same time, those whom we are fighting are making billions. This is the least that we can do on this war on drugs.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Hunter-Robinson amendment. It is an amendment that will add an essential element to our war on drugs.

Make no mistake about it, we are at war. Drugs threaten to tear apart the very fabric of our system. We have a political and economic system that rests upon the productivity, understanding, and participation by its citizenry. Can we long endure while the poison of drug addiction lowers our productivity, subverts our education system, and forces so many to become society's dropouts?

This bill is filled with provisions that might be effective, but we all know the problem is immense. We've got to find a way to stop the flow. There's obviously great amounts of money to be made at the expense of everything we hold dear. This money is an overwhelming incentive to find ways to dump these poisons on our shores. Let's vote for an amendment that could prove to be the one disincentive, the one obstacle that drug runners cannot overcome. For the sake of our system, for the sake of our children—let this House agree that there is at least a limited role for the military in this war—let's start winning these battles—let's win this war.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield my remaining 2 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], a cosponsor of this amendment, to close debate.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Chairman, as a former student of criminal justice with an undergraduate and graduate major in criminal justice, as a former teacher of criminal justice, and as a practitioner in the field for over 20 years serving in such capacities as police chief, sheriff, director of a State department of public safety over the State police and National Guard, I have reviewed our total drug package, and I find it without flaw, with the exception of a lack of willingness to commit the only true resource that we have in this country in our war against drugs, our military.

I have tried to listen to some of the arguments today, and they remind me of arguments that were made against me several years ago when we had armed robberies in convenience stores in Little Rock. Armed robbers would go in and blow the clerks away.

I decided that I would put deputies in the back room with shotguns and put a sign out front, "If you enter this store, you're going to be blown away." All the ACLU types came down there and said, "Oh, it's badly thought through. You might kill someone. It's a fundamental change. Oh, my God, the military will be next."

After I did that, we did not have one single armed robbery in the convenience stores, either in those stores that were covered, or the ones not covered, because I slipped some deputies into those stores also.

I have listened to the arguments. "We should wait. Let's wait, and let 12 more tons of heroin come through, 150 more tons of cocaine this year, 60 more tons of marijuana, 200 tons of hashish."

It is just our children and our Nation. The Communists have the best thing going for them that they have ever had, drug trafficking, the most powerful weapon in the world.

For my friend, the gentleman from New York, let me quote Mayor Koch: "Give me the Army, the Navy, the Air Force," His own mayor wants the military forces. We are telling the President of the United States: "You can't think about it. You can't have a jelly bean. You shall deploy the members of the armed services." It's not up to Weinberger; the President is the Chief Executive Officer of this country. He must deploy the resources that he has to fight this terrible, terrible crime.

The CHAIRMAN. All time on the Hunter amendment, No. 17, has expired.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, I have 3 minutes remaining on the Bennett amendment, which is affected by this. Would it be appropriate for me to take that at this time?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair advises the gentleman that he may take his time now or he may reserve his time.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, I would prefer to take it at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DICKINSON] is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. ENGLISH].

Mr. ENGLISH. Mr. Chairman, I do not think that there is anyone in this body who has been more critical of the President and the Department of Defense with regard to the use of military assets, and I certainly feel a certain kinship with regard to the Hunter amendment. However, I think that there are certain facts that we should be well aware of.

What this in effect requires is that the President shall—it mandates it. For that reason I am concerned that this may in fact push the President—or give him the opportunity, depending on your outlook—for a veto.

Let me tell the Members what it does direct the President to do. The President shall use sufficient numbers so that during the times of darkness there is continual air coverage on the entire southern border of the United States. Well, those who are familiar with the AWACS and the E-2C assets of this Nation realize that whenever you consider that along with that equipment that is also in maintenance, very quickly that coverage would have to be downgraded as not being combat ready, and I am not certain that you could get the President of the United States to agree to drive our forces to the point that they are not combat ready.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Chairman, following on what the distinguished gentleman has said, everybody wants to accomplish what the framers of the amendment would like to see done, and that is the elimination of drugs coming into this country.

□ 1230

Everybody has the simplistic solution, well, turn it over to the military. They have all these people and planes and tanks and so forth, let them do it. Fine.

But in our bill, in title II, we say give us 45 days, until March, to make a study and report back what they would propose to do. That is in the bill.

The gentleman from Florida [Mr. BENNETT] gives the Attorney General the right to call in the Secretary of Defense for whatever assets he deems necessary and which the Secretary of Defense would make available.

Nobody can say that this President and this administration are not hard over the enforcement of our drug control laws, so nobody is accusing him of dragging his feet.

What I am trying to do and what the resisters to this amendment would do is say, look, let us not go off half-cocked here without knowing what we are doing.

This amendment has had no hearings. We do not know the effect of posse comitatus. The gentleman says it would allow hot pursuit. What are we going to do, allow the military to have the authority to shoot down civilian aircraft if they are not forced down?

What we are trying to do is give us an opportunity to set in a reasonable framework a way to do this. Give us the 45 days or until March 1 to make a report to see what is necessary. Do not mandate the Secretary of Defense to do anything or the President.

The Bennett amendment is good; the Hunter amendment is not workable.

Mr. Chairman, the administration opposes this bill which mandates deployment of military equipment and personnel to halt the flow of drugs by aircraft and surface vessels; mandates continuous employment of military radar surveillance aircraft; and mandates direct military forces participation in seizures and arrests.

I have three major concerns regarding the bill. First, the legislative mandate for the military to substantially halt the flow of drugs by aircraft and vessels within 45 days of enactment represents a herculean challenge. The FAA has reported that there were over 78,000 known general aviation aircraft which flew into the United States across the southern border during 1985. Further, that there are over 290,000 registered and 4,000 unregistered general aviation aircraft in the United States. Without adequate intelligence, the only way to comply with this legislative mandate would be to intercept all inbound noncommercial aircraft. The surface vessel challenge would be even more formidable. The United States has an enormous coastal border, filled with coves, inlets, and other topography which facilitate concealed entry by water. There are over 160,000 documented U.S.-registered vessels including yachts, tugs, barges, and other commercial vessels. On average, an additional 170 foreign vessels arrive at U.S. ports daily. The net result is that the legislation calls for a continous 4,000-mile naval blockade of our coastlines.

The second major concern relates to the requirement for continuous nighttime airborne radar platform surveillance around the southern U.S. border. Compliance with this mandate would require 32 E-2C aircraft be added to the Navy inventory or the use of 25 E-3 AWACS aircraft per night to sustain continuous coverage. Apart from the potential impact to military preparedness, it would be expected that drug traffickers would likely revert to ship containers for movement of the contraband.

The third major concern is associated with legislative authority for military forces to participate directly in interdiction and perform civilian arrest functions. It would be inconsistent with the history and traditions of American democracy to place military forces in police work in direct confrontation with civilians.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would ask the gentleman from Florida [Mr. BENNETT] if he wishes to use his time at this time.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time to close the debate.

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Bennett amendment to allow our vast military resources to be used in the war on drugs. Simply put, the war against drugs is as important as any this Nation has ever fought, and who better to fight a war than the U.S. military.

Last year, this same amendment passed this House by an overwhelming margin when it was offered to the Defense Authorization bill. I spoke out in support of it then because I was convinced that the abundant resources of our Nation's Armed Forces would greatly improve our ability to interdict and seize drug shipments coming into this country. I was greatly disappointed when this vital provision was watered down in a House-Senate conference to merely allow Coast Guard personnel to be assigned to Naval ships in drug smuggling areas. That was indeed a meek response to a crisis of such monumental proportions.

But, if we needed the military's involvement in the drug war then, their participation is absolutely essential today. Consider that the House Select Committee on Narcotics estimates that 12 tons of heroin will enter the United States in 1986, along with 150 tons of cocaine and 30,000 tons of marijuana. Chances are, we may never be able to do enough to stop this drug flow entirely, but we shouldn't be reluctant to try. Historically, we have not used our military to interdict drugs, but historically we have never faced a drug crisis of this magnitude. Tough times demand tough actions and that is what this amendment proposes.

As chairman of the Coast Guard Subcommittee during the years 1975–80, I placed a much greater emphasis than ever before on the Coast Guard's antidrug smuggling operations. As a result, drug seizures and arrests increased dramatically during that time. For example, the Coast Guard seized only one drug smuggling vessel in 1974, compared to 149 seized in 1980. In addition, the Coast Guard confiscated 38,501 pounds of marijuana in 1974, compared to 2,494,774 pounds in 1980. I am pleased to report that these aggressive antidrug smuggling activites by the Coast Guard are continuing.

I raise this fact to illustrate just how successful an even limited role by the U.S. military can be in the task of drug interdiction. I have to believe that if we made a full commitment, as proposed by the Bennett amendment, we would be rewarded accordingly.

The head of the U.S. Drug Enforcement Agency has said that he would need an additional 40,000 agents to effectively combat the current level of drug trafficking, at a cost of about $1 billion. Obviously, such an expenditure is not possible given the tight budget constraints that we are now working under. Yet, the military, with their vast resources, offers us the personnel and equipment that is necessary without anywhere near the cost of 40,000 new drug agents.

Consider for a moment that Ed Koch, the mayor of our Nation's largest city, is a leading and outspoken supporter of this proposal. His motives are quite simple. The drug crisis has hit nowhere in our country harder than New York City and I am proud to say that my home city has responded in tough and proper fashion. However, Mayor Koch knows, just as I do, that once the illicit drugs reach our city streets, we are waging a losing battle. We need to do more to stop the flow of drugs before they reach our borders and that is precisely what this amendment is all about.

Doesn't it seem strange that we're authorizing some $3 billion in this bill to increase the Federal Government's role in all aspects of the drug war—an ambitious and commendable effort—and yet we are leaving perhaps our greatest single resource, the U.S. military, on the sidelines? I believe that is a terrible mistake and would seriously undercut all the other good we're doing in this bill. We can and should correct that flaw by adopting the Bennett amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired on the Hunter amendment.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. HUNTER] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. BENNETT].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

Messrs. EMERSON, BLILEY, RAHALL, BATES, GUNDERSON, ANNUNZIO, McCLOSKEY, HOWARD, PERKINS, CARR, NATCHER, ORTIZ, ST GERMAIN, and Mrs. ROUKEMA changed their votes from "no" to "aye."

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would inform the Members that 1½ minutes remain in debate on the pending amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. BENNETT].

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, is the pending order of business consideration of the Bennett amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The pending order of business is the Bennett amendment, as amended.

The gentleman from Florida [Mr. BENNETT] has 1½ minutes remaining.

The gentleman from Florida [Mr. BENNETT] is recognized.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the attention that has been given and is being given to the conclusion of this.

Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the Bennett amendment was to see to it that every ship, every airplane, every materiel of the U.S. Government, which was armed, would be in a position where it could make an arrest of a drug smuggler if that were available. So if a smuggler saw a ship, he would know that he could be arrested, regardless of what other personnel they had on it besides Navy or other type of personnel. That is the real purpose of that amendment, the one which I introduced. It was very carefully couched, seeing to it that the Department of State, the Department of Justice and all these people agreed, and the Department of Defense decided it was not in any way an infringement on training or preparedness or anything like that. It is a very simple amendment.

To that there has now been added an amendment which I voted for, Mr. HUNTER's amendment, which is a much more dramatic amendment which has now passed the House. And I believe we probably should have a record vote on the thing in its final passage so that everybody will have a chance to express themselves again.

I must say, however, that my amendment as a whole overwhelmingly passed the House, 450-some-odd to a few score a year or so ago. This is a much narrower vote. I hope it will not be interpreted as in any way diminishing the part of my amendment, which still exists.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRIES

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Chairman, all of the Bennett amendment is still in this bill, as I understand it, is that correct?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. BENNETT. That is the end of my remarks.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, am I correct that the pending question is on the Bennett amendment as amended by the Hunter amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. BENNETT], as amended.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

Mr. TORRES changed his vote from "no" to "aye."

So the amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

□ 1315

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, amendment No. 18 is now in order.

Mr. BRYANT. Mr. Chairman, I have amendment No. 18 at the desk. However, in view of the passage of the preceding amendment which accomplishes all of its purposes, I decline to offer my amendment at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, amendment No. 19 is now in order.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. CRANE

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRANE: Page 43, strike out line 10 and on page 77 strike out line 12 and all that follows through line 12 on page 79.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CRANE] will be recognized for 5 minutes and a Member opposed thereto will be recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Chairman, I stand in opposition to the Crane amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. GIBBONS] will be recognized for 5 minutes in opposition to the amendment.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CRANE].

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRIES

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. Chairman, has title II been completed? Are there any further amendments to title II?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair states to the gentleman that the committee must proceed by amendment number, according to the report of the Rules Committee.

Mr. DANIEL. I thank the Chair.

Mr. ENGLISH. Mr. Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ENGLISH. Mr. Chairman, is this amendment number 19?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. ENGLISH. I thank the Chair.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Chairman, the first of my two amendments deals with the question of the Customs Forfeiture Fund. When the customs forfeiture Fund was initially created, there was some debate and some disagreement over the advisability of proceeding in this manner rather than going through standard appropriations routines and authorizations. I think that in this instance, there is no legitimate basis for either expanding the purposes for which the moneys in the customs forfeiture fund may be used, nor is there a legitimate basis for calling for a doubling of that fund.

The increased authorizations in this bill are a 45-percent increase over the previous fiscal year, to begin with. The doubling of the cap on the forfeiture fund from $10 million to $20 million, a relatively inconsequential amount of money perhaps by our standards here, but on the other hand, I do not think that is justified. I do not think it is advisable. I think the secondary point I made about the accountability as to how these moneys are going to be spent at a time when we are having difficulty maintaining appropriate oversight, why expand the authority of the Customs Office to utilize these moneys in a broader discretionary manner than exists under the current law.

Mr. Chairman, my amendment really does not do anything in the way of altering existing law. It simply says, maintain the current jurisdictions and authority under the customs forfeiture fund and maintain the current existing cap of $10 million.

One final point I would make is that the Customs Commissioner, when he appeared before our committee, did not request this increase. He did not call for this doubling of the cap in the forfeiture fund.

Second, under the appropriations control we have, only $8 million currently of the $10 million that is eligible under that cap has been appropriated. Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to support what I think is a strengthening amendment to this total bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GIBBONS] in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Chairman, because the Customs Forfeiture Fund that is currently in law would expire in 1987, the Crane amendment would, in effect, put an end to it. A number of years ago, we painfully worked out with the Office of Management and Budget and the Budget Committee and others this Customs Forfeiture Fund. The forfeitures arise in the fund when drug smuggling equipment, planes and ships, are forfeited and automobiles are forfeited. Sometimes residences are forfeited to the U.S. Government because they are involved in the handling of contraband. It is nothing new; there is a 200-year-old history of that in this country.

The forfeiture fund was put in there to make it a little more flexible and a little more possible to get things done and to get them done expeditiously.

The forfeiture fund is not a wide open fund. Every penny that is spent out of the forfeiture fund must be appropriated through the normal appropriations process. It must be included in the appropriations bill and passed. It is just a trust fund dedicated for the purpose of getting done in an expeditious manner the kind of work that must be done to take transportation equipment and convert it to Government use so that it can be used in the war on drugs.

I hope that we will not spend a lot of time on this amendment. I hope we will vote it down very rapidly.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIBBONS. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. RANGEL. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. There are so many people that ask where the money comes from and how are we going to pay for this bill. Under the forfeiture trust fund, because of the good work that Customs is doing, they managed to get the equipment to sell the equipment and to be able to do a variety of things out of this fund under the guidelines of the proper appropriation committee.

Some of the things that they are allowed to do under the legislation is to subsidize the investigative cost that leads up to the seizures. The cost of equipment for law enforcement functions. The cost of reimbursing private citizens for expenses incurred during these investigations, and the cost of publicizing the availability of awards.

This has really worked and sometimes we hear people say that "If it ain't broke, don't fix it." The fund has been viable; it pays for itself. It has the proper legislative guidelines and I do hope that we can get a vote against this amendment to repeal it.

Mr. ENGLISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIBBONS. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. ENGLISH. I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to oppose this particular amendment and commend the gentleman from Florida for opposing it.

I would also like to say that the forfeiture fund has been one that has been extremely helpful to law enforcement. It is one that is dedicated totally to law enforcement. It is money for the most part that is collected through these various operations with drug traffickers. So it seems entirely fitting that a portion of those funds that are collected be set aside and dedicated to law enforcement. I think that it makes imminently good sense, as the committee did, to raise that level up to $20 million.

Mr. GIBBONS. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, I ask for a "no" vote.

□ 1325

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will inquire, does the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GIBBONS] yield back his time?

Mr. GIBBONS. I do, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CRANE].

The amendment was rejected.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. CRANE, AS MODIFIED

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, amendment No. 20 is in order.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, but first I would make a unanimous-consent request.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the language that I presented to the desk earlier this morning, with a very minor technical correction which I have shown to the majority, be made in order. The one that is printed in the report unfortunately had a shift of about a half a million dollars in one category versus another, and I think I have explained it to the satisfaction of my distinguished colleague.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment, as modified.

The Clerk read the amendment, as modified, as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRANE, as modified: On page 80, line 10, strike "$99,300,000" and insert "$30,730,000"; on page 80, line 16, strike "$137,000,000" and insert "$95,000,000".

On page 81, after line 7, insert the following:

"(3) There are authorized to be appropriated to the Customs Service for fiscal year 1988 $27,960,000 for salaries and expenses of personnel to be used in carrying out drug enforcement activities, and $24,500,000 for additional aircraft, communications enhancements, and command, control, communications, and intelligence centers, of the air interdiction program.

"(4) There are authorized to be appropriated to the Customs Service for fiscal year 1989 $36,710,000 for salaries and expenses of personnel to be used in carrying out drug enforcement activities, and $15,000,000 for additional aircraft, communications enhancements, and command, control, communications, and intelligence centers, of the air interdiction program."

Section 301(b) of the Customs Procedural Reform and Simplification Act of 1978 (19 U.S.C. 2075(b)) is amended by renumbering paragraphs (3) through (7) as paragraphs (5) through (9).

Mr. CRANE (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, if the majority is satisfied with the explanation I made as far as the technical alteration is concerned, I would ask unanimous consent that the amendment, as modified, be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. There being no objection, the amendment is considered as read.

Is there objection to the modification?

Mr. ENGLISH. I object, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

The Clerk will report the original amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRANE: Page 80, line 10, strike out "$99,300,000" and insert "$28,730,000".

Page 80, line 16, strike out "$137,000,000" and insert "$97,000,000".

"(3) There are authorized to be appropriated to the Customs Service for fiscal year 1988 $27,460,000 for salaries and expenses of personnel to be used in carrying out drug enforcement activities, and $25,000,000 for additional aircraft, communications enhancements, and command, control, communications, and intelligence centers, of the air interdiction program.

"(4) There are authorized to be appropriated to the Customs Service for fiscal year 1989 $36,210,000 for salaries and expenses of personnel to be used in carrying out drug enforcement activities, and $15,500,000 for additional aircraft, communications enhancements, and command, control, communications, and intelligence centers, of the air interdiction program.".

Mr. ENGLISH (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the modification.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand that the gentleman withdraws his objection to the modification?

Mr. ENGLISH. I have no objection to considering the amendment, as modified, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands, then, that the gentleman withdraws his objection to the modification of the amendment as offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CRANE].

Mr. ENGLISH. I withdraw my objection, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any further objection to the modification?

Mr. MICHEL. Reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, Mr. Chairman, the Clerk was reading the corrected figures, and there was really only one short paragraph remaining to be read. I wonder if we might have that read, if there is an alteration in those figures, so that I might make the proper annotation.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will continue reading.

The Clerk continued the reading of the amendment.

Mr. CRANE (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I think that the Clerk is reading the original version as it was printed rather than the corrected one. I brought a copy up to the desk, but let me deliver a second one to the desk.

Mr. MICHEL. My request, Mr. Chairman, was that the modified amendment be read in its entirety so that we might make the proper corrections. There were only a few sentences left.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that there being no objection to the modification, the Clerk will read the modified language in toto.

The Clerk read the amendment offered by Mr. CRANE, as modified.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the distinguished minority leader, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL], has reserved the right to object.

Mr. MICHEL. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment is modified.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CRANE] is recognized for 5 minutes in support of his amendment.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Chairman, when we contrast the language of this amendment with the language in the existing bill before us, we will see that the total dollar figures are not more than $3 million over the 3-year period at variance. What my amendment basically does is to spread the moneys that we have appropriated to Customs over a 3-year period on the ground that they cannot possibly effectively utilize those funds in just a single year. And it does not just do this in an arbitrary one-third, one-third, one-third way. Most of the spread of the authorization deals with the area of acquiring additional personnel to the Customs Service, and in the area, by contrast of operations and maintenance in the air interdiction program, virtually all of the money is up front available to them in the first year where that money can be utilized effectively in a single year. Otherwise, as I said, it spreads these sums out in fiscal year 1988 and through 1989, and I think that that is dictated in terms of a responsible expenditure of money.

There is no point in having the moneys lying around idle, which must inevitably happen, because they cannot come up to speed in terms of what we are authorizing them to do in a single year.

With that, Mr. Chairman, unless there is a question, I would yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CRANE] yields back the balance of his time.

For what purpose does the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. ENGLISH] rise?

Mr. ENGLISH. I rise in opposition to the amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. ENGLISH] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ENGLISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the distinguished majority leader.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I earnestly hope that we would not adopt this Crane amendment. It reduces the amount available under the bill to the Customs Office and asks that office to do in 3 years what we have asked them to do in 1 year. It, therefore, would reduce by one-third the impact of the bill.

The Customs Office has been undermanned and underfunded. They are required right now to operate against a highly mobile and highly funded opposition in this drug culture with old World War II vintage radios in their cars. Drug czars and operatives can go into a retail store and buy a monitoring system that can track their radios and bust in on their communications and know what they are planning and what they are doing.

They need this help. We need more drug monitoring personnel for the Customs Office. We need a great many things, and I am convinced and the committee was convinced that they can use this money in the first year, and we can give them some more for the next 2 years.

The CHAIRMAN. I urge a no vote on this amendment.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGLISH. Mr. Chairman, I have a couple of statements I would like to make, and then I would be happy to yield to the gentleman.

There are a couple of points that should be underscored. Right now we do not have enough Customs personnel on line to be able to fly the aircraft the Customs Service has more than 8 hours a day 5 days a week.

□ 1335

This would allow us to go up to 16 hours, 7 days a week, as the Customs Service has requested. The Congress has provided 40 new interceptor boats, but we have no one who can man those boats.

I have talked to the Commissioner of Customs as recently as yesterday. He assured me that there is no question that they would be able to acquire all these personnel, be able to train them and put them on line within 1 year.

Also, I think it should be understood that we are talking about pulling together the resources of the United States in these command and control centers, something that we do not have today. The design contracts will be let within the next few days.

The question is whether we are going to have the money available next year so that we can move ahead, build the command and control centers and have them in operation next year.

We desperately need to get this war underway. We do not need a delay in the war on drugs for another 3 years.

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGLISH. I am happy to yield to the distinguished gentleman from Florida.

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Chairman, to show what this would do if what we plan goes through, we will add approximately 800 positions to the Customs Service. That is almost enough positions to operate 200 slots—or 150 slots 24 hours a day, 7 days a week, that Customs must operate.

Lest anyone think that Customs is a bloated overgrown agency, they should know that in 20 years the total number of people in Customs has increased by 39 warm bodies, only 39 people. Foreign trade has jumped from $50 to $700 billion in that time and the number of air passengers who must be processed has quadrupled in that time.

This is an agency that needs help and to adopt the Crane amendment would be a serious setback to what we are trying to do.

Mr. ENGLISH. I might also say, Mr. Chairman, that according to the General Accounting Office and the study and the report that they made to my subcommittee on Tuesday, we have boats today that are setting around because we do not have the personnel to put in them. That does not count those 40 new interceptors that I just mentioned.

We also find that to go up to 16 hours a day, 7 days a week, requires 650 personnel. Today the Customs Service has in their area branch only 280 personnel.

We have new interceptors that are contained within this budget that need to be brought online. We have to have those interceptors to be able to track these drug traffickers and be able to apprehend them. We only have seven interceptors today.

We find that even if we are able to detect those smugglers, unless we have those interceptors, we are not going to be able to make this apprehension.

Communications today, drug smugglers are listening in on what the law enforcement personnel are saying, the way they are shifting their forces around.

There is no question that we need secure communications. We have to be able to prevent the smugglers from listening in and knowing what the game plan is as far as the war on drugs is concerned. Today there simply is not in existence any type of secure communications.

But the bottom line it comes down to I think and the real issue that we are facing is this question: Are we going to get the war on drugs launched today? Is it going to be something that the people of this country can look forward to within the next 12 months or is it going to be stretched over the next 2, 3, and 4 years, and goodness knows how many delays we may have beyond that.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that the case has been made time and time again over the past number of hours about the importance of the war on drugs. Let us get it going today.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Chairman, could I make a unanimous-consent request that the time I relinquished on my side might be yielded to the gentleman from Oklahoma for a brief colloquy?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman may ask unanimous consent to reclaim his time.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to reclaim my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CRANE] is recognized for 3 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Chairman, very briefly, I would like to make one observation about the total funding levels in my amendment versus what is in the committee bill.

On personnel and expenses, the committee bill has $99.3 million that is authorized. In mine it is $99.4 million. There is a differential of about $4 million only there.

On operations and maintenance in the Air Interdiction Program, the committee bill has $137 million authorized and my amendment has $134.5 million.

The reason I mentioned this is the dollar figures are essentially the same. I agree with the distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma about the importance of this and that is why in terms of the spread of the moneys authorized in my amendment over a 3-year period, most of that money is up front in the first year.

My only argument is, and as the distinguished majority leader pointed out, they may be able to absorb it all. Maybe they will need more next year; but right now we do not know that and I would argue that what we are authorizing up front in this first year I do not think can be effectively utilized in their training program.

Mr. ENGLISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRANE. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. ENGLISH. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman yielding.

I would simply again stress that the Commissioner of Customs told me yesterday that they would be able to digest the personnel and the funds requested within this provision, or within the House bill, and do it within 1 year.

So the real issue we are facing is whether we are going to get the war on now or whether we are going to wait 3 years until we finally get everything in place.

I would also point out that from the standpoint of command and control, those are centers that we need now. We cannot stretch those out over 3 years.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Chairman, if I can reclaim my time just a second, that money is provided under my amendment in the first year. The command and control and communications, all of that money is up front in the first year.

The area of the spread-out is primarily in the category of acquisitions of additional personnel that will have to be trained.

I would submit that based upon past experience, you are not going to bring that army on board in the first year and be able effectively to spend all that money that first year.

We can change that next year if the Commissioner so advises us, but remember, he told us he could live with a freeze and do his job in 1985. That may have been because we are all trying to control expenditures here, but in 1986 with the modest increases provided in the authorizations for that office, they did not express their indication that they were understaffed or incapable of handling the workload.

Now we have made a 45-percent increase. My amendment does not alter that in terms of the total sum. It simply phases it in, as I say, in the addition of personnel.

Mr. ENGLISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. CRANE. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. ENGLISH. Mr. Chairman, the real key, though, in order to operate those centers, we have to have personnel. We have to have people. In order to operate the boats and the aircraft, we need people. That is where the problem is.

The CHAIRMAN. All time on this amendment has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CRANE], as modified.

The question was taken; and the chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

Messrs. COBEY, GEJDENSON, FLIPPO, and COUGHLIN changed their votes from "aye" to "no."

So the amendment, as modified, was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. WRIGHT], having assumed the chair, Mr. CARR, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 5484) to strengthen Federal efforts to encourage foreign cooperation in eradicating illicit drug crops and in halting international drug traffic, to improve enforcement of Federal drug laws and enhance interdiction of illicit drug shipments, to provide strong Federal leadership in establishing effective drug abuse prevention and education programs, to expand Federal support for drug abuse treatment and rehabilitation efforts, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

ORDER OF AMENDMENTS TO H.R. 5484

Mr. ENGLISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendments numbered 25 and 26 be reversed in their order of presentation and in the subsequent debate on H.R. 5484.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

OMNIBUS DRUG ENFORCEMENT, EDUCATION, AND CONTROL ACT OF 1986

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 541 and rule XXIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill, H.R. 5484.

□ 1404

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 5484) to strengthen Federal efforts to encourage foreign cooperation in eradicating illicit drug crops and in halting international drug traffic, to improve enforcement of federal drug laws and enhance interdiction of illicit drug shipments, to provide strong Federal leadership in establishing effective drug abuse prevention and education programs, to expand Federal support for drug abuse treatment and rehabilitation efforts, and for other purposes, with Mr. CARR in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee of the Whole rose earlier today, consideration of amendment No. 20 had been completed.

Under the rule, amendment No. 21 is in order at this time.

Is there a Member seeking recognition to offer amendment No. 21?

Under the rule, an amendment numbered 23 is in order.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. KRAMER

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KRAMER: Page 189, after line 19, insert the following:

SEC. 624. MANDATORY LIFE SENTENCE FOR CERTAIN OFFENSES.

(a) DISTRIBUTION TO PERSONS UNDER AGE 21.—Section 405(b) of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 845(b)) is amended—

(1) by inserting "in the second sentence of this subsection and" after "Except as provided"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following: "If the offense under this section consists of a distribution involving an amount of a controlled substance described in subparagraph (A), (B), (C)(i)(I), or (C)(ii) of section 401(b)(1), the convicted person, if at least 21 years of age, shall be sentenced to imprisonment for life without eligibility for parole.".

(b) DISTRIBUTION IN OR NEAR SCHOOLS.—Section 405a(b) of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 845a(b)) is amended by adding at the end the following: "If the offense under this subsection consists of a distribution involving an amount of a controlled substance described in subparagraph (A), (B), ((C)(i)(I), or (C)(ii) or of section 401(b)(1) and the convicted person has attained the age of 21 years, the term of imprisonment imposed under this subsection shall not be less than life.".

Mr. KRAMER (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KRAMER] will be recognized for 5 minutes and a Member opposed to the amendment will be recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KRAMER].

The CHAIRMAN. At the appropriate time, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] will be recognized for 5 minutes in opposition to the amendment.

The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KRAMER].

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I want to compliment the Members of the House and the bipartisan leadership that put this package together. I think it is an excellent piece of legislative work, but I do think it is failing in one regard.

Neither current law nor the judiciary provisions of this bill mandate mandatory sentencing for all of those who sell a highly addictive or deadly drug to children or teenagers, even for a second offense.

What this amendment does, simply put, is require a sentence of life imprisonment without parole for all adults who are convicted a second time of selling highly addictive or deadly drugs to young people.

As you know, drug abuse has become a monstrous problem, particularly among our young. In a recent nationwide study, nearly two-thirds of high school seniors were reported to have used illicit drugs sometime in their lives.

Other statistics indicated by the time these same seniors reached their mid-twenties, 75 to 80 percent will have tried such a drug.

What is even more alarming is the fact that nearly half of these students had first used an illicit drug prior to their entering 10th grade.

Moreover, another study done in Michigan clearly shows that this Nation's high school students and other young adults are more involved with drugs than in any other industrialized nation in the world

□ 1410

More and more it is becoming evident that not only do dangerous drugs such as cocaine and heroin and crack lead to abuse and addiction, they can kill.

In 1985, 3,000 teenagers died from factors related to drug abuse. So in short, drug abuse cannot only ruin a young person's life; it can take it.

This has got to deeply sadden all of us. Young people are the hope of our Nation, and if we lose our children to drug abuse, we lose two wonderful resources: people and hope.

So I believe that this amendment is necessary to stem the flow of those who would earn profit and prosper off of the abuse of our young people.

I do not believe that a sentence of life imprisonment without parole for those who profit in such a profane way, for a second conviction, is at all unjustified.

I would ask that we support this amendment. I believe that a prior conviction is more than sufficient warning not to commit the same crime again. It is simply too depressing to think that our Nation's schoolyards are being used as drug operations centers by certain pushers.

Schools and schoolyards are centers for growth, for learning, for understanding; not to learn about drugs. Let us make sure that those schoolyards and schools and young people are as they were originally intended. Schoolyards not tainted by scenes of drug distribution and young people whose minds are not warped by having them put behind the eight ball before they have their chance in life.

The battle against drug abuse will be a long and costly one. It is a battle we must not lose if our Nation is to remain strong. It is clear that stiffer sentencing is in need, and particularly for those dealers who prey on our youth.

This legislation is one step in the struggle. The combining it with rehabilitation and education and treatment, cooperation with drug-producing countries, strengthening our control at our borders, we can produce a united front that will put an end to this deadly threat and protect our children.

Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MCCOLLUM].

Mr. MCCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, I want to compliment the gentleman on this very tough amendment to our sentencing enhancement provisions of the bill. It is a mandatory life sentence, but it is in a place in this legislation that it needs to be if we are going to put real tough deterrence in here; and dealing with kids is a place where we have got to say no and we have got to really mean it.

I compliment the gentleman for offering the amendment, and I support the amendment.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for this support and I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I ask your attention for just 1 minute. I realize that the steamroller is moving, and we are doing some things that are very, very, very questionable.

The Kramer amendment would impose a mandatory life prison term for a second offender; a person over 18 years of age that distributes any quantity of any schedule 1 or 2 drug, any quantity, to a person under 21 years of age within 1,000 feet of a school or college.

Two 19-year-olds, one selling five amphetamines, triggers a violation of this statute. Now it is a serious offense, and we provided for a serious, in fact, fine and penalty in the bill. We have enhanced it significantly.

For a second offender, in the legislation we have before you, the term that can be imposed by a court is from 30 to 90 years; 30 to 90 years, depending upon the circumstances.

Mr. KRAMER would have the court impose a mandatory life imprisonment on a 19-year-old—mandatory; no parole.

Now I served for 10 years as a prosecutor, in the pits, trying criminal cases; and believe me when I tell you that the fastest way to get an exoneration before a jury is to have penalty that is too severe. Anybody that has tried cases in the courts, criminal cases, knows that the toughest case you can try is one where the penalty is one that is abhorrent to the jurors. They will not convict.

If you do not want them to convict, then take this path. I know everybody wants to be tough on criminals, but you hamstring the prosecution and you give the defense the best argument they could possibly have; and that is, you cannot impose a life term on this 19-year-old for selling five tablets. Come on, let us get some reason back into the system.

It is a bad amendment, Mr. Chairman. It does not mean you are weak on crime because you oppose it; it means you are trying to use some common sense.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUGHES. I will be happy to yield to my colleague, briefly.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has apparently not read the amendment as I intended it to read. It only applies to adults; those who are 21 years of age or older and who sell to those who are under 18.

Mr. HUGHES. Reclaiming my time, Mr. Chairman, the amendment says, for a second offender, by a person over 18, distributing any quantity of a schedule 1 or schedule 2 drug, except marijuana, to a person under 21 or to any person within 1,000 feet of a school or college.

That is what it says, and that is the essence of the gentleman's amendment, and I urge my colleagues to defeat the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, let me respond briefly. The amendment reads: "if at least 21 years of age." So there is no question—I do not know what the gentleman is reading from, but this amendment clearly provides that it only applies to adults over 21, not those under 21.

Second, it only applies in the case of class 1 or class 2 drugs, those that are deemed to be extraordinarily serious by previous legislation.

Third, the Judiciary amendment, as it reads, makes no change whatsoever in the law as it applies to transactions in schoolyards.

Fourth, I would say I was a prosecutor, both in the Army and in the civilian courts of El Paso County, CO; and I can tell you the juries do not know what sentences are before a conviction takes place.

I would also suggest, Mr. Chairman, that we cannot possibly, possibly suggest that we can deter crime by lessening sentences. I think that is a step in the wrong direction, and if we want a lesson from how we have improved on cracking down on DUI with stiffer sentences, I think that a fair and just sentence is life imprisonment for those who are convicted twice of the same offense dealing with our young people.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I wanted to reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Chairman, I object. The gentleman yielded back his time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct; the gentleman yielded back his time.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KRAMER].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 355, noes 54, not voting 22, as follows:

Mr. RANGEL and Mr. BOSCO changed their votes from "aye" to "no."

Messrs. JEFFORDS, LUKEN, BERMAN, and SCHUMER changed their votes from "no" to "aye."

So the amendment was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. ENGLISH

Mr. ENGLISH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ENGLISH: Page 208, line 11, strike out "$60,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$114,000,000".

Page 208, after the period in line 12 insert the following: "Of the amount appropriated under this subsection, $54,000,000 shall be used to support increased narcotics interdiction operations in the Bahamas."

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. FOWLER). Under the rule, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. ENGLISH] will be recognized for 5 minutes, and a Member opposed will be recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] will be recognized for 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. ENGLISH].

Mr. ENGLISH. Mr. Chairman, officials of the General Accounting Office 2 days ago testified before my subcommittee about drug trafficking. They told us that perhaps 80 percent of the cocaine entering the United States this year will come through the Bahamas into south Florida.

The Government of the Bahamas, in sharp contrast to the Government of Mexico, has repeatedly expressed an interest in cooperating with us to fight this avalanche of drugs. They have allowed us to operate a powerful antismuggling radar on their soil. They have invited the U.S. Air Force to operate two pursuit helicopters in the Bahamas to carry Bahamian police and American DEA agents to smuggler landing sites.

The Bahamians have even extended their consent to allow our customs agents to land in the Bahamas when in hot pursuit of drug smuggler aircraft. This is the same overflight and hot pursuit authority that the President recently begged Mexico to grant, and which they refused. Mexico is the second leading drug transshipment nation, trailing far behind the Bahamas as a source of illegal drugs for the United States.

A source of continuing wonderment to me is that our Acting Ambassador to the Bahamas has refused to accept the Bahamian's generous hot pursuit offer. I can't conceive of the rationale for that, but I intend to find out why we need it in Mexico but can afford to turn it down in the Bahamas.

Mr. Chairman, we have a number of new detection assets that will be coming on the line in the very near future down in the Southeastern part of the United States and in the Bahamas itself. And with over 80 percent of the cocaine entering this country coming up through the Windward Passage in the Bahamas into south Florida and further north along the eastern seaboard, it does not make a whole lot of sense to have detection coverage down there unless you are willing to provide the interceptors and the helicopters to allow our law enforcement officials in cooperation with the Bahamians to make arrests.

There are hundreds of islands in the Bahamian chain. We have two helicopters presently that carry law enforcement officials from the United States and the Bahamas in making arrests in the northern part of that chain.

What this amendment does is make available additional personnel as well as six high-endurance aircraft that would have tracking capability, along with six new helicopters that will allow us to scatter these forces throughout the Bahamian chain and take away this launching point, and it is a launching point, into the Southern part of the United States and into the west coast.

Mr. Chairman, this is a huge whole that is left unless we adopt this amendment. Mr. Chairman, I urge the amendment be adopted.

Last April, the commander of the Royal Bahamas Defence Force, Comdr. Leon Smith, testified before my subcommittee. He again expressed the commitment of the Bahamas to expanded cooperation in drug interdiction, but stressed that the aircraft, communications equipment, and funding for the increased operations were beyond the ability of the Bahamian Government to provide.

This is the kind of cooperation that can lead to real success in the international war on drugs. We would be foolish to let this opportunity slip away. We can show the world that everyone benefits when nations cooperate to crush drug trafficking, and that national soverignty can be honored while doing it.

Because we have been somewhat successful in diverting drug smugglers from actually landing in Florida, pressures on the Bahamas have increased tremendously in the past 3 years. Great increases in air drops and landings of smuggler aircraft there have been documented.

The current cooperative interdiction effort is called Operation BAT. It has proven the concept that powerful radar, combined with a quick reaction force, can have tremendous impact on drug traffickers, often arriving before the smugglers can even unload their aircraft.

This current modest program, for all its successes, can operate only in the northernmost islands of the long Bahamian chain because of the limited range of the helicopters and the small numbers of people in the program. These activities are frequently out of the effective range of the BAT team.

We have forced many traffickers out of its limited area of effectiveness, but we have not shut them down. As GAO told us just 2 days ago, they still operating at a tremendous level of activity.

Forty-nine million dollars of the $54 million which this amendment authorizes is for the procurement of six radar equipped pursuit aircraft and six high speed, long-range bust team helicopters. This is a one-time cost. The equipment will remain the property of the U.S. Government, and will be used for years to come. The remaining $5 million is for personnel costs.

Mr. Chairman, drug interdiction works best when it is done closest to the country of origin. By taking advantage of the willingness of the Bahamians to join us in this fight, we are taking the interdiction effort away from our immediate border and one step closer to South America. Clearly, it is more cost effective to seize cocaine by the ton overseas than to search for ounces on our streets and playgrounds.

Let me emphasize that this is not "foreign aid." We are not making a grant to a foreign nation. We are simply saying: "We desperately need your cooperation. You are willing to help us, and we are willing to pay for the help."

I urge the support of every Member for this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

□ 1445

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, first of all, I want to congratulate my colleague from Oklahoma who has done yeoman's work in this whole area of drug interdiction and intelligence gathering. We have a very serious problem in the Bahamas, and the gentleman could not be more accurate in describing the problems that we are wrestling with in that area of the country. It is a very critical area, particularly with regard to the movement of cocaine and marijuana out of South America.

I just have three concerns. I just wish we had had some time, I say to the gentleman, to have worked on this amendment together because we could perhaps have addressed some of the concerns.

One of the concerns is, as the gentleman well knows, we need operational flexibility. Even though we have major problems in the Bahamas right now which will require this kind of a commitment perhaps, 6 months from now we might have other operational problems and would have to move operations. We need that flexibility. That is one problem we have with the amendment.

Second, in light of recruitment, training, and procurement capabilities, we just may not be able in one fiscal year to actually implement this program. We are talking in terms of $54 million to support increased cooperation with narcotics interdiction operations in the Bahamas. We probably need more time in trying to implement an operation of this nature. We are talking about substantial increases in resources.

Finally, with regard to the equipment, there needs to be some discussion with DEA insofar as the specifications: The kind of equipment, radar, communication equipment that they really need; the kind of equipment that would be appropriate.

My question to the gentleman would be: Would the gentleman be amenable to providing that kind of flexibility in the context of the gentleman's amendment?

I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma for his response.

Mr. ENGLISH. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman makes some good points and certainly I think we need to provide our law enforcement flexibility whenever we can. The one insistence that I think that is critical is so long as the Bahamas is used as a main thoroughfare, either going further north up along the coast or into south Florida, I think we have got to insist that DEA concentrate in that area.

Let me say as far as special operations which take place elsewhere, I think that it makes good sense to allow those assets the opportunity to participate.

Mr. HUGHES. I can assure the gentleman, as the gentleman knows, that in fact this area of the Bahamas is a critical area, it is an area of first priority. It is an area that is essential if we are going to try to deter much of the cocaine in particular, but also marijuana coming in from South America that we do a better job. It is a priority, the only thing is we need some flexibility; operational flexibility.

Mr. ENGLISH. If the gentleman will yield further, I would certainly agree that if we see a shifting away. With 80 percent of the cocaine coming in, obviously that has to be a prime consideration at this time. If we see a shifting and a movement I have always favored in providing our law enforcement agencies, DEA and Customs, the flexibility they need.

Mr. HUGHES. Then if we in conference can in fact provide that flexibility the gentleman would support that?

Mr. ENGLISH As long as there is this insistence that so long as this heavy traffic is within the Bahamas that we do maintain these assets there recognizing that there may be periodically times in which they should be used in special operations elsewhere.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I think we have an accord, and I am prepared to agree to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. ENGLISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW].

Mr. SHAW. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to compliment the gentleman from Oklahoma for not only this amendment but his input into the total bill. I think he can take credit for the authorship for a very significant portion of the bill.

I would like to talk about the problems in the Bahamas. I was down there about a month ago, and I had not been down there for a number of years, and I had seen how the situation had deteriorated down there; how many people were involved in the drug business. The little, black speedboats that are in the harbors down there ready to make their run of just some 20 miles onto the south Florida coast.

It makes sense to go after them in the Bahamas. I think this is a wonderful amendment. We have got a tremendous problem with corruption and just geography as to the proximity of the Bahamas and how they are being used and overutilized by the drug smugglers bringing their traffic into Florida.

I certainly intend to support the amendment and I compliment the gentleman for his authorship.

Mr. ENGLISH. I thank the gentleman.

Let me say that all these assets will be retained in ownership by the U.S. Government and law enforcement officials.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Florida. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I just wanted to commend the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. ENGLISH] for this very good and very important amendment. I want to commend the gentleman from New Jersey, the chairman of the Crime Subcommittee, on which I am honored to serve, for clarifying that there is some need to make sure that the assets are used correctly and used in balance and proportion to the way they can be used by the agency.

I just wanted to say, like Mr. SHAW of Florida, the Bahamas is a special problem to us. It is a major problem in terms of narcotics trafficking. The trafficking is a problem that we need to solve. This amendment will go a long way in helping to solve that. We are getting better cooperation now than we ever did before, but we have got a long way to go and too much drugs are being run in from the Bahamas to Florida.

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUGHES. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, I just wanted to point out that this amendment does not remove assets or equipment or materiel from anywhere else in the United States in this overall effort. It is in addition to the Bahamas problem.

Mr. HUGHES. The gentleman is correct. It is a good amendment with the flexibility that I am sure that we can create in conference. I support the amendment.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUGHES. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. STARK. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, I know the gentleman is familiar with Alameda County's Targeted Urban Crime Narcotics Task Force. I wonder under section 663 if the gentleman recognizes that this is the type of program and type of area that the committee intended to encourage in section 663.

Mr. HUGHES. The gentleman is correct. It would be eligible if it is drug related.

Mr. STARK. If the gentleman is also aware that on the State's bid for the intended level of expenditures and local governments would be a prime determinant in the allocation of these funds.

In other words, would the local governments which spend the most receive the most help from this?

Mr. HUGHES. The gentleman is correct.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. ENGLISH].

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. RANGEL

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RANGEL: Page 211, line 3, strike out "50" and insert in lieu thereof "90".

Page 215, beginning in line 12, strike out "or construction projects" and insert in lieu thereof "or for construction projects other than penal and correctional institutions".

Page 223, strike out line 2 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "$660,000,000 for fiscal year 1987 and $695,000,000 for".

Mr. RANGEL (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Under the rule, the gentleman from New York [Mr. RANGEL] will be recognized for 10 minutes and a Member opposed will be recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I stand in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] will be recognized for 10 minutes to speak in opposition to the amendment.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. RANGEL].

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, we are now really getting to the real substantive area of this omnibus package.

□ 1455

The real frontline troops in this war have to be our local law enforcement officials, and certainly in the bill that was passed out of committee I do not think we give them the equipment to work with.

All that my amendment would do is to take the amendment which the resolution or the bill, H.R. 526, the one that originally went before the Judiciary Committee, and increase the moneys available to the amount that was in the original bill. That is, in 1987 $660 million will be added to what was reported out, and in 1988 $695 million will be added, and we will go along with the discretionary grants that were in the existing legislation. The only other area where we make changes is to allow the local authorities to decide where they will use the money as it relates to building prisons.

Let me tell the Members that one of the major problems that we face today is not just the lack of local policemen and district attorneys and judges, but we are facing a lack of confidence in the local and State law enforcement officials. Why is this? It is because when people see drug trafficking taking place all around them and see the sales taking place outside the courtrooms, outside the classrooms, and outside the boardrooms, and see the police looking at these sales and not making the necessary arrests and see people who are arrested returning to the streets quicker than the policemen can leave the court and come back to the streets, it means that we on the Federal level are calling it a local problem. Yet we know that none of the drugs that we are talking about, when we talk about cocaine, when we talk about crack, when we talk about opium, and when we talk about heroin, none of these drugs are being processed or grown by local or State jurisdictions.

It seems to me that if we are serious, the Federal Government is going to have to extend a hand by providing the funds that are necessary to reinforce and to back up our local policemen who are doing the best they can with limited resources. But certainly if we take a look at what they have to look forward to in the Federal Establishment, we have not increased the Drug Enforcement Administration in agents since 1974. Why, we have in the city of New York alone some 25,000 policemen who are on the front line, and when we take a look at what they have in Drug Enforcement, they have closer to 2,500 agents. We are making some 50,000 arrests in the city of New York and spending some $318 million a year in trying to have a real war against drugs. You cannot tell me that when you go to Boston, Philadelphia, Newark, Los Angeles, and all the other areas that the committee has gone into, we are going to say that we have a war against drugs and not provide the tools to our mayors, to our district attorneys, and to our judges to really do the job that is necessary. I ask you just to take a look at some of the documents that the Conference of Mayors has produced, the documents that the National District Attorneys has produced, and the documents that the governors of our great States have produced, and you see that they want to get involved in this struggle. But we cannot convince them that they have to assume the full responsibility of protecting our borders and protecting our youth and protecting our communities when we refuse to unplug what is happening in many of the systems.

We have a system in which sometimes the police do not arrest because the district attorneys have a backlog. The city of New York has 1,500. We have a situation where the judges cannot sentence because there is no place to send them. I really suspect that if we take a look at the overall battle, we will find that the real troops we are concerned with will have to be the troops back home who will do the job if we will give them the tools to work with.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANGEL. I will yield to the ranking member of the Select Committee on Narcotics, but first let me say that I do not recall when we have gone to any city in the United States, whether it was on the border or whether it was on the eastern coastline, that we did not listen to the police chiefs, to mayors, and to judges.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN] in order that he may share his experience with this body.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the amendment proposed by the distinguished chairman of the Select Committee, Mr. RANGEL, and myself to increase the amount authorized for grants to State and local law enforcement to $660 million for fiscal year 1987, and $695 million for fiscal year 1988. In addition, the amendment reduces the State matching requirement from 50 to 10 percent, and provides for non-Federal prison construction.

The bill under consideration here today was necessitated by the fact that drug trafficking and drug abuse have reached epidemic proportions in this Nation. Despite many efforts to increase our interdiction and enforcement capabilities, local enforcement personnel are being overwhelmed by drug trafficking abuse and related criminal activity. Caseloads for these crimes are so overloaded that justice is not being achieved for offenders; would many cases not being handled because of a lack of time and resources.

The House Judiciary Committee, however, has authorized only $100 million for fiscal 1987 and $200 million for fiscal 1988 for such grants. Of these amounts, 65 percent would be set aside for formula grants to States and the remaining 35 percent would be set aside for DEA to make discretionary grants to States, not only to continue support for successful enforcement efforts, but also to assist in furthering efforts in areas experiencing severe drug problems.

The amendment Chairman RANGEL and I are proposing would have to correct this situation, while preserving the discretionary amounts proposed in the bill. First, the formula grant authorization level would be restored to $625 million as proposed in the original version of H.R. 526, the State and Local Narcotics Control Assistance Act as proposed by Chairman RANGEL and myself. In drafting that bill we considered this amount to be a minimum sum that could have a significant impact on the severe problems confronting our Nation. Second, the matching funds requirement for States would be reduced from the Judiciary Committee proposed 50 percent to the 10-percent figure in H.R. 526. Third, the $35 million discretionary funds included in the omnibus drug bill would be maintained. In all, $600 million would be authorized for formula and discretionary grants for fiscal year 1987. For fiscal year 1988, the omnibus drug bill would authorize $200 million, of which $70 million would be discretionary grants. We believe this amount is insufficient to combat narcotics trafficking. Accordingly, we have proposed $695 million for fiscal year 1988; which would retain $70 million in discretionary grants of the omnibus drug bill and include $625 from our original bill.

Mr. Chairman, hearings held around the country have clearly disclosed that State and local law enforcement agencies are under tremendous pressure and in desperate need of a substantial amount of assistance. In addition, the amounts proposed in this amendment have the strong support of Governors, mayors, and State and local enforcement officials around the country. I believe that our amendment far more adequately recognizes and deals with that need. Accordingly, I urge my colleagues to give this measure their strong support.

Let us bear in mind that we cannot fight a $100 billion criminal activity of narcotics trafficking with mere words. We cannot wage a narcotics war with peashooters.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume, and I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MCGRATH].

Mr. MCGRATH. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding, and I rise in support of the amendment and also in support of the bill.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to congratulate my colleagues, both gentlemen from New York, for bringing us to the point where we are going to have a bill that is going to have some teeth in it.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. RODINO].

Mr. RODINO. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is probably the amendment that makes the most sense in this effort to fight the war against drugs.

For a long period of time local municipalities and local law enforcement agencies have been pounding at our door saying, "Give us some help. We are in need. They continue to plead with us for Federal financial resources to be able to combat this terrible plague that visits our country and our cities."

This has been established by the Select Committee and by our own committee in hearings in my own district and around the country. Regrettably, our Committee on the Judiciary voted down this amendment by a one vote margin. Unless we are genuinely interested in applying resources and helping those on the frontline fighting this problem on a day-to-day basis, we are not going to win the war on drugs. The only way we are going to be able to do it—and I do not want to reiterate what has been so eloquently stated by the chairman of the Select Committee, Mr. RANGEL, and the other gentleman from New York who is the ranking member of the Select Committee on Narcotics, Mr. GILMAN—is to support this amendment.

I received a letter yesterday from the New Jersey League of Municipalities which stated that those "men and women who are closest to the problem and who risk their lives to solve it" need our support.

Our State and local criminal justice systems now bear the brunt of this problem and they need Federal leadership, support, and funding if we expect them to effectively address it. This amendment provides that necessary help.

This amendment will, in my judgment, enable us to put a dent in this fight against drug abuse and I urge my colleagues' support.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. RANGEL] has 1 minute remaining.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES].

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 3 minutes.

□ 1505

Mr. Chairman, it is with a great deal of reluctance that I rise in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from New York. As chairman of the Select Committee on Narcotics, on which I serve, he has been at the forefront of our antidrug efforts. I chair the Subcommittee on Crime which has legislative authority for narcotics law enforcement. Our two committees have formed a team in developing the tools for effective drug law enforcements efforts.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. RANGEL] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN] have been at the head of the effort of the Select Committee. As evidenced by the work of my former colleague, Hal Sawyer of Michigan, the ranking minority Member of the 98th Congress and myself in our work on the Justice Assistance Act in the last Congress and the drug enforcement enhancement title in the bill which we are discussing today, I have been and remain a consistent advocate for Federal aid for appropriate State and local law enforcement efforts, particularly drug enforcement. I can't count the number of times that I have taken this podium to state that we in the Federal Government are bad partners to our colleagues at the State and local levels and as long as I am in Congress I will continue to encourage the Federal Government to improve its performance as an effective ally to the State.

However, in this instance I am forced to disagree with my colleague's approach in this amendment. I do so because the amendment proposes too much money, too quickly for intelligent spending, with too little contribution by the recipient units of Government, with too much incentive for the recipient units of Government to convert it from a drug fighting program to a prison construction subsidy program. Let me briefly explain how the amendment would bring about these results.

First, too much money. The amendment caps the discretionary portion of the bill as reported at the reported levels: $35 million in fiscal year 1987 and $70 million in fiscal year 1988. However, it increases the formula grants to the States from $65 million in fiscal year 1987 and $130 million in fiscal year 1988 to $625 million each year. This tenfold increase in fiscal year 1987 and half that for 1988 cannot be justified in the present Federal budget crisis, nor can it be reconciled with the careful approach to Federal aid to State and local criminal justice reflected in the ongoing Justice Assistance Act of 1984.

Second, too soon. $625 million is authorized for formula grants in fiscal year 1987, which will begin before this authorization becomes law, and long before any supplemental appropriation based on the authorization. State and local governments have not planned or budgeted for fiscal year 1987 taking these amounts into account. We would be recreating the chaotic early years of LEAA, during which large amounts (though less than this amount) of Federal money was thrown at the States with little or no guidance or limitation.

Third, too small a match. The amendment would reduce the State and local matching fund requirement from 50 to 10 percent. This would again repeat the errors of LEAA, where we found that, as a practical matter, a 10-percent match is too low to insure a real commitment to the purposes for which the money is being spent. It is, in reality, free Federal money.

Fourth, too much incentive to spend all the money on prison construction. No one in this body is more committed to helping law enforcement combat drug trafficking than the gentleman from New York. The reality is, however, that the changes proposed by this amendment, which include express authority to use the money for prison construction, will convert it into a prison construction program, with little or none of the money going directly for drug law enforcement.

State and local government will see this large amount of Federal money as a one shot windfall, not to be continued or repeated, just as one does not expect to win the Irish Sweepstates or the Maryland Lottery two times in a row. They will not start new programs, or hire permanent personnel whom they will have to fire or find new money for in a year or two. No, they will almost certainly use this money not for drug law enforcement, but for prison and jail construction. There is a real crisis in corrections, in the States as well as in the Federal system, but the question before the House is whether we find that our present priorities justify voting a $1.2 billion, 90 percent Federal subsidy for State and local prison and jail construction. That is the practical effect of this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN].

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

With all due respect, Mr. Chairman, this is truly the kitchen sink amendment. Some people have said that Congress is going to get so hot on the antidrug warpath that we are going to throw everything in including the kitchen sink. Well, this is it.

A half a billion dollars, we are just going to up it like that.

You might call it the bust-the-budget-amendment or the sink-the-Gramm-Rudman amendment. All of those things apply here.

The tragedy of it is that we have overall a good bill, but I just ask you, what in God's name are we in the House of Representatives doing telling the American people that we can accept $200 billion plus deficits every single year, when the combined situation of local and State governments is that they have a surplus of $58 billion. Now, $58 billion, we are going to take money we do not have, take over half a billion of that and give it to those who are running surpluses. I do not think you have to buy off local governments. I do not think you have to blackmail them into doing the job they ought to be doing.

We ought to set the example at the Federal level. We have not funded the DEA consistent with the request made by the administration. We have not funded the administration's Justice Department to grant us additional prosecutors. We have not funded the administration's request for marshals.

Why are those things important? If we do not take the tough criminals off the streets who are convicted of Federal crimes, they will still be on the streets and that pressure is on the State and local governments.

The best thing we can do right now to take the pressure off local and State governments is to do the job at the Federal level.

Prisons right now on the Federal level are running 42 percent above capacity and we are going to take half a million dollars that we ought to be spending for prison construction at the Federal level and send it to the States and localities when they have a surplus.

Certainly if you ask any mayor, they would like money. You might call this the "make your local mayor feel good amendment." They love us to send money, but let us be realistic. Let us not just posture. We are going to go to the Senate. We are going to have to compromise and when we compromise, we are going to have to compromise with the monies that are in the bill. That means you are not going to get your $600 million for the States. You are going to get something less, but it is going to be taken out of the hides of the FBI, DEA, prison construction and every other thing on the Federal level.

We ought to request that our local governments spend more money on the antidrug program.

Let me just give you some statistics. In New York, 4.3 percent of their law enforcement budget is used against drugs.

In Chicago nine-tenths of 1 percent.

Philadelphia, 1.3 percent.

D.C., 5.9 percent.

Dallas, 1.3 percent.

San Francisco, 2.4 percent.

St. Petersburg, FL, 2.7 percent of their total budget is being used for drugs.

It is not that they do not have the money. It is that they are not establishing the priorities.

So we are going to say that we are going to bail them out with money we do not have. It is an empty promise and what it really means is that we are going to take it away from the DEA. We are going to take it away from the FBI. We are going to take it away from Federal prison construction.

You can vote for this amendment to make yourselves feel good, but I will tell you that ultimately it is going to mean you are going to take more money away.

Mr. Chairman, I ask my colleagues to vote down this amendment.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW].

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this minute.

It is with a great deal of regret and I might even say hesitation with regard to how fast we are going through these amendments today that I stand up in opposition to this amendment. I do so with all due respect to the gentleman from New York, the sponsor of the amendment, for whom I have a tremendous regard; however, there is one fatal flaw in the amendment. Having been a mayor for three terms of the city of Fort Lauderdale, I can tell you that it is a fatal flaw.

When you send money down to State and local governments and require only a 10-percent matching fund, this guarantees that the money will not be wisely spent. It will go to new types of projects, experimental types of projects. It will be spending Federal money by the mayors of this country on projects which they are not willing to tax their own citizens for.

The States of this country, including my own, and the cities of this country, incluidng my own, are not spending enough to fight this war on drugs. For us to take our money with the large deficit we have and shovel it down to local governments is in error.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FEIGHAN].

Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the chairman of our Crime Subcommittee yielding to me.

I would like to rise in very enthusiastic support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York. This is the incorporation of legislation which the gentleman from New York [Mr. RANGEL] and others have been working on for more than a year that I think makes eminent sense.

We all are saying that we are in a war on drugs. We all say that we recognize that it is the local law enforcement officers of this Nation who are on the front lines of that war. Then let us give them the kind of resources that they need really to meet the enemy in this war.

I think this is a reasonable level of funding and it is clearly a necessary level of funding.

Mr. Chairman, I would urge adoption of the amendment.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the distinguished minority leader, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL].

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman yielding.

I simply want to compliment the gentleman for the good taste that he laid out here, and also the gentleman from California and the gentleman from Florida.

I think we have to be reasonable about what we are doing here. I thought the case that was made about the strengths of the States and local communities financialwise versus what we are faced with here at the Federal level is a very important point to make at this juncture.

I want this measure signed into law. I do not want there to be an impediment on the cost factor when it comes to the folks downtown.

I applaud the gentleman for opposing the amendment. It takes a little guts and intestinal fortitude to do that from time to time around here, particularly on such a sensitive subject; but I am going to certainly vote against the amendment.

I appreciate the gentleman yielding.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, just in closing, I strongly support the Justice Assistance Program. Former Congressman Hal Sawyer and myself in the 98th Congress wrote it, were very strongly supportive of it. The funding level of the bill, $100 million for the fiscal year 1987 and $200 million in fiscal year 1988 is all we can really assimilate.

There is permitted in this amendment prison construction. Believe me when I tell you that what is going to happen is that these moneys which were to be directed to drug enforcement are going to be siphoned off into prison construction at the State level. There is no question about it, because it will not be used for those task force operations that we want to see set up. We are increasing 15 more task forces around the country. We are setting up diversion investigative units. They are going to need local commitments, local police officers to man those teams. They are not going to have those resources. This is going to siphon it right away from those programs into prison construction, because they are the only programs that are going to be ready.

You are going to be funding States that have large surpluses and that is not what we should be doing in these fiscal times.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the majority leader, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WRIGHT], the chief sponsor of this legislation.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Rangel amendment.

The test of our seriousness is whether we are willing to provide support for those brave local forces on the front lines of this battle against a massive enemy, a slimy underground subculture that is financed to the tune of probably $130 billion this year in unreported ill-gotten gains.

For too long we have allowed those whom we charge with the responsibility of enforcing our drug laws to be underfunded, undermanned, outgunned by an enemy that is invading our streets and our schools and our homes.

There has been established ample information, documented in the Narcotics Committee hearings, that this amount provided in the Rangel amendment is needed and can be effectively used in these 15 task forces that we are creating throughout the country.

Let us not send them into battle against an armed tank with a peashooter. Let us give them the tools they need to win the war.

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the amendment by my colleague from New York, Mr. RANGEL, to increase from $100 to $600 million the funding available for Federal grants to State and local authorities to assist with drug enforcement activities.

The problem of drug abuse is not new to our Nation, but never before has it been more widespread or available to Americans regardless of age or income. The legislation we consider today, H.R. 5484, the Omnibus Drug Enforcement, Education, and Control Act of 1986, will make an important contribution to our war against drugs by providing a wide range of increased resources and broader enforcement powers to Federal agencies in the effort to apprehend and convict drug smugglers. The Rangel amendment ensures that additional funds are also provided to reduce the supply of drugs available in our schools and on our streets.

During a meeting of a Pinellas County drug task force I took part in Monday, community leaders expressed concern that not enough resources are available at the local level to fight, let alone win, the battle against drugs on our streets. Participants in the meeting, called by the Pinellas-Pasco State attorney, included the Pinellas County sheriff, superintendent of schools, county commissioners, local chiefs of police, and directors of area drug abuse treatment and prevention programs. They recounted specific examples of setbacks in their effort to curtail the local drug trade because of insufficient funding. Law enforcement officials missed the opportunity to make more arrests in drug raids because not enough officers were available to take part in an operation. Additional patrols and undercover operations are not possible without additional financial support. More addicts could be treated by drug abuse centers if greater funding was available to hire staff and counselors.

The scope and intent of the legislation before us today is good because it will improve efforts at the Federal, State, and local level to apprehend and convict drug smugglers and dealers by increasing the resources available to Federal agencies such as the Coast Guard, Customs Service, and the Drug Enforcement Administration who are on the front line at our borders in this difficult battle. It also widens the search and seizure powers of these agencies to enhance the effectiveness of their expanded operations. This legislation provides funds to hire more attorneys to prosecute drug dealers and gives the courts the authority to impose stiffer sentences on those who are convicted. And more than $1 billion is provided over the next 3 years to construct new prisons to jail these criminals.

Provisions are included to also deal with the increasing supply of narcotics being smuggled into our country. The President and other U.S. officials are required to monitor the efforts of known drug producing nations to eradicate their illicit crops. Authority is granted in this legislation for the United States to withhold foreign assistance and trade rights for any nation refusing to cooperate in this regard. It also allows greater U.S. participation with law enforcement officials in these countries during eradication programs and in the apprehension of drug traffickers.

And the legislation before us today seeks to curb the demand for drugs by providing Federal assistance to State and local governments and schools for expanded prevention and awareness programs. Additional funds are available to assist with alcohol and drug abuse treatment programs.

This is an important package of legislation and I strongly support its wide-ranging approach to combat drug abuse, including the expanded use of U.S. military equipment and personnel. But Navy ships can't help in tracking the movement of drug supplies and dealers from one block to another in our communities. AWACS and ED-2 surveillance aircraft cannot detect 10-year-old children on bicycles who are acting as couriers to transport packages of crack. In addition to the provisions already included in this bill, we need an increased emphasis on Federal support to local law enforcement programs such as that provided by the Rangel amendment. Without this type of support, we cannot possibly expect to win the drug battle at the local level.

Pinellas County task force members presented information during our meeting Monday to show that the drug problem on our Nation's streets is getting worse. And there was general agreement that crack has exacerbated this problem.

Crack is extremely dangerous because it is immediately addictive. Local authorities say that this drug causes such a high in first-time users, that the body keeps demanding more in an effort to repeat that same effect. However, that first-time high is impossible to achieve again, even when the quantity and repetition of its use is increased.

Equally troubling is the fact that crack is relatively inexpensive, costing as little at $5 to $15 per dose. This makes it available to all income brackets and age groups. There are reports that crack now is even available at elementary schools throughout our Nation.

Although the full extent of the harmful side effects of drugs such as cocaine and its derivative crack continue to be studied, it is known that they can cause death, even in well-conditioned athletes. There is general agreement that these drugs can cause severe and sometimes permanent adverse effects on the body. The health and safety of drug users clearly is jeopardized.

The health and safety of nonusers in our communities is also jeopardized. Addictive drugs such as crack force users to feed their habit regardless of the cost. Theft, robbery, and other crimes become the only alternative to provide their drug money.

Police reports document this threat to our families and neighbors. St. Petersburg historically has had a small crime problem compared to other urban areas, but in the first 6 months of this year, crime has risen dramatically, and police officials attribute it to increased drug use. During the first 6 months of this year, the number of robberies reported in St. Petersburg rose 81 percent, as compared to the first 6 months of 1985. Burglary increased 18 percent and larceny cases were up 10 percent.

The rising crime rate, like the problem of drug abuse, is not limited to St. Petersburg. Florida law enforcement officials note a major increase in crime statewide. In the first 6 months of this year, robbery rose 30 percent, breaking and entering increased 18 percent, and larceny cases were up 11.8 percent. Stolen property, which can be sold for money to purchase drugs, showed dramatic increases. The theft of motor vehicles increased 60 percent statewide, stolen construction machinery increased 41.5 percent, and stolen boats and motors rose 35 percent.

There are some who say that this legislation and the Rangel amendment will be too expensive. But the cost of this legislation will be small when compared to the devastation drug abuse causes thousands of families whose children are addicted to drugs. It will be small compared to the cost of crimes such as theft and robbery from our homes and businesses, particularly those of the elderly, who addicts prey upon to feed their expensive habits. The cost of this amendment and legislation will be small relative to the lost potential of thousands of young people who terminate their educations because of drug problems. It will be small compared to the cost of providing medical care to the countless number of individuals who will become sick or die from drugs and drug overdoses.

Drug abuse is a national problem that affects all Americans, whether or not they are drug users. The legislation we consider today is a tough response to this difficult problem. Increased drug enforcement and eradication efforts, tougher sentences for drug suppliers, and expanded drug education and prevention programs will not work unless there is a commitment by the Federal Government, as provided by the Rangel amendment, to provide greater assistance to local law enforcement officials as they battle the drug epidemic in our schools and on our streets.

Mrs. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Rangel-Gilman amendment to the historic legislation we are considering today to address the drug scourge that confronts our Nation and its citizens. I am a cosponsor of the earlier legislation which makes up the heart of this amendment and a strong proponent.

Our State and local criminal justice systems have borne a heavy burden as the drug epidemic has swept our Nation. For too long we have responded to the increases in drug-related crimes, overcrowded court systems and overcrowded jails with inadequate Federal assistance. Our cities and States need desperate help and the omnibus antidrug bill is the vehicle to provide it.

While I applaud the efforts of the various committees which have worked on this bill, and commend our law enforcement community for the tremendous work they have done to date, I am concerned that the amount of funds provided for assistance to State and local law enforcement in this bill is woefully inadequate—$100 million the first year, $200 million the second, with a 50–50 match. The Rangel-Gilman amendment substantially increases funds for the State and local criminal justice systems, to $625 million annually, and deserves our strong support.

The need for this amendment is crucial, particularly in Tennessee where we have seen a significant increase in drug trafficking. I urge my colleagues to join with me in reaffirming our committment to strengthening our resources against the war on drugs—vote for Rangel-Gilman.

Mr. FAUNTROY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of H.R. 5484, the Omnibus Drug Enforcement, Education, and Control Act of 1986.

With bipartisan support, this Chamber will bring to the American people wide-ranging, detailed and complex legislative improvements in the laws by which we must attack the ever-increasing drug crisis in American life.

This crisis, though addressed in the past years by steadfast and dedicated attention in the Congress and elsewhere in our society, has deepened. An accurate reading of the present data and symptoms indicates that in the near future, our country's security, our most important financial institutions, and the health and actual lives of a whole generation of young Americans are in peril. Never before in our country's history has our society been so imperiled.

As a member of the Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control for the past 8 years, I have joined other Members in bringing before the committees of the Congress a steady stream of hearings and briefings that have guided and shaped the writing of laws implementing interdiction on the high seas, crop substitution, asset forfeiture and many other subtle and specific remedies for the dilemma facing every segment of our American society.

Now, we are confronted by information that shows us an overwhelming concentration by certain countries in flooding this country with death-dealing narcotics. While the American public is awakening, on a large scale, to the deadly danger the escalating drug problem causes to everyone, the full scope of the peril is just beginning to be evaluated by all of us.

As a member of the House Committee on Banking, Finance, and Urban Affairs, I want to compliment our chairman, Congressman FERNAND ST GERMAIN, for his brilliant work on the ongoing threat of money laundering. I support the work of our committee in this crucial financial area, and I commend the provisions in title V of H.R. 5484 on money laundering. These provisions will make an invaluable contribution to eliminating this danger to our national security and our international monetary and banking systems.

I also want to especially applaud the provisions in title III that give the U.S. Customs Service a whole new arsenal of instruments with which they can fight the war on drugs on our borders in a new and impressive variety of ways.

New provisions in title III as well, which give new tools to the Internal Revenue Service, will also increase our strength in fighting this war.

Beyond the specific provisions of the bill, I want to speak also in support of two amendments that address needed improvements in this historic omnibus drug legislation.

As the Congressman from the District of Columbia, I receive daily reports that reflect the conditions of people who are arrested and incarcerated in the city of Washington, DC. Depending on which day, month, and often agency, the criminal justice system is flooded by drug-addicted criminal offenders that now enter the system—both local and Federal. From 60 to 80 percent of the people entering our jails are drug-involved. Whether Federal or local, there is little or no treatment or counseling available for these cases. They enter with a drug-use problem, they are reported "able to get anything they need in the underground movement while incarcerated" and they return to our communities in worse shape then when they entered. That condition speaks to the need for drug treatment within the prison. There is also another more crucial need in prison problems today—prison overcrowding. Throughout the United States numerous local and State jurisdictions are under court order for overcrowding in their prison facilities.

For those reasons, I urge my colleagues to support an amendment introduced by Congressman CHARLES RANGEL, chairman of the Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control and Congressman BENJAMIN GILMAN, ranking member of the select committee. This amendment would increase the amounts authorized in title VI for grants to States for State and local drug law enforcement efforts. I also urge support for the provision in this amendment which reduces the matching funds requirement from 50 percent to 10 percent. I share the Rangel-Gilman views expressed in their statement that it has been the failure of the Federal Government to halt the importation and interstate distribution of massive quantities of illicit cocaine, heroin, marijuana and other illegal drugs that makes it imperative that the Federal Government share the heavy responsibilities of costs of drug problems in the States and local jurisdictions. It is also the language in the Rangel-Gilman amendment which would permit formula grant funds to be used for prison construction that is one of the most needed provisions to be added to H.R. 5484.

Congressman CLAUDE PEPPER has submitted an amendment on increasing the funding for drug treatment (title IX). The Pepper amendment would increase from $100 million to $200 million a base figure for drug treatment within title IX under the provisions provided by the Committee on Energy and Commerce. There are many social signals immediately available to us as citizens through the media, as legislators through reports from hospital emergency rooms, police and emergency ambulance runs that show us how enormous is the need for treatment on both an emergency and rehabilitation basis for the drug-induced health crises. These figures tell only part of the story on the need for treatment funding, shocking as they are. Another set of figures needs more publicity—the numbers of people who ask for treatment in their drug-induced condition, and for whom there is nothing available except a list, which sometimes is a year in waiting. We must face the crisis of treatment-need all over this country that is with us today and we must responsibly project the escalating need for treatment in the near future, based upon today's statistics of users. I plead with my colleagues to support the increased treatment funding provisions in Congressman PEPPER's amendment through their "aye" votes.

The time is short; our work on the Omnibus Drug Act will be historic. The citizens of the United States are now fully participatory partners in our war on drugs. We must now vote to provide the instruments and funds to win this war.

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Rangel amendment to H.R. 5484, the Omnibus Drug Enforcement, Education and Control Act of 1986. Finally, we have acknowledged the fact that there is a drug epidemic plaguing our Nation. For many years, I, along with the chairman of the Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control, Mr. RANGEL and many other Members from poor urban areas have been trying to bring the issue of drug abuse to the forefront of this body's agenda in order that we may devise a comprehensive strategy to break the grip that drugs have on our society.

Unfortunately, it was not until the drug problem firmly entrenched itself in middle America before the country began to take notice. Not only do we find widespread drug abuse in the Bronx, Harlem, and Watts, but we find it in Grosse Point, MI; Beverly Hills; and Salt Lake City. Illegal drugs such as crack/cocaine, heroin, marijuana, acid, speed, quaaludes, PCP, and others have taken countless lives. Moreover, drugs have wrecked careers, broken homes, invaded schools, incited crime, tainted businesses, toppled heroes, corrupted policemen and politicians, bled billions of dollars from our economy and in some measure infected every corner of our public and private lives.

Your children, my children, your friends, my friends have all been affected in one way or another by the drug plague. Whether it was an overdose by a friend or relative, a victim of a drug-related crime, or the loss of abilities as a result of drug use or abuse. We have all been affected.

Mr. Chairman, this legislation before us today addresses every facet of our society's drug problem in order that we may eradicate this plague from our society. H.R. 5484 contains provisions for both the demand and supply sides of the drug problem. The Energy and Commerce Committee's portion of the bill authorizes adequate resources for a serious commitment to treatment and prevention. Unfortunately, resources authorized for State and local law enforcement efforts by the Judiciary Committee are not adequate to meet the demands of an all out war on drugs. We are willing to invest trillions to prepare for conventional war, but we have found it to be very difficult to make the same investment and commitment to the war on drugs.

Therefore, I urge my colleagues to support the Rangel amendment which would raise the authorization for State and local law enforcement efforts to adequate levels. Again, I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 5484, the Omnibus Drug Enforcement, Education and Control Act of 1986. Let our Nation say no to drugs once and for all.

Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in enthusiastic support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, the distinguished chairman of the Select Committee on Narcotics, Mr. RANGEL.

No one here today needs to be convinced of the importance of fighting drugs. We all know about their devastating effect on our society. We've all read statistics which tell us that the number of deaths from cocaine has tripled in the last 5 years. We've all seen reports indicating that over half of the crime suspects in our major cities are acting under the influence of drugs.

The link between drugs and crime is clear—and deadly. And if we are going to break that link, if we are going to fight the war on drugs effectively, we must devote resources to those on the front lines of the battle—local police and law enforcement officials.

The bill before us today doesn't pay attention to that central fact. It beefs up our efforts on every level of the battle except that which most consistently engages the enemy. Yes, we must be adding money for drug education and treatment. Yes, we must work to stamp out drugs in the countries where they are grown and to stop them from crossing our borders. But all of this doesn't necessarily make the job of a policeman busting a dealer any easier. As it stands right now, this bill provides plenty of money for our support forces, but it starves the troops on the front lines.

Let me give you an example: The sheriff of Cuyahoga County in my district is trying to control drug trafficking in 60 communities with a population of 1.5 million. But his entire budget for that anti-drug effort is only $21,000—half of his salary—and he gets no money at all from the Federal Government. With 4 months to go in 1986, he has only $1,000 remaining in that fund. One thousand dollars—the kind of money a street dealer can make in minutes. These dealers know how to evade the law, and they can afford expensive equipment to make sure they get away with their crimes.

That leaves Sheriff McFaul fighting battles against an enemy that can outgun him, outrun him, and outspend him when it has to. To meet these criminals on their own turf, the sheriff needs quality surveillance equipment like cameras and nightscopes. His men need body transmitters to keep in touch. And they need more vehicles to catch the pushers once they are spotted.

All of this costs money—money that the sheriff, and others like him across the country, just don't have access to right now. We are telling these brave and hard-working men and women that we care about the drug fight. We are telling them that we want the drug pushers off of our streets and out of our neighborhoods. But we are not giving them the funds they need to do the job right. If local enforcement officials are to have faith in our commitment to fight drugs, they need Federal aid which at least approaches their tremendous needs.

Passage of this amendment would demonstrate that commitment. Based on H.R. 526, which the gentleman from New York introduced with 140 cosponsors earlier this year, it would ensure that we devote $625 million a year to State and local drug enforcement programs. It would permit all of that funding to go directly to localities, and it would allow more jurisdictions to participate in the program by lowering the matching grant requirement from 50 percent to 10 percent.

I've talked to law enforcement leaders from my community and other communities across the country, and I am convinced that we must do more to help them in the battles they face every day and every night. Some here today may say that this amendment costs too much, that it gives too much money to our police and other law enforcement officials. But we must put that claim in perspective: First, this is the only section of the bill dealing with local law enforcement, this is all the money local police and enforcement officials will get to fight drugs. For all enforcement officials, in every city, county, and town across the country, we are asking for $625 million a year.

Yes, that is a lot of money. But as everyone agrees, we are in a war against drugs. Drugs are a direct threat to our national security. To combat this threat we are asking today for less than one day of Pentagon funding. In the time it's taken to conduct this debate the Pentagon has spent the money we are asking for in this amendment. All we want is a few hours of national defense funding to fight the enemy that is all around us—the enemy that injures our children, increases crime, and infects our future with each life it wastes.

I urge my colleagues to vote for the Rangel amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired on this amendment.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. RANGEL].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 242, noes 171, not voting 18, as follows:

The Clerk announced the following pair:

On this vote:

Mr. Stratton for, with Mr. Campbell against.

Mr. COBLE changed his vote from "aye" to "no."

Messrs. MANTON, McCURDY, DOWDY of Mississippi, JEFFORDS, DUNCAN, VOLKMER, Mrs. JOHNSON, and Mr. MILLER of California changed their votes from "no" to "aye."

So the amendment was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. ROWLAND of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the bill.

Mr. Chairman, as a cosponsor of H.R. 5484, I can attest to the fact that the House is dead serious about eliminating the drug problem—a problem which threatens the lives of our children and inflicts upon this country billions of dollars in medical and rehabilitative costs.

This is a bipartisan effort which attacks the drug problem on all fronts. In addition to the hard-hitting aspects of this legislation—strengthening the enforcement of drug laws, stemming the flow of illegal drugs into the country, increasing penalties for illegal drug activities—the bill puts strong emphasis on drug education and treatment.

I am especially pleased that through the crackdown on drug usage, this legislation will assist us in our battle against another health threat—AIDS. A provision within the bill funds educational programs relating to the risks of AIDS associated with the use of intravenous drugs. Additionally, educating the public regarding the danger of AIDS transmission from pregnant women to their unborn children is highlighted. It also calls on the CDC to cooperate with the Agency for Substance Abuse Prevention to develop educational programs related to AIDS and drug use.

I hope that the Clearinghouse on Alcohol and Drug Abuse will be sure to distribute its information to all school systems, including universities and colleges. As you know, Mr. Chairman, I have previously expressed my concern that college students may be at somewhat higher risk for drug abuse and sexually transmitted diseases and so we should devote greater efforts to educate them to the dangers that they face. This legislation would at least initiate educational programs to reach out to students.

Another aspect of this bill which is of special interest to me is the provision for reimbursement for treatment costs. While I applaud the initiation of funding for the treatment of individuals with drug problems, I believe that a much greater commitment will eventually be required if we are to successfully return these disabled individuals to full participation in our society. I would urge that the study called for in title IX, section 906, to examine the available coverage for drug treatment and to report to the Congress on meeting identified needs, reviews every Government health program to assure that all possible avenues for coverage have been investigated and determinations made on the amount of reimbursement available.

Mr. Chairman, these first steps we are taking with the passage of this bill are only the beginning of this great undertaking. Indeed, we must wager a war on drugs and anticipate a long and difficult struggle before we achieve success.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, amendment No. 25 is in order.

Does the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. ENGLISH] wish to offer amendment No. 25?

If not, under the rule, amendment No. 27 is in order.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, in light of the fact that amendment No. 27 would cut $300 million from the section to which we just added $1 billion, I have counted the votes and, therefore, I will withdraw my amendment at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California withdraws his amendment.

The rule next makes in order amendment No. 28.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. PEPPER

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PEPPER: Page 220, after line 6, insert the following:

"(5) Notwithstanding paragraph (1), the Administrator may waive the non-Federal share requirement applicable to a grant made with funds reserved under this subsection if the Administrator determines that the applicant for such grant is financially unable to satisfy such requirement.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] will be recognized for 5 minutes, and a Member opposed will be recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to oppose the gentleman's amendment. I understand the gentleman's amendment would give the Drug Enforcement Administration the authority to waive the 50-50 matching discretionary portion of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman opposed to the amendment?

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to oppose the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. In that event, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] will be recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. LEWIS] will be recognized for 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Florida [Mr. PEPPER].

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of my amendment to allow the Administrator of the Office of Justice Assistance Drug Grant Program the ability to waive the non-Federal share matching requirement of 50 percent contained in the legislation under the discretionary State and local drug enforcement grant program. The reason I propose this amendment is that I do not believe that an applicant for assistance under this provision should be precluded from obtaining vitally important resources just because of financial constraints. I completely understand the rationale that an applicant might exercise better management over the Federal dollars if they are required to match a grant dollar for dollar. Unfortunately, in my home State of Florida and many other States most of the prospective applicants cannot fiscally afford to apply for the resources made available under this program. Take for instance Dade County, where the anticipated Federal budget cuts require the county to raise $53 million next year to maintain current services, however, under State law the county's property tax authority will only permit the county to raise $12 million. Dade County would be forced to cut very valuable services in order to meet any matching requirement. To ensure that the Federal dollars go to the areas where they are most urgently needed the Administrator should not be prohibited from making grants to a drug infested area because the intended area is unable financially to satisfy the matching requirement. We must remember that our primary objective is to reduce crime and return our cities to the people. We can impose fiscal accountability in certain instances by other means.

The Judiciary Committee included a discretionary grant program at my request. I would have preferred a program with a higher funding level and with a lower matching component. However, even with these shortcomings, I firmly believe that a program of this type is a necessary complement to a nondiscretionary grant formula based primarily on population by providing the Administrator with the option of providing more resources to an area that is particularly hard hit by the drug menace.

I would like to take this time to express my sincere appreciation to Mr. RANGEL for his success at increasing the funding level for the formula grant program. There is no question that State and local law enforcement agencies in all sections of our Nation can utilize these additional revenues in their war on drugs. In my own State of Florida we experienced a 15-percent increase in crime in 1985, 64 percent of all our homicides are related to substance abuse and similarly an estimated 60 percent of all our crimes are related to narcotics. The police officers in my county are overworked. Their response time is falling and in many instances they have become report takers with little time for apprehending criminals. These funds will have a tremendous positive impact on the crime situation in south Florida.

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion I urge my colleagues to vote for my amendment especially in light of the previous vote to reduce the matching requirement under the nondiscretionary grant program to 10 percent has just been adopted. Matching requirements can have value but they can also be a mistake. Let the Administrator decide under the discretionary program if a 50-percent requirement for a given applicant would be proper.

Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] for his kindness in not opposing my amendment.

We want the maximum participation possible from all those who have the curse of this drug matter upon them; and there may be some, and no doubt are, many States which are very much beset by the drug problem that are not able to match the 50-50 requirement of the bill.

All my amendment does is to give discretion to the Administrator to waive the 50-percent requirement to the extent that he feels necessary to get the maximum participation of the local authorities in the country in fighting the drug problem.

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I am rising simply because, unless I am mistaken, in the last amendment which just passed, we reduced that local requirement to 10 percent; and I am wondering whether we really have a serious problem with local agencies not being able to afford that 10 percent.

Mr. PEPPER. It is not waived; it is 50 percent in the bill. All my amendment says is if there are those who could participate but cannot put up quite 50 percent, that the Administrator may have discretion to waive the 50 percent.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. PEPPER. I understand the discretionary part was not removed in the last amendment.

I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES].

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, in response to our colleague from California, Mr. LEWIS, the Rangel amendment was not directed, really, to changing the matching requirement under the discretionary program which the gentleman from Florida, Mr. PEPPER's amendment was directed to.

That is a 50-50 match, as part of that particular discretionary program. The gentleman's amendment would reduce that or give the Drug Enforcement Administrator the authority—he is a signoff authority—the right to waive that match in his sole discretion, as I understand.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman would not oppose the amendment because otherwise there will be many who need this help and not be able to get it.

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I rose to take the time of the opposition not because I had the intention of opposing the gentleman's position, but I wanted to clarify whether it was his intention to go beyond the last amendment; and apparently you do want to reach the discretionary——

Mr. PEPPER. Only the discretionary area.

Mr. LEWIS of California. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. PEPPER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. All time on this amendment has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. PEPPER].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, amendment No. 29 is in order.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. MC COLLUM

Mr. MCCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MCCOLLUM: Page 224, after line 13, insert the following:

Subtitle H—Miscellaneous Provisions

SEC. 671. REMOVAL OF PROHIBITION REGARDING CONVICT LABOR.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The first section of the Act entitled "An Act to provide conditions for the purchase of supplies and the making of contracts by the United States, and for other purposes", approved June 30, 1936 (41 U.S.C. 35), is amended—

(1) in subsection (d)—

(A) by striking out "and no convict labor"; and

(B) by striking out ", except that" and all that follows through "title 18, United States Code"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following:

"Any law or Executive order containing prohibitions on the use of convict labor in the manufacture, production, or furnishing of any goods purchased by the Federal Government does not apply to convict labor which satisfies the conditions of section 1761 of title 18, United States Code. This section does not apply to any contract carried out by convict labor.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall not apply to contracts entered into before the date of the enactment of this Act.

Mr. MCCOLLUM (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MCCOLLUM] will be recognized for 5 minutes, and a Member opposed thereto will be recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. At the appropriate time, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MURPHY] will be recognized for 5 minutes.

The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MCCOLLUM] for 5 minutes.

Mr. MCCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 3 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment makes a significant change in the law with regard to States. A lot of what we have been doing up until now has been dealing strictly with the Federal Government except for the grant programs we passed just a few minutes ago. The problem is, though, as we passed minimum mandatory sentences, we have overcrowding in Federal prisons, we also have overcrowding in the State prisons. Today the State prisons of this country are full of drug offenders.

My amendment is a very simple one; it allows State prison industry-made goods to be sold to the Federal Government. We have a fledgling prison industry group out there in the State prisons that simply do not have a marketplace of any quantity and size for their goods. Since 1936 we have prohibited the selling of prison-made goods to the Federal Government except under a very limited circumstance, when a contract is under $10,000. There is no restriction on their selling prison industry-made goods among themselves, to other States and State governments or within their own States. But the fact is that we have long neglected, for 50 years, revisiting the question of the marketplace for these goods.

When we have overcrowding caused by the drug questions that we are dealing with in this bill, it seems to me that it is now time that we address this long-overdue problem. We have said in our bill that we are going to build 17 new Federal prisons. We have got to do that. A good hunk of the money that is in this bill is addressed to that problem. But we have not looked at the States as we should.

Chief Justice Burger's National Task Force on Prison Industry said that we should remove this cap, this restriction on State prison industry sales to the Federal Government. That is what the bill does. If we do it, we can have responsible job training in our prisons so that we will not have such a high rate of recidivism. When we have these young people in prisons who are there for drug-related offenses, we need to give them something to do, some task, some learning, some skill.

Unfortunately, our prison industries are woefully inadequate. The only way we are ever going to get them up to speed is if we go forward with a process of allowing them to sell their products so that they can have the resources to get those skills up to speed.

By passing this amendment, we also save a lot of dollars for the taxpayers in the States. We would pay for the room and board for a lot of those State-housed drug criminals. We would free up money that could be used for other things such as education, housing, health care in the States.

Today the States of the United States spend over $7 billion a year to house State prisoners, over $7 billion a year. That is greater than $14,000 per prisoner. All of that is a load on the State taxpayers. If we would let our prison industries grow as Chief Justice Burger wanted us to do and as he suggested, we build factories within fences as this amendment would encourage, we could get to the point one of these days not too far down the road where we would have self-sufficient, at least for room and board purposes, State prisons with their industries, with products that could be made, and we would have good employment training for these prisoners who are going to go back out, for the most part, on the streets someday, needing a job, needing to join a union and needing to get involved.

Mr. Chairman, I urge adoption of this very realistic amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MURPHY] for 5 minutes.

Mr. MURPHY. I thank the chairman.

Just very briefly, I rise in opposition to what is tantamount to prison or slave labor. This is the type of labor they use in the totalitarian countries, the Soviet countries. But here in America it is abhorrent to our system.

The Small Business Council opposes this, all of the labor unions are in opposition to this, the textile industry is in opposition to this. There are enough jobs to do in the prison itself, which is usually a small city in itself, to train and keep prisoners occupied.

Having them out picking up trash on the highways is all right but not competing with the law-abiding, legitimate work interests.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTENMEIER].

Mr. KASTENMEIER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I do not quite share the views of the gentleman from Pennsylvania about convict labor.

I do think the gentleman from Florida has a good idea, and I cosponsored his bill which would make some changes in the Walsh-Healey on the limitation of convict labor with respect to Federal contracts.

But I fear I have reservations about this particular formulation, which goes a bit farther. It also suggest that the act, itself, that is the section does not apply to any contract carried out by convict labor.

We do not know what that effect is with respect to health and safety laws, with respect to time and a half or other wage provisions.

I do suggest that the Committee on Education and Labor and the Committee on the Judiciary do have hearings on this question, but I think in the context of this bill, with this language we ought not to approve it.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. RANGEL].

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, I really do not think we should support this amendment. Mr. Chairman, I advocate a "no" vote. This is hardly the place or the bill in which someone should be dealing with prison reform or prison rehabilitation. I think this matter should properly be discussed by the Committee, but just because we have an omnibus bill I do not think we should be creative enough to get programs that will be actually competing against small business people.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time and ask for a "no" vote.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DELAY]

Mr. DELAY. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I deeply respect the gentleman from Florida, but I must point out that this would be devastating to the small-business man who deals with the Federal Government, who would be competing with slave labor coming from the prison systems, and I would be for the amendment if you added in all the costs of keeping these inmates in the prisons to the price of the goods. But I just think that this well-intentioned amendment is very misguided, and I urge my colleagues to vote "no" on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MURPHY] has 1½ minutes remaining and the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MCCOLLUM] has 2 minutes remaining.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor, the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS].

Mr. HAWKINS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, there is no question that an effective prison rehabilitation program should include job training and work experience. However, this amendment has ramifications far beyond the rehabilitation of prison inmates.

The amendment is to the Walsh-Healey Act which is under the jurisdiction of the Committees on Education and Labor and the Judiciary. The use of convict labor in Federal contract work has not been addressed recently by the Committee on Education and Labor nor, to my knowledge, by the Committee on the Judiciary. Thus, the House is being presented with a far-reaching proposal without the benefit of consultation with or information from the committees having jurisdiction over the act to be amended. Moreover, I am not aware that any assessment has been made to determine the likely benefit or potential harm of this proposal.

The amendment removes the prohibition on the use of convict labor in the performance of Federal supply contracts without any wage-rate requirements; overtime compensation requirements, or any other worker protections. We are being asked to make an informed judgment about a proposal that could have a ruinous effect on local economies and the living standards of American workers. We must ask ourselves to what extent will the regular work force be displaced by prison inmates? How do we explain that to 8 million unemployed, and an estimated 5 million underemployed and discouraged job seekers? Will this be another roadblock to employment opportunity for minorities who have a chronic unemployment rate in the high teens? Isn't this counterproductive to Federal job training programs? To what extent will living standards be undermined by the absence of a specific wage-rate requirement? Without the answers to these very basic questions, we should not embark on a program, however laudable its goals, if it has the result of exacerbating our serious unemployment problems and pushing more workers onto the welfare rolls.

I urge defeat of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. MCCOLLUM] has 2 minutes remaining.

Mr. MCCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. CHANDLER].

Mr. CHANDLER. I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment. In my home State of Washington we have a very successful prison industry and this has not brought on the baleful results predicted by some of my colleagues.

Indeed, it improves the quality of rehabilitation, giving prisoners useful skills for a life of recovery from crime. Without these programs, the only skills most prisoners leave the penitentiary with are ones that will make them more effective criminals.

The amendment made by the gentleman from Florida also helps lessen the terrible financial pressures faced by our prisons. It is fiscally responsible that our prisons be more self-supporting.

The $10,000 cap on the current law is archaic. It was passed back in 1936. Drug-related crime has radically changed the problems faced by our prisons today, and a half-century-old statute is no way to deal with them.

Mr. MCCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. MCCOLLUM. I thank the Chairman.

At this point in time I think it is appropriate to point out, as the gentleman from Washington did, that there are a few fairly viable, young, thriving prison industries in this country, including Washington State's, Minnesota's, Kansas', Florida's, and a few others. But they do not have a marketplace for their goods. It is ridiculous what we have done to hamper them with age-old, antiquated ideas about how somehow there is going to be harm to business or labor out of letting prisoners do constructive work, produce a profit for the prison system, allow the taxpayers of the States to save money by doing that and give job training to the prisoners who are in those prisons. That is what it is all about. We here in this bill are trying to do something to alleviate the cost burden on our Federal and State governments to take care of drug-related criminals. We have drug-related criminals. We need to do what we can to rehabilitate them. We need to do what we can to save the taxpayers money. That money would be much better spent on education, health, a lot of other things.

Please vote for the McCollum amendment allowing prison industries to grow and do what Chief Justice Burger's task force is recommending after a lot of study over all of the issues that some of the critics say have not been studied; they have looked at it, they have said they know what they are.

Vote "yes" on the McCollum amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. On this amendment, all time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MCCOLLUM].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. MCCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 72, noes 339, not voting 20, as follows:

Messrs. MOLINARI, THOMAS of California, LAGOMARSINO, TRAFICANT, LEWIS of Florida, STRANG, and DARDEN changed their votes from "aye" to "no."

Mr. BOULTER changed his vote from "no" to "aye."

So the amendment was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, amendment No. 30 is in order.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. LUNGREN

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LUNGREN: Page 224, after line 13, insert the following:

Subtitle H—Miscellaneous Provisions

SEC. 671. REFORM OF FOURTH AMENDMENT EXCLUSIONARY RULE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 223 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"§ 3508. Limitation of the fourth amendment exclusionary rule

"Except as specifically provided by Act of Congress, evidence which is obtained as a result of a search or seizure and which is otherwise admissible shall not be excluded in a proceeding in a court of the United States if the search or seizure was undertaken in a reasonable, good faith belief that it was in conformity with the fourth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. A showing that evidence was obtained pursuant to and within the scope of a warrant constitutes prima facie evidence of such a reasonable good faith belief, unless the warrant was obtained through intentional and material misrepresentation.".

(b) TECHNICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by adding at the end the following item:

"3508. Limitation of the fourth amendment exclusionary rule.".

Mr. LUNGREN (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN] will be recognized for 15 minutes and a Member opposed will be recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey will be recognized for 15 minutes to speak in opposition to the amendment.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN].

□ 1625

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume, but not to exceed 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, let me say to my colleagues that this is one of the so-called controversial amendments, one of the so-called controversial amendments that we will have to vote on today. I happen to think that it goes to the very guts of the issue. It goes to the question of whether or not we are going to be serious about our efforts to deal with the drug problem in this country. It goes to the question of the so-called exclusionary rule.

Mr. Chairman, the exclusionary rule goes to an evidentiary ruling which basically says that in criminal cases, although you have evidence which is probative and which goes to the question which is relevant to the question of the guilt or innocence of an individual, that evidence will not be allowed in the courtroom to be considered by the jury because one of the police officers in gathering that evidence did not follow the prescriptions as set down by the Supreme Court. In other words, because of an error by the police officer we will not allow the evidence to be presented.

Judge Cardozo said what it amounts to is that the criminal is to go free because the constable has blundered. It is very difficult to try to explain to someone who has been a victim of a crime and it is very difficult to explain to the public that because a police officer has made an error in gathering the evidence, he is not punished but society is punished and the individual who is the victim of the crime is punished by virture of the fact that the person who otherwise would have been proven guilty is allowed to go free.

There has been movement on this issue over the past number of years. The Supreme Court, recognizing that it had gone too far and recognizing that some of the rulings do not, in fact, create a deterrence for improper police action, has decided that a good-faith exception ought to be made in a warrant case.

Where a police officer makes an error in good faith in bringing a warrant before a judicial officer or in executing that warrant, the Supreme Court has said that "In those cases, if it is a good-faith error, it serves no deterrent purpose for us to deny that evidence to go forward." They did not address the question of a good-faith exception in a case where a warrant is not required or thought not to be required.

This amendment says that an exception to the exclusionary rule on the Federal level will lie where there is a good-faith action by the police officer involved.

Now, someone may ask, if that goes to the question of all crimes, why would we have it in this bill? The only substantive study of which I am aware is a study of California cases done in the last decade in which they discovered that 30 percent of all felony drug cases were not brought for prosecution, not because they did not believe the person was guilty, not because they did not believe they had evidence, but because in some way the evidence was tainted. Thirty percent of all the felony drug cases in the largest State in the Union were tossed out, not even prosecuted, because of the problem of the exclusionary rule and other problems.

We do not in this amendment in any way allow an officer who intentionally creates a ruse, who intentionally violates the constitutional protections, to go forward and have the evidence brought forward. This amendment only says that when a police officer, following what he thinks is the law and based on his training—and there is an objective as a subjective standard involved—makes an error, we will not penalize the public and we will not penalize the victim for his doing so.

Let me just give an example of how this plays in real life. In hundreds of appellate court decisions we have sometimes confusing and contradictory information and instructions given to the police. Precisely that type of problem arose in Robbins versus California in 1981. In Robbins the court excluded evidence of a substantial quantity of marijuana found in a car trunk in a decision that was largely based on two cases: The Chadwick case of 1979 and Arkansas versus Sanders in 1979, neither one of which had been decided at the time the officers were making the arrest. So they went back and they said to the officers, "Even though you followed the law as you thought it to be at that time, we had some decisions under consideration which we later made, and because you didn't follow what we later decided, the evidence of the substantial amount of marijuana cannot be brought forward."

The Robbins decision overruled previous decisions of the trial and appellate courts in California that the search was valid. In other words, they were following what they thought the law to be. Even if the police officers read the law books and followed the law, they were found later to be in error.

When finally decided, 14 judges had reviewed the search, 7 had found it valid and 7 had found it invalid. To add to the confusion, less than 3 months after they had decided the Robbins case, the Supreme Court granted certiorari in the case of United States versus Ross and asked both sides to address the question as to whether Robbins should be reconsidered.

So you are a police officer out there, you are trying to follow the law, and you have found somebody who is dirty, you have found somebody with a large amount of drugs. You have followed the law as you thought it to be and as the courts would tell you it is at that time, and despite that fact, the evidence is thrown out and the drug-pusher and the drug trafficker goes free.

The CHAIRMAN. The 5 minutes of the gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN] has expired.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 additional minute.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment merely says that when the officer in good faith has followed what he thought he should do—and that is based not only on being a reasonable man but also having a reasonable standard of training—that society ought not be be punished and the victim ought not to be punished.

I would say that this is a gut check amendment. If you are serious about doing something about drugs, this covers almost 30 percent of the serious drug cases, according to the only study done. If you are serious about getting the evidence before the jury in a case where the police officer would not be deterred by the exclusionary rule because he did not intentionally violate the rules and prescriptions of the court, I would think that you would vote "aye". I would think that you would seriously think that this is one of the things we have to do, to make a fundamental change in the court system. We can make all the changes in the police and the investigators, and so forth, but if we do not make fundamental changes in the court system, it is all for naught.

Mr. Chairman, I ask for an "aye" vote on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES].

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Chairman, just at the outset I rise to inform my colleagues that I support a good faith exception to the exclusionary rule. However, the amendment, as proposed by our colleague, the gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN], would suggest a subjective standard, not the objective standard which I think is important as a part of any good faith exception to the exclusionary rule.

In fact, when Stephen Trott, the Assistant Attorney General, was before the other body back in October, the Attorney General in fact recommended that this particular provision be modified so that in fact we would use the standard set forth in the United States versus Leon, the 1984 case which used the standard, "reasonable reliance on the part of the police officer."

I do not think it would make sense for us to permit a police officer just to say that he acted in good faith and take that as the standard in fact in deciding whether to hold in evidence that which might have been illegally seized.

So, Mr. Chairman, while I support the concept of a good faith exception, I think that this particular amendment is fatally flawed. I worry over the standard that is used because it does not use the standard the Justice Department recommends and as set forth by the Supreme Court in its decision in United States versus Leon.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] has expired.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. RODINO].

Mr. RODINO. Mr. Chairman, today we have been fighting a war against drugs, and now it seems to me that the attack is on the Constitution of the United States. The gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN], who offered the amendment, cited the fact that there is an exclusionary rule, that this was adopted by the Supreme Court, and that it recognized that this was the way to protect the rights of individuals under the fourth amendment.

The gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN], who offered this amendment, incidentally cited a figure of 30 percent, which I have questioned since looking at an American Bar Foundation News Report of March 16, 1984.

That report states that a study it commissioned found that "the exclusionary rule only rarely causes the loss of arrests for violent crime." It further stated that the study also shows that "the same statewide California data used by NIJ indicate that prosecutors only drop 2.4 percent of felony drug arrests because of illegal searches, not 30 percent, but NIJ failed to report the lower figure." The report concludes that the study indicates that "NIJ's 30-percent figure, which is based on an examination of less than 300 cases from Los Angeles only, is a result of faulty research methods."

□ 1635

Now, I do not think we want to adopt an amendment on figures that are based on faulty research methods, nor do I think we want cavalierly to amend the Constitution on the floor of the House without going through the normal legislative process.

The fourth amendment provides that "the right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated * * *." The Supreme Court, in 1914, adopted the exclusionary rule for Federal criminal trials and required Federal courts to exclude any evidence obtained in violation of the fourth amendment. [Weeks v. U.S., 232 U.S. 383]. The Supreme Court later extended the exclusionary rule to State courts in Mapp v. Ohio [367 U.S. 343 (1961)]. The proposed amendment, which would provide a "good faith" exception to the exclusionary rule, is unconstitutional and unwise.

The Constitution, as the Supreme Court cases indicate, requires exclusion of evidence seized in violation of the fourth amendment. A constitutional requirement can be modified only by amending the Constitution, not by amending a statute.

Changing the exclusionary rule, moreover, would be unwise. The rule has had a beneficial impact upon law enforcement, improving law enforcement methods and techniques, as law enforcement groups have testified. This benefit has been obtained without greatly affecting the disposition of cases. The huge percentage of Federal criminal cases settled by guilty pleas and convictions is proof positive that the exclusionary rule has not unduly hampered Federal law enforcement agencies or Federal courts.

It is sometimes charged that the rule lets criminals free on "Technicalities." This allegation is not borne out by the data we have available. A survey by the Institute for Law and Social Research, for example, found that fewer than 1 percent of all arrests were "refused by the prosecutor with an indication that the police failed to protect the arrestee's right to due process."

The American Bar Association has carefully studied the exclusionary rule and the desirability of modifying it. It has concluded that the rule should not be changed. As its spokesman has stated, "congressional changes in the rule will undercut law enforcement professionalism, engender decades of litigation over various new tests, and result in very few additional criminals ending up behind bars."

People who attack the exclusionary rule are really attacking the Constitution. As Senator Robert Wagner pointed out in 1938 at a New York State constitutional convention:

> All the arguments [that the exclusionary rule will handicap law enforcement] seem to me to be properly directed not against the exclusionary rule but against the substantive guarantee itself. * * * It is the [law of search and seizure], not the sanction, which imposes limits on the operation of the police. If the rule is obeyed as it should be, and as we declare it should be, there will be no illegally obtained evidence to be excluded by the operation of the sanction.

Furthermore, I would like to state that this is not the appropriate vehicle to modify the exclusionary rule. The purpose of this bill is limited to enhancing our antidrug efforts. I would point out to the Members that this amendment modifies the exclusionary rule with respect to all criminal cases.

I believe that it is unwise for the House to make such a major change in our criminal law procedures which will have far-reaching impact in the context of a bill whose legislative purposes are limited to drug-related offenses.

In summary, modification of the exclusionary rule is bad law, and is being attempted here in the wrong situation. I urge the defeat of the amendment.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTENMEIER].

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Chairman, I thank my colleague, the gentleman from New Jersey, for yielding this time. I perhaps will not use the 4 minutes, but I do have to express my concern.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN] to create an alleged good faith exception to the exclusionary rule. What is at stake in this amendment is whether we, as people, continue to believe in the fundamental protections of the Bill of Rights. As Justice Brennan put it:

> * * * the task of combatting crime and convicting the guilty in every era seem of such critical and pressing concern that we may be lured by the temptations of expediency into foresaking our commitment to protecting individual privacy and liberty.

It was for those very reasons that the Framers crafted the antimajoritarian restrictions on Government conduct found in the Bill of Rights. One of the bulwarks of our freedoms is the right to be free from unreasonable searches and seizures. Thus, fourth amendment protection has since at least 1914 meant that illegally seized evidence could not be admitted to trial in Federal court. This exclusion of relevant evidence serves several central purposes. Most importantly, it bars the independent judiciary from becoming mere conduits to the admission of improperly obtained evidence. Second, the exclusionary rule provides an incentive for careful review of warrants because of the adverse consequences of allowing an improper warrant. Third, it provides an incentive for law enforcement officers to conform their conduct to the Constitution. Finally, the most effective method of protecting the innocent against abusive searches is to have an exclusionary rule.

The amendment by Mr. LUNGREN has not been the subject of any hearing in the House this Congress. But if such hearing were held, Members would know that this amendment is opposed by the American Bar Association and the Judicial Conference of the United States. Members would also have learned that the costs of an exclusionary rule are relatively small in comparison to the benefits. The best evidence is that:

The cumulative loss—nonprosecution or nonconviction—resulting from illegal searches is between 0.6 to 2.33 percent of all felony arrests.

Less than 1 percent of individuals arrested for felonies are released because of illegal searches and seizures at the preliminary hearing or after trial.

If hearings had been held on this amendment, Members would have learned that this amendment does not conform to the Supreme Court's most recent decision on the fourth amendment. The amendment goes beyond the Leon case by extending the existing good faith exception to cases which do not involve search warrants. Moreover, the amendment does not incorporate limitations of the good faith exception which the Supreme Court has said are required by the Constitution.

Thus, Members should know that by voting on this amendment they will be facing conflicting Supreme Court decision of a constitutional magnitude, the opposition of the two most respected legal organizations in the country and a weak case for change.

Let me close with the warning of Justice Brennan:

When the public, as it quite properly has done in the past as well as in the present, demands that those in government increase their efforts to combat crime, it is all too easy for those government officials to seek expedient solutions. In contrast to such costly and difficult measures as building more prisons, improving law enforcement methods, or hiring more prosecutors and judges to relieve the overburdened court systems in the country's metropolitan areas, the relaxation of Fourth Amendment standards seems a tempting, costless means of meeting the public's demand for better law enforcement. In the long run, however, we as a society pay a heavy price for such expediency, because as Justice Jackson observed, the rights guaranteed in the Fourth Amendment "are not mere second-class rights but belong in the catalog of indispensable freedoms." Once lost, such rights are difficult to recover.

As Justice Stewart has observed:

[T]he exclusionary rule is not designed to serve a specific deterrence function; that is, it is not designed to punish the particular police officer for violating a person's fourth amendment rights. Instead, the rule is designed to produce [systematic deterrence]; the exclusionary rule is intended to create an incentive for law enforcement officials to establish procedures by which police officers are trained to comply with the fourth amendment because the purpose of the criminal justice system—bringing criminals to justice—can be achieved only when evidence of guilt may be used against defendants.

Uncontrolled search and seizure is one of the first and more effective weapons in the arsenal of every arbitrary government.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE].

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, the criminal lawyer's best friend is the motion to suppress provided by the exclusionary rule. If they know that motion, they are going to win a lot of their cases. The purpose of the exclusionary rule is to deter policemen from overreaching, from making unreasonable searches and seizures.

Now, it is misconceived because the only one that gets punished by suppressing this evidence is the prosecutor, society, the public at large. The big winner is the defendant, the accused, and the policeman leaves the court unchastened to go and do whatever he does another day.

Now, if the warrantless search and seizure was done in good faith, yes, that is a subjective test, but is not probable cause subjective? Is not "beyond a reasonable doubt" subjective? Somebody has to make the judgment that, yes, it measures up to good faith, or no, it does not.

Now, we assume that our judges are capable of determining whether good faith has been exercised in this search and seizure. The exclusionary rule is waived now when a warrant exists and a good faith effort has been made. This amendment simply has the same exemption apply without the warrant.

Now, if you really care about hitting drug trafficking where it hurts, never mind conferences, never mind scattering money as though it has bacteria on it. Do something substantial. Take that exclusionary rule, the criminal lawyer's best friend, and make it inapplicable where a good faith search and seizure has been made.

We are not simply to inquire, did the constable blunder? We are to find out if this accused is guilty or innocent. The evidence should be adduced to make that determination. If you want to deter policemen from making unreasonable searches, then fire them, suspend them, but do not frustrate justice and do not permit drugs to proliferate and to be sold protected by the misconceived exclusionary rule.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HYDE. I only have 3 minutes, let me say to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SEIBERLING].

I would suggest doing something of substance in this omnibus blockbuster of a costly bill which we are rushing to completion with very few hearings.

Now I will yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SEIBERLING].

Mr. SEIBERLING. Well, Mr. Chairman, I wonder how many other constitutional protections the gentleman is prepared to sacrifice?

Mr. HYDE. None, I would sacrifice none. Unreasonable searches and seizures are wrong and should be punished and I say punish the miscreant, but do not let the guilty go free. Where is that in the Constitution?

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, these protections protect all of us, not just the guilty, but the innocent as well. That is the whole point.

Mr. HYDE. Yes, the victims of this dope trafficking, let us do something about them. I want to protect the public.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. EDWARDS].

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Chairman, the crux of the matter is that all of us here believe that if you misbehave, if you violate the law, you should be caught and punished; but the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] does not want the policeman's misconduct held against him. That is all we are talking about. The problem is that we are going to encourage the police to do wrong if we allow them to use illegal evidence.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Yes, of course, I always yield to the gentleman from Illinois, with great care, though.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I want that policeman punished, but by suspending him or firing him or even jailing him for making an illegal search and seizure, but I do not want the consequence of his act to be visited on the community land society.

It is the remedy that I question, not that the wrong has been done, and where good faith has been expended I would make that different from bad faith, and I think the gentleman would, too.

Mr. EDWARDS of California. No, Mr. Chairman, I disagree very strongly. I do not think the way to correct the policeman is just to fire him. The way to stop him from collecting illegal evidence is not to allow the evidence to be used in court.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I yield an additional 30 seconds to the gentleman.

Mr. EDWARDS of California. So I just do not think, Mr. Chairman, that we want to travel down this path. As has already been pointed out by previous speakers, you are not talking about very many cases that the police or the DEA would lose. It is somewhere around 1 percent of felony cases in the United States that are lost because of illegal searches.

Mr. JACOBS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWARDS of California. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. JACOBS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to cite for the Record at this point——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONYERS].

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Chairman, I was interested in the opening statement of the gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN] which carefully excluded any reference to the fourth amendment of the Constitution. Why? Well, the reason is very simple, because the exclusionary rule was brought in there, I say to the gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN] because you cannot have a fourth amendment to the Constitution without the exclusionary rule written, so sayeth the Supreme Court of the United States.

Now, the reason that they said that and the reason you have to allow the case to go off, not jail the policeman, I say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE], is because the law requires that it be absolute. You cannot have good faith about your knowledge of the law. You can have good faith in the application of a fact, probable cause. You cannot have good faith in applying the law.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I thank my colleague for yielding.

I intend to support the amendment of the gentleman from California. There is no question but that the application of the exclusionary rule has led to some absurd and bizarre results in drug cases, but I think what is needed here is a definition of the term good faith in a warrantless situation.

The gentleman from New Jersey, the chairman of the subcommittee, has raised the issue of subjective versus objective standards. I would like to address a couple questions to the sponsor of this amendment.

How does the gentleman intend that the courts interpret good faith? What are the standards that would define good faith?

Mr. LUNGREN. It is my intention that the good faith that is intended in this particular amendment would be the standard that was established by the Supreme Court in the United States versus Leon case. That is where they establish a good faith standard in a warrent case.

Mr FISH. Second, who has the burden of proof to demonstrate good faith under the language of the gentleman's amendment? Is it the prosecution or the defense?

Mr. LUNGREN. Once the objection has been raised by the defense—that is, the defense would first have to raise the objection—both the burden of going forward and the burden of proof would shift to the prosecution to show that in fact they met the standard of good faith.

Mr. FISH. I thank the gentleman.

Finally, what about warrantless searches? Is the test what the individual police officer's subjective view of the fourth amendment requirement is?

Mr. LUNGREN. No, it would not. It would be what the court contemplated in the Leon case.

I would also make reference to a previous case from the fifth circuit, the Williams case, in which it was said:

> We emphasize that the belief, in addition to being held in subjective good faith, must be grounded in an objective reasonableness. It must therefore be based upon articulable premises sufficient to cause a reasonable and a reasonably trained officer to believe he was acting lawfully.

In other words, there is a subjective element to it, but it is grounded in an objective reasonableness. I think that expresses what the fifth circuit had in mind and it also expresses what the Supreme Court had in mind.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman.

□ 1650

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. GLICKMAN].

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Chairman, we do have some exceptions to the exclusionary rule, but in my judgment the Lungren amendment is a gaping hole in the fourth amendment.

This amendment on the exclusionary rule would allow illegally seized evidence to be used in a trial whenever police could argue subjectively that they acted in good faith.

The Supreme Court has held that a good faith defense only applies when police officers rely on a judicial warrant. This amendment would apply a good faith exception even when no warrant is obtained and in all cases—not simply those related to drug offenses. We are amending the entire criminal code here with respect to all Federal cases, not just drug cases, opening a door to illegal searches and seizures.

Mr. Chairman, I urge Members to vote down the Lungren amendment.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. BERMAN].

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Chairman, this is a very, very bad amendment. It incorporates in our Federal criminal law the notion that ignorance of the law is an excuse. A "good faith" exception, notwithstanding the previous colloquy on this floor, is not defined by any standard other than the subjective good faith belief of the police officer. He is now rewarded for unconstitutional searches to the extent to which he testifies he does not know that the search was illegal.

The court did not adopt the exclusionary rule because it loved to exclude evidence; it adopted it because there was no other effective and meaningful deterrent and remedy to deal with the problem of protecting our fundamental constitutional rights.

At the very least one should expect that the authors of this amendment would set up a proposal such as the gentleman from Illinois talked about that involves criminal penalties and discipline for violations of the fourth amendment. There is nothing in the amendment to protect the citizens in their fundamental constitutional rights. I urge this body to reject it.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire as to how much time I have remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] has 3½ minutes remaining and the gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN] has 4 minutes remaining

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MORRISON].

Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I hope that this body will be strong in defense of the fourth amendment and vote down this amendment.

As has been so articulately stated by the gentleman from Kansas, this is not a narrow amendment, this is the entire Federal Criminal Code that is being affected. This is not just something about drugs. It is going to have a perverse effect. We are going to say to policemen first that they should not worry about the quality of their information to enforce the law. Is it a substitute for this that they could be disciplined? No, on the contrary, they will be too cautious for fear of discipline to themselves, and they will enforce less of the law, not more.

The fourth amendment protects us all, the innocent most of all, and we should not create the improper incentive to violate the law by anyone, most of all the police.

Vote down this amendment and preserve the very best law enforcement under this drug law, and also the entire Criminal Code.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW].

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN] and compliment him for his most able amendment.

You know, to listen to some of the argument against this amendment, you would think that we were asking to amend the Constitution. Well, my colleagues know as well as I know that we are not amending the Constitution here. We are simply putting a minor adjustment in the exclusionary law that grew up some 125 to 150 years after the ratification of the Constitution and the fourth amendment.

What we are doing is just good, common sense. What we are doing today, in fact, is cleaning out the attic of the Committee on the Judiciary, where this particular amendment has lingered in the way of a bill without even being allowed a hearing or a markup for so many years time after time, as we are going to have a chance to do on other legislation today.

This different from other amendments that have been offered today, because this one does not carry a big price tag. This one is going to cost the taxpayers absolutely nothing. This is something that the voters are going to be screaming for and have been screaming for. They are sick and tired of the criminal walking out of the courtroom unpunished.

I urge Members to vote "yes" on this amendment.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. RANGEL].

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to this amendment. It looks like, as the gentleman from Florida has indicated, this is a Judiciary Committee shootout, that anything that they could not get in the Judiciary Committee, then they might as well come along with the drug bill and have some death penalty, exclusionary rule, anything else that they want to bring to the floor.

Basically what we are talking about is illegal searches and seizures. Now the gentleman says that he wants to make an exception to what is already illegal. But the gentleman from Illinois had claimed, "Don't penalize the policeman." A cop wants to make arrests; a cop wants to make convictions. If you provide the incentives, the fruit from an illegal search and seizure, and then ask the police officer did he do it in good faith, I am telling you that you will find a very difficult case in which to throw out any of the evidence, no matter how tainted.

I wish Members could put themselves in this position. Here comes a policeman. He has good faith that he wants to put you in jail, but he has violated every protection that you have. I submit that Members ought to oppose this amendment.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MCCOLLUM], the distinguished ranking member of the Subcommittee on Crime.

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, sometimes in this debate when we talk about the Constitution and things like searches and seizures and the exclusionary rule, we forget some fundamentals. One of the fundamentals is that the exclusionary rule is not a part of the fourth amendment. It is not a part of the Constitution. It is a procedural device for enforcement adopted by the Supreme Court in the century by case law and case decision, because they were not happy with the enforcement devices that existed.

It is a Court-made rule of procedure that I think, and I think that the majority of the Members of this body are going to decide today, should be a vested right in Congress to decide and determine, and that is what we would be doing here today. We would be saying—and I am strongly in support of the amendment of Mr. LUNGREN—we would be saying that with respect to those searches and seizures that a police officer makes without a warrant, in good faith, that he is going to be able to be deemed to be right in that judgment at least to the extent of admitting that stuff into evidence, unless there is some burden that is not met by the prosecution later.

Mr. Chairman, I strongly urge the adoption of this amendment to put the exclusionary rule away on this issue.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JACOBS].

Mr. JACOBS. Mr. Chairman, I oppose the exclusionary rule, and I oppose this amendment, because it is not balanced. The way to get rid of the exclusionary rule is to provide some other remedy to protect the people without forbidding valuable evidence in trials.

The way to do that is cited in Bevins v. Six Unnamed Federal Agents, 403 U.S. 388, a 1971 case, namely to waive sovereign immunity so that the offended party can sue. If that were added to this amendment, I would vote for it gladly.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the remainder of my time.

Mr. Chairman, I just want to say, if I may have the attention of the gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN], as I understand it, his intent was to create a standard that would be objectively reasonable, the Leon standard. And yet I do not read the gentleman's amendment that way. The gentleman's amendment is quite vague. I know that it was probably crafted as part of an amendment in the other body, but it seems to me that the standard that we ought to be using is just that. It can be our intent that it be interpreted a certain way, but why not in fact spell it our just that way.

I differ with many of my colleagues on the subject of the exclusionary rule. I support a "good faith" exception, but it has to be an objective standard.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUGHES. Will the gentleman give me some time so that we can discuss that issue?

I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. LUNGREN. I said that I would do that in conference: If that is the gentleman's intent, I would support him in making that change. But with the rule, I cannot make any change.

□ 1700

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman agree that we should have an objective standard in the language, not really in what is our intent?

Mr. LUNGREN. It is my intent to have what the Leon case has, and if it is required to make the gentleman happy, it can be articulated there. I would be happy to do that and I would recede to that in a conference.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] has expired.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN] is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, first of all, I might say that this is not such a unique experience we are having here. Other State courts have been involved in that. In fact, one of the distinguished members of our Subcommittee on Crime, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SMITH], is the author of a similar piece of legislation in the Florida Legislature.

They have not had a rash of abuse of police activity in Florida since they got that through, but they have added an additional tool to strike against major crime, particularly drug trafficking, in their home State. We should do at least as much here on the floor of the House.

I am not obliterating the exclusionary rule. What we are doing here is adding a good-faith exception, and let us just analyze it for a moment.

If what you are trying to do is deter police conduct that is inappropriate, then you could have the exclusionary rule where that is the intention of the police officer when he has made a good-faith mistake because he may have been following what the law has been thus far, what has been printed. If he stays up all night and reads the latest law articles and law review articles and decisions and follows that, to have evidence thrown out because the court says later on, "We had not anticipated that; we are going to make a new ruling," does not make sense, does not make common sense and tends to undercut the credibility of the judicial system.

One of the things we ought to remember is, yes, we are here to make sure we do not make great errors. We are here to make sure we protect the public and we are here to protect constitutional rights.

I am not saying we ought not to do that, but we ought to keep another thing in mind. If we continue to turn a blind eye to changes that the American people think are reasonable, are common sense, and, in fact, are, then we tend to give more and more disrespect to the judicial system itself.

I will readily admit the ACLU does not support this. I will readily admit the police officers do, the attorneys general do, the Justice Department does, and maybe that is weighted toward the prosecution. I will admit it. I have got a bias in this war on crime; it is toward the prosecution.

All I am asking for is a small change that will make a very effective change in terms of our war on drug dealers.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired on the amendment.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 259, noes 153, not voting 19, as follows:

Mr. TORRES and Mr. ANNUNZIO changed their votes from "aye" to "no."

Mr. TRAFICANT and Mr. YOUNG of Missouri changed their votes from "no" to "aye."

So the amendment was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. CHENEY. Mr. Chairman, I was unavoidably detained in a meeting in the other body a few minutes ago and missed rollcall No. 373. Had I been present, I would have voted "aye."

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN] will be recognized to offer amendment No. 31.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. LUNGREN

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LUNGREN: Page 224, after line 13, insert the following:

Subtitle H—Miscellaneous Provisions

SEC. 671. FORFEITURE OF SUBSTITUTE PROPERTY.

(a) AMENDMENT TO SECTION 1963 OF TITLE 18, UNITED STATES CODE.—Section 1963 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by inserting after subsection (c) the following new subsection:

"(d) If, because of an act or omission of the defendant, property subject to forfeiture under subsection (a) of this section—

"(1) is removed from the jurisdiction of the court or is otherwise unavailable for forfeiture;

"(2) is diminished in value; or

"(3) cannot reasonably be separated from property that is not subject to forfeiture;

the court shall order the forfeiture of such other property of the defendant as may be necessary to recover the value lost to the United States because of the act or omission of the defendant.".

(b) AMENDMENT TO SECTION 413 OF THE CONTROLLED SUBSTANCES ACT.—Section 413 of the Controlled Substances Act is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsections (d) through (o) as subsections (e) through (p), respectively; and

(2) by inserting after subsection (c) the following new subsection:

"Substitute Property

"(d) If, because of an act or omission of the defendant, property subject to forfeiture under subsection (a)—

"(1) is removed from the jurisdiction of the court or is otherwise unavailable for forfeiture;

"(2) is diminished in value; or

"(3) cannot reasonably be separated from property that is not subject to forfeiture;

the court shall order the forfeiture of such other property of the defendant as may be necessary to recover the value lost to the United States because of the act or omission of the defendant.".

Mr. LUNGREN (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN] will be recognized for 5 minutes and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] will be recognized for 5 minutes in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 3 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, a little over a year ago, one of my staff members was at home watching television and watching that rather popular show called "Miami Vice."

In that show there was a scene in which Don Johnson was talking rather heatedly to a suspect in which he said, "Look, haven't you heard of the Omnibus Crime Control Act of 1948?" The defendant looked at him rather quizzically.

He then said, "Under that we can take away your house, we can take away your car, we can take away your boat, we can take away your cash in the bank. So you had better cooperate with us." In fact, that is one of what I consider to be the major strides we made in criminal prosecutions as a result of the adoption of that act.

We are striking at major drug dealers where it hurts; not only are we putting them in prison but we are attaching their assets and after the conclusion of the trial there is a presumption that their assets flow from their illegal activity.

What does that mean? That means that unless they can overcome that presumption, we take away their car, we take away their boat, we take away their house, we take away their funds, and when they get out of prison they do not have the assets with which to get involved in their criminal enterprises again.

The question before us now is whether or not we should have the ability to go after substitute assets. That is, if they have been successful in hiding their assets or transferring their assets, could we not go after a similar amount of other assets they might have in which they have hidden their previous ones? Why do we do this? Because we are dealing with tough, smart people who try to stay one step ahead of the law and try to hide their assets whenever they can.

Some will say we do not need this. The Justice Department has asked for it. In fact it was part of the Comprehensive Crime Control Act when it left this House several years ago and similarly was passed in the other body. Somehow it got dropped out in conference.

This is another arrow in the quiver of law enforcement against those who are dealing drugs to our children and throughout our society.

Some may say there is a constitutional problem with that.

I have had the CRS look at that through their legal staff, we have looked at it; we can find no constitutional problem with it whatsoever. It adds an additional penalty so that we can stay one step ahead of the bad guys who are out there. They are smart, they know what they are doing, and when they get assets they try to hide them. This amendment would say that we can go after those assets they have substituted for the assets that they got as a result of their criminal enterprise.

Why should we allow them to keep these assets merely because they were smart enough to hire some good attorneys and some good accountants? Why should we allow them to keep a boat or a house or a new bank account merely because they shifted the source of those assets?

This is another effort for us to get tough on drugs. It does not cost us anything. It costs the guys who are out there doing something. I ask you to support the amendment.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 3 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I am very proud of the forfeiture bill. As a matter of fact, I was the prime sponsor of the bill. It was written in both the 97th and 98th Congresses; it has been one of the dynamite tools we provided for the law enforcement community, and I am delighted to say that it has reached every expectation that we had for it. This amendment, however, is both unnecessary and, in my judgment, undesirable. We considered it, as a matter of fact, when we first developed the bill in 1981 and rejected it as an approach for the reasons I am going to tell you. It is unnecessary because when it was first offered as a method to get at the assets of criminals who hide or dissipate their ill-gotten gains, we debated it and found out that basically it did not get at what we wanted. The theory behind the amendment is that if a criminal has hidden the proceeds of his crime, the courts shall order the forfeiture of legally held assets of the same value. The flaw in the approach before us is that the criminal who hides illegally obtained assets is going to hide legal ones also. For example, we cannot effectively seize a Swiss bank account or a Bahamian bank account because it is beyond the reach of our authorities.

The solution we developed in response to that dilemma and which we enacted 2 years ago strips the ill-gotten gains from criminals through greatly increased fines, improved stronger fine collection laws, fines unlimited by the ill-gotten gains, which can be twice the amount of those gains. We also created a presumption that all assets that are created or in fact acquired during the time of the criminal enterprise are presumed to come from the criminal enterprise. And we require the defendant to come forward to establish that those gains were not gotten from the criminal enterprise, just like in net worth cases, net worth cases with the IRS.

We made the defendant come forward and show where those assets came from.

And we did something else: We said that if he is doing $2 million a year for 5 years, that is the size of the criminal enterprise, that a court can impose a fine of up to $20 million on the defendant and say to the defendant that for each of the counts, 5 years in Federal prison, 5 years probation to be served if the defendant does not come forward and pay the fine.

That is how we reached the Swiss bank accounts.

The response of the Justice Department to us was,

> Great idea, Bill, wonderful idea. You know, we had not thought of that. That is a great approach. We ought to apply that kind of a standard, and we ought to have that presumption. We ought to develop that kind of a fine for the courts. But we ought to have substitute assets, too.

That is just to throw it in, to make it a little better. What is wrong with that is that pushes it much closer, in my judgment, to a constitutionally impermissible standard.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN] has 2 minutes remaining and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] has 2 minutes remaining.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the remaining time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN] is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, I might say I applaud the gentleman from New Jersey for those changes we made in the law. They are in fact good. But just because we have one good idea in the law now does not mean we ought to reject another good one.

Let me just talk about the fine. We can fine them up to $20 million. With some of the major drug traffickers and some of the major organized crime figures today $20 million is not sufficient. We ought to take their assets as well as $20 million.

We know the types of dollars we are talking about. Why not have the ability to go after it?

If somebody is smart enough to be able to hide the assets that we are able to prove they got from their illegal enterprise, if they are able to hide that and they have purchased something, a pizza parlor, a baseball team, a building that happens to be worth the same amount, why ought not we be able to go after that? That is what this amendment does. Besides, the fine is discretionary.

It does not have to be imposed by the judge. The defendant still has ample time following indictment to dispose of any assets which would be subject to the alternative fine. By contrast, in forfeiture proceedings, the judge can order a freezing of the assets. All I am asking for is an additional bit of ammunition.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUNGREN. I would be happy to yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FISH. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Will the gentleman correct me if I am mistaken: Is this not the magnitude of what we are talking about, in the range of $100 billion spent in the United States on illegal drugs?

Mr. LUNGREN. At least. We think that is the low-ball estimate. Hundreds of billions of dollars.

Mr. FISH. Worldwide, I am told, it is about $500 billion, which exceeds the national income of all but five countries in the world.

Mr. LUNGREN. Absolutely, and all we want to do is to say let us give law enforcement every single tool to get all of it if they can, not let us be confused by the smart guys out there who happen to be able to hire good lawyers and good accountants.

Mr. FISH. I thank the gentleman.

□ 1735

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, all I am saying here is let us give law enforcement every tool. Twenty million is a good fine, but sometimes these criminal enterprises, to them that is a spit in the ocean. Let us get every bit of their assets we can and let us hit them where it hurts, in their pocketbook.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the remainder of my time.

Mr. Chairman, I would say to my colleagues that I am not going to belabor the point. Frankly, I can see just exactly what is happening. Anything that would appear to provide additional resources, no matter whether or not it is perhaps as constitutional impermissible, whether it adds anything to the arsenal, is going to be approved.

Let me just say to my colleagues, however, that in this instance, in my judgment, there are some constitutional problems. We push it very close to that limit. In one U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals case involving a RICO forfeiture provision, the court said the forfeiture provision should indeed be read to produce penalties which are not shockingly disproportionate to the offense. That is the concern we have.

For what it adds, it does not get at the assets we want to get at in Swiss bank accounts. It is just not worth the risk. It is that simple. If I felt it would be an important new tool, I would be leading the charge for law enforcement. I do not believe that. I do not believe it for the reason we developed the alternative approach to begin with. It was for that reason that our committee rejected it.

I might say that my colleague from California serves on my Subcommittee on Crime and on the Judiciary Committee. The gentleman did not offer the amendment. It was debated at length. You cannot debate this in just 10 minutes and give it the kind of debate that it really needs. That is unfortunate.

I would hope my colleagues reject the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, amendment number 32 is in order.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. LUNGREN

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LUNGREN: Page 224, after line 13, insert the following:

Subtitle H—Miscellaneous Provisions

SEC. 671. EXCLUSION AND DEPORTATION OF CONTROLLED SUBSTANCES OFFENDERS.

(a) EXCLUSION.—Section 212(a)(23) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1182(a)(23)) is amended—

(1) by striking out "any law or regulation relating to" and all that follows through "addiction-sustaining opiate" and inserting in lieu thereof "any law or regulation of a State, the United States, or a foreign country relating to a controlled substance (as defined in section 102 of the Controlled Substances Act, 21 U.S.C. 802)", and

(2) by striking out "any of the aforementioned drugs" and inserting in lieu thereof "any such controlled substance".

(b) DEPORTATION.—Section 241(a)(11) of such Act (8 U.S.C. 1251(a)(11)) is amended by striking out "any law or regulation relating to" and all that follows through "addiction-sustaining opiate" and inserting in lieu thereof "any law or regulation of a State, the United States, or a foreign country relating to a controlled substance (as defined in section 102 of the Controlled Substances Act, 21 U.S.C. 802)".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to convictions occurring before, on, or after the date of the enactment of this Act, and the amendments made by subsection (a) shall apply to aliens entering the United States after the date of the enactment of this Act.

Mr. LUNGREN (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN] will be recognized for 5 minutes and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] will be recognized for 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN].

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 3 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I do not think this amendment ought to be controversial. Under the law today, I think there is a possible loophole in our immigration laws which could serve to inadvertently benefit those convicted of drug offenses.

Under the present law a sentencing judge has the authority to make a binding recommendation to the Attorney General that an alien convicted of a variety of Federal offenses not be deported. In other words, at the time the conviction takes place, the Federal judge can say, "But I do not want this person to be deported." That is a binding recommendation to the Attorney General the person cannot be deported.

However, we have made one exception to that binding recommendation authority. We have said that in drug cases that authority is not binding. They can make a recommendation to the Attorney General, but he still has his full discretion.

Unfortunately, we have not upgraded that or brought that up to present-day law, and we only articulate particular drug offenses. In other words, we do not include in here designer drugs, analogs of heroin, all this whole host of new types of drugs and offenses attached thereto, that I think people would readily say ought to not have a binding effect on the recommendation of the judicial officer but allow the discretion of the Attorney General to prevail.

That is simply what I do. What I say is if you are convicted of any drug offense on the Federal law, including those with designer drugs and so forth, the judge may make a recommendation but it is not binding on the Attorney General. The Attorney General then can exercise his discretion as to whether or not that ought to stop him from deporting someone.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUNGREN. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Chairman, I do not believe I oppose the gentleman's amendment. We have had a chance to discuss it. But let me just for the record ask again, is it the gentleman's intention by his amendment to do any damage to the act which the gentleman and I helped pass in 1981 which does give the Attorney General some discretion in certain kinds of drug-related matters with respect to exclusion as well as deportation?

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, I would answer the gentleman, no, I do not try to affect the discretion of the Attorney General. What I do try to do is say that the binding authority of the recommendation of the judge shall not prevail in drug cases. So the discretion of the Attorney General is not touched at all.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUNGREN. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, what the gentleman is doing is substituting language, Controlled Substances Act language, for specific substances in the act.

Mr. LUNGREN. That is correct.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I want to congratulate the gentleman on the amendment. I think it is a good amendment, and I intend to support the amendment.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. LUNGREN].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, amendment number 33 is in order.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. GEKAS

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GEKAS: Page 224, after line 13, insert the following:

Subtitle H—Miscellaneous Provisions

SEC. 671. DEATH PENALTY FOR CERTAIN CONTINUING CRIMINAL ENTERPRISE DRUG OFFENSES.

(a) ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE.—Section 408(a) of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 848(a)) is amended—

(1) by striking out "(a) Any" and inserting "(a)(1) Except as otherwise provided in this section, any" in lieu thereof;

(2) by striking out "; except that if" and inserting ". If" in lieu thereof; and

(3) by adding at the end the following:

"(2) If an individual intentionally engages in conduct during the course of a continuing criminal enterprise and thereby knowingly causes the death of any other individual, the individual so engaging shall be subject to the death penalty in accordance with this section.".

(b) PROCEDURE APPLICABLE WITH RESPECT TO THE DEATH PENALTY.—Section 408 of the Controlled Substances Act is amended by adding at the end the following:

"Hearing Required With Respect To The Death Penalty

"(d) A person shall be subjected to the penalty of death for any offense under this section only if a hearing is held in accordance with this section.

"Notice By The Government In Death Penalty Cases

"(e)(1) Whenever the Government intends to seek the death penalty for an offense under this section for which one of the sentences provided is death, the attorney for the Government, a reasonable time before trial or acceptance by the court of a plea of guilty, shall sign and file with the court, and serve upon the defendant, a notice—

"(A) that the Government in the event of conviction will seek the sentence of death; and

"(B) setting forth the aggravating factors which the Government will seek to prove as the basis for the death penalty.

"(2) The court may permit the attorney for the Government to amend this notice for good cause shown.

"Hearing Before Court Or Jury

"(f)(1) When the attorney for the Government has filed a notice as required under subsection (d) and the defendant is found guilty of or pleads guilty to an offense under subsection (a)(2), the judge who presided at the trial or before whom the guilty plea was entered, or any other judge if the judge who presided at the trial or before whom the guilty plea was entered is unavailable, shall conduct a separate sentencing hearing to determine the punishment to be imposed. The hearing shall be conducted—

"(A) before the jury which determined the defendant's guilt;

"(B) before a jury impaneled for the purpose of the hearing if—

"(i) the defendant was convicted upon a plea of guilty;

"(ii) the defendant was convicted after a trial before the court sitting without a jury;

"(iii) the jury which determined the defendant's guilt has been discharged for good cause; or

"(iv) after initial imposition of a sentence under this section, redetermination of the sentence under this section is necessary; or

"(C) before the court alone, upon the motion of the defendant and with the approval of the Government.

"(2) A jury impaneled pursuant to paragraph (1)(B) shall consist of 12 members, unless, at any time before the conclusion of the hearing, the parties stipulate with the approval of the court that it shall consist of any number less that 12.

"Proof Of Aggravating And Mitigating Factors

"(g) Notwithstanding rule 32(c) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, when a defendant is found guilty of or pleads guilty to an offense under subsection (a)(2), no presentence report shall be prepared. In the sentencing hearing, information may be presented as to any matter relevant to the sentence and shall include matters relating to any of the aggravating or mitigating factors set forth in subsections (j) and (k), or any other mitigating factor. Where information is presented relating to any of the aggravating factors set forth in subsection (k), information may be presented relating to any other aggravating factor. Information presented may include the trial transcript and exhibits if the hearing is held before a jury or judge not present during the trial. Any other information relevant to such mitigating or aggravating factors may be presented by either the Government or the defendant, regardless of its admissibility under the rules governing admission of evidence at criminal trials, except that information may be excluded if its probative value is substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice, confusion of the issues, or misleading the jury. The Government and the defendant shall be permitted to rebut any information received at the hearing and shall be given fair opportunity to present argument as to the adequacy of the information to establish the existence of any of the aggravating or mitigating factors, and as to appropriateness in that case of imposing a sentence of death. The Government shall open the argument. The defendant shall be permitted to reply. The Government shall then be permitted to reply in rebuttal. The burden of establishing the existence of any aggravating factor is on the Government, and is not satisfied unless established beyond a reasonable doubt. The burden of establishing the existence of any mitigating factor is on the defendant, and is not satisfied unless established by a preponderance of the information.

"Return Of Findings

"(h) The jury, or if there is no jury, the court, shall consider all the information received during the hearing. It shall return special findings identifying any mitigating factors, and any aggravating factors set forth in subsection (k), found to exist. If one of the aggravating factors set forth in subsection (k)(1) and another of the aggravating factors set forth in subsection (k) is found to exist, a special finding identifying any other aggravating factor may be returned. A finding of any aggravating or mitigating factor by a jury shall be made by unanimous vote. If an aggravating factor set forth in subsection (k)(1) is not found to exist or an aggravating factor set forth in subsection (k)(1) is found to exist but no other aggravating factor set forth in subsection (k) is found to exist, the court shall impose a sentence, other than death, authorized by law. If an aggravating factor set forth in subparagraph (k)(1) and one or more of the other aggravating factors set forth in subsection (k) are found to exist, the jury, or if there is no jury, the court, shall then consider whether the aggravating factors found to exist sufficiently outweigh any mitigating factor or factors found to exist, or in the absence of mitigating factors, whether the aggravating factors are themselves sufficient to justify a sentence of death. Based upon this consideration, the jury by unanimous vote, or if there is no jury, the court, shall return a finding as to whether a sentence of death is justified.

"Imposition Of Sentence

"(i) Upon a finding that a sentence of death is justified, the court shall sentence the defendant to death. Otherwise the court shall impose a sentence, other than death, authorized by law.

"Mitigating Factors

"(j) In determining whether a sentence of death is to be imposed on a defendant, the following mitigating factors shall be considered but are not exclusive:

"(1) The defendant was less than 18 years of age at the time of the crime.

"(2) The defendant's capacity to appreciate the wrongfulness of the defendant's conduct or to conform the defendant's conduct to the requirements of law was significantly impaired, but not so impaired as to constitute a defense to the charge.

"(3) The defendant was under unusual and substantial duress, although not such duress as constitutes a defense to the charge.

"(4) The defendant is punishable as a principal (as defined in section 2(a) of title 18 of the United States Code) in the offense, which was committed by another, but the defendant's participation was relatively minor, although not so minor as to constitute a defense to the charge.

"(5) The defendant could not reasonably have foreseen that the defendant's conduct in the course of the commission of the offense resulting in death for which the defendant was convicted, would cause, or would create a grave risk of causing, death to any person.

"Aggravating Factors

"(k) If the defendant is found guilty of or pleads guilty to an offense under subsection (a)(2), the following aggravating factors shall be considered but are not exclusive:

"(1) The defendant—

"(A) intentionally killed the victim;

"(B) intentionally inflicted serious bodily injury which resulted in the death of the victim; or

"(C) intentionally engaged in conduct intending that the victim be killed or that lethal force be employed against the victim, which resulted in the death of the victim.

"(2) The defendant has been convicted of another Federal offense, or a State offense resulting in the death of a person, for which a sentence of life imprisonment or a sentence of death was authorized by statute.

"(3) The defendant has previously been convicted of two or more State or Federal offenses punishable by a term of imprisonment of more than one year, committed on different occasions, involving the infliction of, or attempted infliction of, serious bodily injury upon another person.

"(4) The defendant has previously been convicted of two or more State or Federal offenses punishable by a term of imprisonment of more than one year, committed on different occasions, involving the distribution of a controlled substance.

"(5) In the commission of the offense or in escaping apprehension for a violation of subsection (a)(1), the defendant knowingly created a grave risk of death to one or more persons in addition to the victim of the offense.

"(6) The violation of this chapter in relation to which the conduct described in subsection (a)(2) occurred was a violation of section 405.

"(7) The defendant committed the offense in an especially heinous, cruel, or depraved manner.

"(8) The defendant procured the commission of the offense by payment, or promise of payment, of anything of pecuniary value.

"(9) The defendant committed the offense as consideration for the receipt, or in the expectation of the receipt, of anything of pecuniary value.

"(10) The defendant committed the offense against a judge, a law-enforcement officer, or an employee of a penal or correctional institution, while that victim was performing official duties or because of that victim's status as a public servant of the United States, or a State or political subdivision of the United States. For purposes of this paragraph the term 'law-enforcement officer' means a public servant authorized by law to conduct or engage in the prevention, investigation, or prosecution of an offense.

"Instruction To Jury On Right Of the Defendant To Justice Without Discrimination

"(1) In any hearing held before a jury under this section, the court shall instruct the jury that in its consideration of whether the sentence of death is justified it shall not consider the race, color, national origin, creed, or sex of the defendant. The jury shall return to the court a certificate signed by each juror that consideration of race, color, national origin, creed, or sex of the defendant was not involved in reaching his or her individual decision.

"Sentencing In Capital Cases In Which Death Penalty Is Not Sought Or Imposed

"(m) If a person is convicted for an offense under subsection (a)(2) and the court does not impose the penalty of death, the court may impose a sentence of life imprisonment without the possibility of parole.".

"Appeal In Capital Cases

"(n)(1) In any case in which the sentence of death is imposed under this section, the sentence of death shall be subject to review by the court of appeals upon appeal by the defendant. Notice of appeal must be filed within the time prescribed for appeal of judgment in section 2107 of title 28 of the United States Code. An appeal under this section may be consolidated with an appeal of the judgment of conviction. Such review shall have priority over all other cases.

"(2) On review of the sentence, the court of appeals shall consider the record, the evidence submitted during the trial, the information submitted during the sentencing hearing, the procedures employed in the sentencing hearing, and the special findings returned under this section.

"(3) The court shall affirm the sentence if it determines that—

"(A) the sentence of death was not imposed under the influence of passion, prejudice, or any other arbitrary factor; and

"(B) the information supports the special finding of the existence of every aggravating factor upon which the sentence was based, together with the failure to find sufficient mitigating factors as set forth or allowed in this section.

In all other cases the court shall remand the case for reconsideration under this section. The court of appeals shall state in writing the reasons for its disposition of the review of the sentence.".

Mr. GEKAS (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS] will be recognized for 30 minutes and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS].

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, the drug dealer will stop at nothing to further his enterprise. He would poison our populace; he would enslave our children; he would kill a judge; he would kill a prosecutor; he would kill a law inforcement officer; he would kill anybody who would stand in his way. That has been proved time and time by the history of this issue, in the recent history of this issue.

So the amendment I have to offer is society's response to this killer who seems unstoppable at this juncture in our history.

□ 1745

Mr. Chairman, the amendment that is before us is society's response to this drug dealer, this czar of the most pernicious traffic ever known to mankind.

This amendment would offer the jury in a case in which a continuing criminal enterprise concerning drug traffic becomes the issue at trial that when an intentional death is caused at the hands of this drug dealer czar kingpin, that that intentional death would result in the possibility of the imposition of the death penalty under the constitutional provisions that have stood the test of the Supreme Court in allowing juries to make that choice.

This amendment I warrant to you and I represent to you, my colleagues, is very carefully drafted. It will pass constitutional muster. It provides for the bifurcated system of a jury deliberation in which first the jury must find guilt or innocence and in fact it does find a verdict of guilty for a continuing criminal enterprise involving drugs, and then also find as part of the facts there that an intentional death occurred at the hands of this drug czar, then in a separate hearing, where they can hear aggravating factors and mitigating factors they can conclude that the imposition of the death penalty would be an appropriate remedy. That is what this amendment does.

There can be no ultimate war on drugs if we do not cast our ultimate weapon: To place the fear of capital punishment in front to the drug czar who does anything he wants as we sit and stand here today.

We have countless instances of judges, law enforcement officers and others who are trying to bring this menace under control who have been killed at the hands of a drug kingpin.

In Texas, a Federal judge, deeply embedded in a trial concerning a drug czar, if you will, and a whole drug conspiracy, a continuing criminal enterprise if you will, that judge was excuted, I mean killed, murdered at the direction of a drug kingpin.

It is not appalling, I ask you, Members of the House, that there exists no procedure in our Federal law that would cover such a killing? This amendment, in the case of a drug czar, doing this act, would cover that situation and allow a jury to find the death penalty if appropriate.

I ask you as people who have shown in vote after vote on the drug package that is before us that you consider the law enforcement officer and the efforts of law enforcement generally and the efforts of the judiciary and the efforts of the Federal Government on a whole host of levels to do everything in this all-out war on drugs that you must not allow that war to be waged without the ultimate weapon, the threat of the death penalty to apply to the killer drug dealer.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. EDWARDS].

Mr. EDWARDS of California. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I think it is a great mistake to bring the death penalty into this bill and to have to debate and vote on it because it is an issue that is very deeply felt by many people throughout the United States and indeed in this body and also whether or not the amendment is approved is not going to make any difference. It is not going to help the war against drugs one tiny, tiny bit.

The President understands this. The President and I do not often agree, but we certainly agree on this. It is very devisive and should not be injected into an important bill like this.

These people do not think they are going to get caught; the people that the gentleman from Pennsylvania refers to, my friend, Mr. GEKAS. These are professional dealers and hired killers and they do not really care about the difference between life imprisonment and the death penalty.

Also, if this amendment is adopted, it is going to jeopardize passage in the Senate. There are, in the other body, Members who will filibuster this bill. I assure you, if this amendment is adopted.

Any death penalty is going to be arbitrary and capricious and this particular amendment, particularly so. It applies only to individuals engaged in, "A continuing criminal enterprise. Individuals not engaged in a continuing enterprise will not be subject to death. Individuals engaged in other crimes will not be subject, and in all likelihood the kingpins," the ones that you really intend to go after, "* * * who are insulated by layers of underlings will not be subject."

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWARDS of California. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CONYERS. What does the gentleman mean by that? Why that distinction? Is there some reason why some Americans will be put to death and others will just be given life?

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. RODINO].

Mr. RODINO. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to vigorously oppose the gentleman's amendment. The death penalty is one of the most divisive and difficult issues in the political arena. President Reagan has recognized this, which is why he spoke out just this week, and I quote:

> We think the drug issue is too important, and we want to approach it with a consensus of the American people so it does not get embroiled in a side issue such as the death penalty.

Now I oppose the death penalty, for several very important reasons.

The President disagrees—he favors the death penalty. He has stated, however, that it is a side issue that must not be allowed to jeopardize this legislative package. A filibuster in the other body is certain if this amendment is adopted. With little time remaining in this Congress, we can't afford to take the chance that this vital legislation will be derailed.

There are a number of reasons why even those who favor the death penalty can and should oppose the amendment. First, this amendment will actually drain the resources the Federal Government must use in this war against drugs. In all 37 States that provide the death penalty, that punishment is already authorized for virtually the same crimes covered by this amendment. Under the amendment, the Federal Government would spend millions of dollars prosecuting offenses which are now handled by the States. These capital cases require both complex trials and lengthy appeals and are consequently many times more expensive than noncapital criminal cases. A recent study pegs the cost at $1.8 million for trial and first appeals alone. Time and money spent duplicating State efforts cannot then be spent in areas where the Federal Government can make a unique contribution, which is the driving force of this bill.

And, in States which have not authorized the death penalty for crimes covered by this amendment, Congress would be usurping the States' prerogative to determine punishment under their own criminal laws.

□ 1755

In addition, this amendment will add a tremendous burden to the Federal courts, a burden that is now handled by State courts, when Federal courts especially in drug-intensive areas of the country, are already choking on their caseloads.

Further, the amendment as written is seriously flawed in that it fails to meet the standards for imposition of the death penalty set out by the Supreme Court in several recent cases. First, the amendment unconstitutionally authorizes death as punishment for conduct that results in the death of an individual regardless of whether the accused actually killed the victim, attempted to kill the victim or intended that the victim be killed. This unconstitutionally broad application of the death penalty is contrary to two recent Supreme Court decisions.

Second, the unconstitutionally broad scope of the amendment is exacerbated by the amendment's failure to provide adequate guidance in distinguishing those offenses which are punishable by death from those which are not.

In fact, a death sentence which was imposed on the basis of language quite similar to that in the amendment was overturned by the Supreme Court in Godfrey v. Georgia, 446 U.S. 420 (1980).

Third, the amendment would also permit a death sentence to be imposed on the basis of "information presented regardless of its admissibility under the rules governing the admissibility of evidence at criminal trials." The use of such unreliable evidence would create a level of uncertainty which should not be tolerated in capital cases.

Fourth, the appellate review provision may subject the defendant to double jeopardy by requiring the appellate court to remand the case, rather than vacating the death sentence, in all cases in which the death sentence is not affirmed, again contrary to two recent Supreme Court cases.

For all these reasons, the amendment was defeated in subcommittee and again in the full Committee on the Judiciary. Most importantly, because adoption of this amendment would seriously endanger the legislative fate of this drug package, those who favor the death penalty can and should join with those who do not, in once again defeating this amendment.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself as much time as I may consume, the main purpose for which would be to enter into the RECORD, if that would be in order, a letter that we received from the Justice Department in which the tenor of the letter is that the President of the United States and the Federal law enforcement community and the Attorney General all endorse the instant amendment.

At the end of the vote, at the various doors of the Chamber, I will distribute copies of that letter along with a request that each Member vote yes on this amendment.

The letter is as follows:

> U.S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
> OFFICE OF LEGISLATIVE AND INTERGOVERNMENTAL AFFAIRS,
> Washington, DC, September 10, 1986.
> The SPEAKER,
> House of Representatives, Washington, DC.
> DEAR MR. SPEAKER: On behalf of the President and the federal law enforcement community, I would like to communicate our unqualified support for the amendment to be offered by Congressman George Gekas authorizing the imposition of the death penalty for certain drug-related homicides.
>
> Murder has historically been viewed as one of the most heinous crimes which a person can commit, a crime which demands punishment truly proportionate to the offense. Where murders are committed by persons in furtherance of pernicious drug distribution schemes, the concept of proportionate punishment mandates that the death penalty be available. Only through bold and dramatic action such as that proposed by Mr. Gekas can we bring home to drug traffickers that their violent acts will not be tolerated by the American public.

As you know, the Administration endorses the death penalty as an appropriate sanction for the most heinous federal crimes, and has supported comprehensive death penalty legislation, S. 239, which has already been reported favorably by the Senate Judiciary Committee. In the House, Congressman Gekas' comparable bill, H.R. 343, has been pending for more than a year. The Department has also supported individual death penalty proposals such as that added to anti-terrorism legislation earlier this year in the House Subcommittee on Crime but never acted on by the full Committee or on the House floor.

We likewise strongly support the Gekas Amendment. We feel that House action on this measure will represent the clearest test of the determination of Members to give federal law enforcement authorities the weapons we must have in order to deal effectively with narcoterrorists and renegade drug traffickers whose contempt for human life defies understanding. For far too long, federal law enforcement officials have struggled against the forces of lawlessness without access to the ultimate judicial sanction. The amendment offered by Mr. Gekas presents a long awaited opportunity to remedy this imbalance and, if approved, would represent one of the most important features of the historic legislative endeavor upon which you have embarked.

Sincerely,

JOHN R. BOLTON,
Assistant Attorney General.

Mr. GEKAS. But what I am asking the Members now to recognize is that what the President said in the past was something that we have all known, that the issue was divisive within the confines of the Judiciary Committee where we were never accorded the full right for years at a time, actually years, to air the issue of the applicability of the death penalty in proper cases. Even though we had hearings galore, even though the chairman of the Criminal Justice Subcommittee accorded us hearing after hearing on it, we were never able to overcome the feeling among the majority members of the Judiciary Committee that any death penalty legislation that would come that far to the full committee would be crushed before it had a chance to reach the floor. That is the feeling that this Member had, which was amply evidenced by a host of things that developed. That is what the President of the United States was saying. He was saying if indeed our drug package, if indeed the Presidential movement and momentum to bring about reform of our drug laws and to get tough with our drug criminals is to succeed, I do not want to see it get bogged down in the Judiciary Committee, even though I believe in the death penalty, if the death penalty is going to be the stumbling block to the full passage of drug legislation.

But Mr. Chairman, we have now gone beyond that. We have now come to a point where the President knows that the drug package can no longer be held hostage to the death penalty bill, that it is part and parcel of the great movement on the part of the U.S. Congress to begin and to continue the war on drugs.

So the President of the United States applauds our collective efforts here today in supporting this amendment.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Chairman, will my colleague yield?

Mr. GEKAS. I cannot at the moment. The gentleman can get his own time and can yield to me so that I can respond to the gentleman, because I have other speakers.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me to respond to his declination of yielding?

Mr. GEKAS. I cannot, I say to the gentleman. The gentleman knows I have been fair to him from the beginning of time.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. VOLKMER].

Mr. VOLKMER. Mr. Chairman, I for one sincerely and strongly support the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

It has been said here that if this amendment is adopted that in the other body there will be a filibuster and we will see the end of the antidrug bill. That is a decision that the other body should make and not here.

I believe that the Members of this body should make their own decision as to whether or not we should have a death penalty for not just a person who in the course of drug trafficking kills another, but of a person who actually has been engaged in the business of it and knowingly, deliberately kills another.

I firmly believe that there should be a punishment, a death penalty for that type of person, just as much as I believe if the Judiciary Committee would act properly that this body would eventually be able to decide whether or not there should be a death penalty for the person who kills a law enforcement officer in the course of his duties as a law enforcement officer, just as also this body should be able to decide whether or not there should be a death penalty for a person who commits mass murder and many other crimes, which I believe are appropriate for a death penalty.

I do not believe many Members in this body like the idea of having a death penalty. I do not, for one, and I never have; but I believe that today in our society we need to have this type of punishment in order to try to prevent as many crimes as possible resulting in the killing of another human being.

Human life is sanctus, indeed, it is very sacred to every Member in this body; but on the other hand, the taking of a human life by another, deliberately, premediatatively, solely for the purpose of killing that person, I believe a person when he does so forfeits their right to live.

Mr. Chairman, I support the amendment.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONYERS].

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Chairman, I am not authorized to speak for the President of the United States, but I can say that he does not support this particular provision. He talked about the death penalty. He did not talk about the Gekas provision, and I am glad that he did not, because I say to the ranking member of the Criminal Justice Subcommittee that it is fatally flawed. I hope I may gain the gentleman's attention, because we spent a lot of time perfecting the gentleman's proposals in my committee.

This thing is fatally flawed. It is unconstitutional, Mr. Chairman.

Now, the second thing I want to say is that this is the fried-in provision. We have given up, let us just fry everybody that gets involved in drugs. Well, maybe so; but you know, in States like Pennsylvania, from which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS] comes, that has the death penalty, guess what? They do not use it. They do not use it because it would have a reverse effect on the criminal justice system. Too many times when you bring that in to a courtroom, they are going to say, well, maybe they are guilty, but death, the gas chamber, the rope and so on? I am telling you that this will not work.

We have got a big problem, but it is not going to be solved this way.

Now, the third point I want to make about the death penalty in general is that it is being tested in the courts now about its discriminatory effect. The Supreme Court has recently—may I gain the attention of the gentleman, please—all right.

Mr. Chairman, I say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS], this question has been slotted before the U.S. Supreme Court on the precise reason that we hold so many hearings in the Criminal Justice Subcommittee, the discriminatory nature of the death penalty as it has been historically applied in the United States, so we now have for the first time McClusky versus Kemp in which we are going to examine all the studies and allegations of a racially discriminatory character of the death penalty.

It is also economically discriminatory. Nobody rich has ever gotten the death penalty, to be brief about it.

If I thought that this amendment was going to democratize the death penalty, at least it would give pause to consider; but do not worry, it will not. It has been misapplied, reluctantly applied, and not used, so please, let us not try to change American law in one evening in the course of a drug bill. We have already done enough in that direction; so let us turn this amendment aside.

Then I would ask the gentleman to join with me in the regular disposition of this important measure.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4½ minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW].

I might say, Mr. Chairman, that it is the gentleman from Florida, Mr. CLAY SHAW, who first introduced the idea of homing in on the drug czar as a target for the application of the death penalty in appropriate cases.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania for yielding.

I have some prepared remarks which I would like to read into the RECORD. Before I do so, I must for one moment reply to the comments from the gentleman from Michigan who immediately preceded me.

I can assure my colleagues that we are not after the impoverished drug dealer.

Mr. Chairman, the Gekas drug dealer death penalty amendment represents the language of a bill, H.R. 4815 that I introduced earlier in this Congress. My intentions in drafting this legislation as well as my intentions for supporting this amendment represent my strongest and my most complex feelings toward this undefinable and to date untouchable drug scourge that has scarred the moral fiber and the youth of this country. I, a Member of this body from southeast Florida, where so much of this drug war has been fought and lost, want to discourage the drug runner, want to hurt the drug runner and most of all want to stop the drug runner. Nothing has worked. We have tried so many things and the reality remains that nothing has worked.

This amendment, which sets forth very narrow and specific procedures for allowing a jury, once they have found a drug dealer guilty of murder, to determine whether or not to also find him subject to the death penalty, takes this war into a new realm. This amendment says to the drug dealer, we as a society have determined that you represent a cause so severe and invincible, that we must subject you to the most severe penalty we as a society can impose. This amendment says to the American people, we as a society who hold human life as the most cherished value in our country, are willing to impose the most severe penalty we know of against the drug dealer. Yes, we are going to require that you not only be a large-scale drug dealer, and that you be involved in an ongoing conspiracy and that you intentionally kill somebody before we subject you to that supreme penalty, but you are now subject to it.

This Member does not have a problem imposing the death penalty on one who intentionally takes a human life, as this amendment does. This Member does not have a problem telling the American people that he is willing to make drug running one of the most severely punished activities in this country. And this Member does not have a problem singling out the drug runner as the target of the most grave punishment our society can impose on an individual.

This bill has been drafted in conformance with guidelines specifically set forth by the U.S. Supreme Court in developing a uniform and constitutional approach for the several States to follow in imposing the death penalty. This bill requires two separate jury determinations before allowing a judge to even consider imposing the death penalty it requires an intentional killing by a defendant and it requires a jury to make several—I repeat several—findings of aggravating and mitigating factors before even determining that a judge may impose the death penalty. If it is possible to draft a death penalty bill that is constitutional and that is fair, this amendment is it. It does single out the drug dealer to be subject to the death penalty, just as this body singled out the airplane hijacker for the death penalty several years ago.

I think the drug dealer/murderer ought to at least be subject to the same penalty as the hijacker. I think the drug dealer is in a position to do a great deal more harm to this country than the hijacker ever was or will be.

I urge my colleagues to give this amendment serious consideration and then vote to pass it—let's tell the drug dealer where he stands in our eyes.

□ 1810

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTENMEIER].

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KASTENMEIER. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS].

Mr. Chairman, the enactment of a capital punishment statute as punishment for any crime in my opinion contradicts the high ideals and principles for which this Nation purports to stand. The application of government sanctioned executions makes a mockery of our religious credos, cheapens our moral values and demeans human worth. The mandate of the sixth commandment: Thou shall not kill—does not exempt individuals, criminal cartels or the U.S. Government, but religious tenets and, capital punishment is barbaric and should have no place in civilized society.

Our national experience in the use of capital punishment has proven that there has been little, if any, deterrent effect; it has been exclusively applied to certain classes of powerless people and has called into question our stated assertions about the value of human life.

Race and poverty are the dominant factors determining who will be executed in the United States. Not one rich person has ever gone to the gallows. Only poor whites and minorities are forced to walk the last mile and choose a last supper. Many scholarly studies substantiate charges that the death penalty is never meted out as fitting retribution for the economically elite. In particular, they document relationship between race of the criminal, race of the victim and differences in assessing punishment depending on those races. A white criminal and a black victim or a black criminal and a black victim invariably end up with little or no punishment. But black criminals and white victims or white criminals and white victims are much more likely to be considered serious threats to an orderly society and punished accordingly. I contend the same scenario would prevail in judging the dispensers of illegal narcotics.

The application of capital punishment is reserved for those in this society who are economically and politically powerless. Only poor whites and racial minorities are victimized by this act of vengeance, euphoniously referred to as fitting retribution for those who callously disregard the right of others to live.

Premeditated murder or wrongful death through illegal drug dealings committed by individuals or groups of individuals or by vigilantes or the State are heinous acts under any set of ethical rules possible to devise. We must have the courage to confront this moral dilemma and the wisdom to reject forthright this morally perversive recommendation.

According to a recent Gallup poll, more than two out of three persons in this country support the imposition of capital punishment. Equally alarming are national polls indicating two out of three Americans oppose protections afforded by the first amendment to the Constitution; favor abolishing the Supreme Court and support reestablishing corporal punishment in public schools. Finally, polls reflect the sad truth that two out of three students now finishing high school are functional illiterates. If nothing else, national polls make a persuasive argument for going beyond popular referendum in arriving at moral imperatives.

Church leadership in this country does not passively oppose capital punishment, but aggressively speaks out, loudly and clearly, against the death penalty. Most spokespersons for organized religion in the United States have emphatically stated their consternation of capital punishment and labeled it as demeaning to the value of human existence.

At seminars and national conventions, leaders of the Methodist church, Episcopalians, Christian Church, (Disciples of Christ), Lutheran church in America, Presbyterian church (U.S.A.), American Baptist churches in the U.S.A., all Jewish conferences and the American Catholic bishops have gone on record in opposition to the death penalty.

According to American Catholic bishops, there seems to be no middle ground on this basic question of morality.

The bishops stated:

We believe that in the conditions of contemporary American Society, the legitimate purposes of punishment do not justify the imposition of the death penalty * * * In the first place, we note that infliction of the death penalty extinguishes possibilities for reform and rehabilitation * * * Second, the imposition of capital punishment involves the possibility of mistake * * * Third, the legal imposition of capital punishment in our society involves long unavoidable delays * * * Delay also diminishes the effectiveness of capital punishment as a deterrent * * * Fourth, we believe that the actual carrying out of the death penalty brings with it great and avoidable anguish for the criminal, for his family and loved ones, and for those who are called on to witness or to perform the execution * * * Fifth, in the present situation of dispute over the justifiability of the death penalty and at a time when executions have been rare, executions attract enormous publicity, much of it unhealthy, and stir considerable acrimony in public discussion * * * Sixth, there is a widespread belief that many convicted criminals are sentenced to death in an unfair and discriminatory manner * * *.[12]

Bishop Edward D. Head of Buffalo, who assisted in drafting the position paper for the conference said, "Our statement was grounded in the belief that the taking of life should not be answered by more violence in the taking of more life." [1]

Even when the Federal Government was empowered to use the death penalty for civil offenses, it rarely was imposed. The only civilians ever convicted in a federal court and executed for espionage involved the 1953 nuclear spying trial of Julius and Ethel Rosenberg. That case is still the subject of much controversy. They, too, fit the criteria for capital punishment in the United States. Both were members of a minority group—Jewish.

A single passage from the Old Testament of the Bible provides what many people believe sufficient moral validity for supporting capital punishment.

Using the phrase, "an eye for an eye,"[1] they erect a theological basis, from which they seek to rationalize government inflicted homicide. Nothing short of revenge and insensitive consideration of other humans, drive those who cite this restricted phrase to underpin their case for capital punishment. Convenient quotations and tasteful utterances do not alter reality. The hypocracy of this mental gyeration has been reduced to its' irreversible common denominator by Albert Camus who wrote:

Let us call it by the name, which, for lack of any other nobility, will at least give the nobility of truth, and let us recognize it for what it is essentially: a revenge.[2]

The full text of an "eye for an eye" paints with a wide brush numerous human acts abhorrent to civilized people. Other sections of that parable are so outlandish, so unreasonable, so contrary to any just code of ethics, its readily perceived why they are not quoted in defense of the death penalty. An integral part of that language specifies when an eye will be plucked. Continued reading of the passage reveals that, a kidnapper, whether he sells his victim or still has him when caught, shall be put to death * * * whoever curses his father or mother shall be put to death * * * when a man strikes his male or female slave with a rod so hard that the slave dies under his hand, he shall be punished. If, however, the slave survives for a day or two, he is not to be punished, since the slave is his own property.[3]

The next section is even more preposterous. Chapter 21 of Exodus, verses 22, 23, and 24 states:

When men have a fight and hurt a pregnant woman, so that she suffers a miscarriage, but not further injury, the guilty one shall be fined as much as the woman's husband demands of him, and he shall pay in the presence of the judges. But if injury ensues, you shall give life for life, eye for eye, tooth for tooth, hand for hand * * *.[4]

In one fell-swoop, these words in the book of Exodus sanction human slavery, cater to the notion that men are superior to women, and advocate vengeance as a means of resolving human differences. What a phenomena that intelligent people of geniune religious persuasion use this particular passage of complete intolerance to justify the moral efficacy of capital punishment?

Does the Bible dictate that a child who is the victim of physical and/or sexual abuse by a parent must be killed because he curses his mother or father? Does it suggest contempt for the rights of women? A man striking a pregnant woman shall be punished only to the extent of the injury afflicted and then only for damages demanded by her husband. What authority gives a man the sole discretion to make that determination? The woman's rights, her health, her safety, her feelings are reduced to secondary importance in this situation. According to this passage in the Bible, a women's rights exist exclusively in the preceptions of men. Literally reading, in this instance can only be translated as unadulterated male chauvinism.

Most significantly perhaps, it can be construed from this passage that the Bible for ever and all times embraces the barbarism of human slavery.

During the 18th and 19th centuries, American Christians who rigorously adhered to these tenets were not morally outraged when other Christians kidnaped tens of thousands of black africans and sold them into slavery to other Christians. Economics, not ethics, obviously influenced their religious interpretation of this passage in the Bible. Mistreatment of slaves according to the Old Testament is not prohibited. In fact, it is approved of if properly applied. Only a master who beat his slave so severely that he died immediately was to be punished. A master skillful in using the lash might even be cannonized if the slave lived for two weeks, 3 days, and 2 hours. What the Bible does say in unequivocal terms, is that one man has the God given right to own another man and also the option to physically abuse that other human being.

One need not look far to see that strict application of these passages is contradicted in the Bible itself. According to scripture, all kidnapers, regardless of severity of the offense, must be executed. Literal interpretation of the Bible does not support current philosophical and moral attitudes.

Killing kidnappers represents a stark contradiction to the story in the book of Genesis involving the sale of Joseph by his brothers. Two of them plotted to kill and throw him into a cistern; claiming that a wild beast devoured him. A third brother, Reuben, persuaded them to merely throw him into the cistern. Should Reuben also have been killed for his complicity in the crime? And more contradictory to the "eye for an eye" interpretation is that when the scheme finally unfolded, Joseph said to them:

Do not fear; can I take the place of God? * * * You intended evil against me, but God intended it for good, to do as he has done today, namely, to save the lives of many people. Therefore do not fear, I will provide for you and your dependents.[5]

The Federal Governments will be no more successful in use of capital punishment to deter crime as they would be in forcing jack rabbits to apply for marriage licenses. Threat of death to hardened criminals serves the same purpose as locks on doors to keep out professional burglars.

If there is deterrent value in imposing the death penalty, it is minimal at best. All evidence points to it being negligible if not negative. No scientific study has documented any cases proving it deterred others from committing similar crimes. Capital punishment as a deterrent to heinous crime, is the most widely accepted myth in American lore.

Fear of being detected, arrested, sentenced for serious crime is the least concern in the minds of those who engage in the sort of criminal activity prohibited by this amendment. Psychological tests determine that the degree to which a stiff sentence is effective, depends on the ability of the Government to carry out its threat. Mandating harsh penalties has less impact on deterring criminal act than practicing consistent punishment. In fact, if authority equivocates repressive measures with justice, the opposite result is true.

The greatest deterrent for those inclined to commit acts of violence, is the realization that in no uncertain terms that they will be subjected to coercive treatment. Patting some on the wrist and throwing the book at others, leaves to much room for conjecture. Those who abuse the rules should know the severity of punishment in store for them.

Studies conducted by criminologists, political scientists, and sociologists conclude that even in highly publicized cases, involving specific geographical areas, homicides have not diminished during periods leading up to or immediately following executions. This data substantiate the reality that homicides are no more frequent in States which have abolished capital punishment than in those who still employ it. Lives and property are no more jeopardized in non-capital punishment States than in others.

If there is any salient societal good in capital punishment, it is not readily evident in statistics showing its effects on future actions of people. Deterrence, as it relates to crime means, a person deliberately abstains from specific illegal acts for fear of being punished. In the case of capital punishment, proponents argue, death is the most feared emotion of man, therefore, the threat of it, the most effective deterrent weapon. There is no argument as to the severity of executions. Therefore, it should be a simple matter to show the relationship between its application and a decrease in the kinds of crimes which merit the punishment. Reasonable people engaged in reasonable thought processes, sufficiently fearful of death, would not commit such crimes if afraid of the consequences. But most of those engaged in illegal narcotic trafficking are not reasonable people engaging in rational thought processes.

The present system of intimidating, frightening those who may tend to engage in antisocial acts is failing to achieve its' goal. One recent study indicates that the death penalty in fact induces more crime. Conducted by Bowers and Pierce of the Center for Applied Social Research at Northeastern University, the study found that in the State of Massachusetts between 1907 and 1963 after executions, there averaged two more homicides than normal in the month following the execution. This finding held true even when other possibly relevant factors were accounted for—including seasonality, the effects of war and time trends.

The two authors suggest that executions may actually devalue appreciation for life because they are viewed by the public as human sacrifice. In addition, executions have a tendency to demonstrate that killing is an appropriate way of settling disputes.

At very least, the burden of proof rests with those who claim capital punishment a deterrent to capital crime. It is their responsibility to build a case. Speculation without evidence is not prudent. Simple utterance of a statement does not make it fact.

What is necessary to establish that the death penalty is a deterrent? Firstly and foremost, prove that States which impose capital punishment have a substantially lower rate of murder than States who have abolished it. Since all available data shows this is simply not the case, proponents must conduct their own studies. Who knows, their findings may differ? Second, there should be evidence that when a highly publicized execution occurs in the community where a notorious crime was committed, the rate of murder decreases appreciable. Proponents of capital punishment cannot point to one neighborhood where this has happened. A professional research team hired by them ought to be able to find one example. Third, States that have imposed the death penalty should experience a sharp decrease in crimes which carry that penalty, while States which have abolished it will show a sharp increase in these types of crimes. This is not the case in a single instance where States have either imposed or abolished the death penalty. Fourth, the inhabitants of States which authorize the death penalty should feel safer on their streets than the citizens in States that have repealed it. This apparently is not the case. Florida, Texas, and California have 25 percent of the total number of persons in the United States awaiting death. Their residents do not feel any safer than those in noon-capital punishment States such as Michigan, Massachusetts, and South Dakota. Placing on death row, mass murderers in California; drug related murderers in Florida; cowboy murderers in Texas does not make Sunset Boulevard, Los Angeles, Flagler Street, Miami or Main Street, Houston more safe than King Street in Hawaii, Honolulu.

Clearly if the death penalty were an effective deterrent, those States applying it would have less incidence of major crime. At a minimum, there must be some showing of a relationship between the threat of capital punishment and the fear of criminals to engage in the sort of crimes to which capital punishment is applied. There is no known correlation.

This controversy has continued for generations. The majority of those societies that engaged in serious discussions, eventually abolished capital punishment. Reasons other nations prohibited official taking of life by the State are various and sundry. But ultimately, they all concluded that capital punishment is anathema to civilized people.

Debate, for or against, has produced a large body of writings but little justification for its usage. That's why most nations in the Western World have stopped executing criminals. Capital punishment popularly believed to deter crime at one time was honored by all European nations. Today, France, England, Germany, Belgian, the Netherlands, Austria, Italy, Luxemberg, Portugal, Spain, have abolished it. Most South American countries have stopped employing it. The only developed countries in the western alliance which still believe in State executions are Japan, South Africa, and the United States. Japan has not executed anyone in more than 30 years. The three nations, however, enjoy this communality with alien comrades behind the Iron Curtain: Russia, China, Vietnam, North Korea. Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to vote against this amendment.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS].

Mr. Chairman, in the past 2 days many Members have come to the well to describe the terrible scourge of illegal drugs that confronts the Nation. They have advocated serious measures to fight this problem, many of which I agree with and some with which I do not. The bill contains many important weapons that can be effective in the war against drugs. If the bill is not enacted into law, however, it might as well contain nothing. And the gentleman's amendment—unintentionally, to be sure—might very well sink this legislation.

So, if you want to see this drug legislation fail, vote for the gentleman's amendment. For as surely as I stand here, Members of the other body will filibuster. Although it appears to some that the death penalty is a political issue, it is not; it is a moral issue. For that reason it will face fierce opposition, opposition that can surely doom legislation this late in the session.

I say this, frankly, not simply out of concern for this bill. The death penalty is a moral issue for me as well; I firmly oppose it and always will. The point was eloquently made by Camus, who wrote that an execution—is not simply death. It is just as different * * * from the privation of life as a concentration camp is from prison * * * It adds to death a * * * public premeditation known to the future victim, an organization * * * which is itself a source of moral sufferings more terrible than death. [Capital punishment] is * * * the most premeditated of murders, to which no criminal's deed, however calculated * * * can be compared * * * For there to be an equivalency, the death penalty would have to punish a criminal who had warned his victim of the date at which he would inflict a horrible death on him and who, from that moment onward, had confined him at his mercy for months. Such a monster is not encountered in private life.

In addition to my moral opposition, which is shared by virtually all of the major religious organizations, I am opposed to the death penalty because it does not deter crime, is applied with racial discrimination, can result in the execution of an innocent person, and is bad publicly policy for a host of other important reasons, as already expressed by my chairman and other colleagues.

The people of Wisconsin agree with me. There is no death penalty in Wisconsin. The gentleman's amendment would usurp the right of the citizens of Wisconsin, and of every other State, to determine the penalty for criminal acts that have always been squarely within State jurisdiction. This amendment is a quantum leap in the expansion of Federal criminal jurisdiction, and there have been no hearings, no demonstration of need, no estimate of cost.

I urge my colleagues to vote against the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire as to how much time is remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS] has 15½ minutes remaining and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] has 18 minutes remaining.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HOPKINS].

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman's yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I had no idea that I was going to be involved today in this amendment, but I cannot help but respond to the statements of my colleague, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTENMEIER], insofar as the death penalty not being a deterrent.

I do not know how many States have the death penalty in our country, and I do not know how many people have been executed by these individual States, but I do know that not one of those persons has committed a single crime since then. So you be the judge as to whether or not the death penalty is a deterrent. I think that the record is very clear on that.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SEIBERLING].

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Chairman, I find that this is a very divisive issue for myself, and I feel divided morally and intellectually.

I have no quarrel with the use of the death penalty where there is no feasible alternative to deter violent crime, nor do I feel that in this case it is necessarily inappropriate. Somehow the message is going to have to get across to the people who have no moral or other human compunctions that if they are going to use violence that results in the death of another person, they are putting their own lives in jeopardy. That is the only way I see to get across to some of the animals that are loose in this country today. But the question is, How do we do it in a way that is narrowly defined to achieve the particular target that we are concerned about, and at the same time do not prejudice the moral rectitude of our laws generally, and the protection of innocent citizens.

With that in mind, I would like to ask the author of this amendment a couple of questions to clarify, hopefully, the meaning.

The key to this amendment is paragraph (a)(2), as I understand it, and it says as follows—and it might be helpful to have it in the RECORD so that people following this debate can see what it says. It says, "If an individual intentionally engages in conduct during the course of a continuing criminal enterprise and thereby knowingly causes the death of another individual, the individual so engaging shall be subject to the death penalty in accordance with this section."

I would like to ask the gentleman who is the author of this amendment, what is meant by "knowingly causes the death of another individual"? How can you knowingly cause the death of another individual and still not intend the death of that individual?

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SEIBERLING. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GEKAS. The gentleman quite properly points out "knowingly causes the death of another individual" appears in subsection (2). However, it must be read in conjunction with the later provisions in the bifurcated system on aggravating factors which brings in the necessity of an intentional killing. This merely triggers, if you have a defendant who knowingly caused the death of someone, then you have that triggered into the aggravating circumstances where it must further be proved, or else a person cannot be subjected to the death penalty, that there was an intentional killing. And so this "knowingly" does not apply and cannot apply to someone who unintentionally or even knowing that it might cause the death did not intentionally cause the death.

□ 1820

Mr. SEIBERLING. That is extremely important because, as the gentleman knows, criminal statutes must be narrowly construed in favor of the defendant. If this is too narrow, it is not going to do the job, and if it is too broad, then it is bad from the constitutional standpoint.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Colorado [Mrs. SCHROEDER].

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Chairman, as a parent, I was absolutely delighted to see this body move on a drug bill with the kind of consensus that we have had because there is nothing, I think, that any parent in America fears more than drugs and people trying to make money off of children. It is a horrible thing.

Yet, for one of the rare times in my life, I agree with the President of the United States. This should not have been partisan; this should have been bipartisan. This should have been a consensus and this should have moved forward.

There are some very good things in here that we are doing and that should be happening. But we are in a political season and I must say I am very saddened by amendments like this and I hope people vote against these amendments.

In football, there is a thing called "piling on." I think we are seeing political piling on right before the election.

If we want to talk about what we could do about drugs, I can think of some amendments that I would have liked to have offered. We have the pediatricians of America telling us that they cannot tell you who will become a drug addict, but they can tell you who will not. The ones that will not are the ones who have had proper bonding with their parents at birth.

So I probably should have offered parental leave as an amendment to this.

We can think of all sorts of things that would have been preventive and that are very important. But when you get into this particular amendment, very controversial, it may kill the whole thing. You are talking about professionals, the worst people. For those professionals, this is not going to stop them from becoming professionals because, let us be honest, they are in it to make money.

What are they going to do? They are going to go out and hire kids. They are going to pass it on to someone else. We know that because we have seen the experience.

There has never been a study showing that this really deters. If you wanted to deter, you should have backed parental leave or we should have done all sorts of other things.

We always have heard over and over again, you should never see law or sausage made. In these waning hours, I really regret watching this law made because I worry as a parent that what we are doing is sinking the whole bill and we will lose that consensus the President brought together.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRAFICANT].

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, I want to commend the subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES], for his efforts, not only in crime, but in the area of drugs, the Select Committee on Narcotics, and the gentleman from New Jersey, Chairman RODINO.

If you look at my voting record, it is 99 percent paralled to most of the Members on this side of the aisle. I offered legislation that includes the death penalty far before an election came about.

I just want to offer this today: The drug legislation alone will not solve the drug problem in America. Until we deal with the root causes of poverty, unemployment, and conditions which produce the social dilemma in this country, we will not have an impact upon it.

That is not my statement today. I stand in support of this amendment. This is not the best amendment that could be brought forward on the death penalty, that should be brought.

As I heard the gentleman from Michigan, JOHN CONYERS, and my heart goes out to him, I would just like to say this: Who looks at the victim? Who looks at who are the large number of victims that are suffering due to the types of drugs and murder in this country that have gone unabated?

I would like to now just deviate 1 second and remind the Members of Congress of the words of a book that was written relative to the Speck murders in Chicago. Maybe these words might stick with you today.

Where he had literally and methodically taken eight nurses, put them up in the front of the room, bound them, and one at a time executed them, there was a young Spanish-speaking nurse who hid herself from view and crawled underneath the daybed. She is seeing this whole thing before her eyes and she writes a passage in that book that everybody in this House should deal with today. She says, "God, don't let him hear the pounding of my heart."

I think we have come all the way full circle and I think the country is not only ready, Congress is dealing with the sense of the capital punishment issue today, not just this amendment.

I would just like to offer very strongly that I believe that it is powerful time enough that we put our foot down on large drug trafficking. My drug penalty bill, Controlled Substances Penalty Act, had the capital punishment section in it for anybody who would traffic in more than 10 kilograms of heroin or cocaine.

Folks, we do not produce domestically 1 ounce of cocaine or heroin. I know the issues that come before the House, but I think today we should pass this amendment and let the other body make their decision.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK].

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Chairman, I must say that I have seen the legislative process work better.

So far, since this bill has come before us, it seems to me we have—I do not know how much we have landed on the drug traffic, I think we have done violence to common sense, legislative procedure, Gramm-Rudman, although I do not mind that one, and we have taken a shot at several amendments to the Constitution, maybe even the third now that we have put the Armed Forces fully into the law enforcement business. I am not sure that having them quartered in our houses will not be one of the next things that happens.

I wish it were the case that the more indignant Congress acted, the less drugs there would be in America. If that were the correlation, then we would be in great shape. Unfortunately it is not the case.

We have had people in this body talk about the fact that you cannot just solve a problem by throwing money at it. That has not stopped people from voting more and more money, and how people who voted for Gramm-Rudman on the one hand can vote more and more money here, I do not understand.

Similarly, we are told that concerns about procedural fairness or constitutionality—it is almost unseemly to demonstrate those because, after all, we are talking about drugs.

The problem is that the more ferocious we talk does not necessarily mean that the less drugs people take. I am afraid that this bill is becoming the legislative equivalent to crack. It is going to give people a short-term high, but it is going to be dangerous in the long run to the system and expensive to boot.

This is one example of it here in the death penalty. My problem with the death penalty is our inability to find perfect people to serve as juries and judges. Give me perfect people and I have no problems with the death penalty.

There are people I would gladly see no longer with us in this society, but I have not yet been able to figure out an inerrant process for dealing with them. I have seen too many cases, capital cases, where a death penalty might have been applied where a mistake had been made.

But even beyond that, there seem to be problems with this one.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRAFICANT] raised some questions about what this requires. I have a problem. On page 19 of the rule, it was mitigating factor 5. This is only a mitigating factor. "The defendant could not reasonably have foreseen that the defendant's conduct in the course of the commission of the offense would cause or would create a grave risk of causing death."

In other words, it is only a mitigating factor that you could not reasonably have foreseen that your conduct would have caused death. That could only make sense if it contemplates that in some circumstances, because a mitigating factor is not an absolute defense. A mitigating factor is something you take into account. That being in here must mean that circumstances are contemplated in which that could be the case and someone could be executed. That seems to me inexplicable.

It seems contradictory to other things that are here. If that is just a mitigating factor, it must mean that someone, of whom that is true, because mitigating factors are mitigating, but they are not absolute and they get waived. Apparently, it could be true that you could not reasonably have foreseen this and you would still be executed.

It seems to me symptomatic of where we are here. It is true that drugs are a terrible thing. It is not true that simply by the legislative equivalent of a tantrum, we can make drugs go away; and I think we ought to deal with this problem a little bit more seriously.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRAFICANT], who just spoke, when he talked about the underlying conditions: We have got to do more. As a matter of fact, it is ironic that some of those who were shouting loudly against drugs now voted for programs; Gramm-Rudman, across-the-board cuts, that cut funding for treatment, that cut funding for education, that cut funding for the Drug Enforcement Administration and the FBI.

To a certain extent I suppose this is Members seeking absolution for some of their past acts, and I understand that that is a useful concept; but it is being done in such a helter-skelter fashion; it is being without a sense of discrimination; and I think it does disservice to the legislative process.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DIOGUARDI].

Mr. DIOGUARDI. Mr. Chairman, I want to commend the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WRIGHT] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL], as well as the gentlemen from New York [Mr. RANGEL] and [Mr. GILMAN] of the Select Committee on Narcotics and Drug Abuse, on which I serve, for acting in an effective, bipartisan manner in crafting the Omnibus Drug Act of 1986. This is a good bill and I wholeheartedly support it.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS] has offered what I think is a commonsense amendment to allow for the death penalty when existing criminal narcotics enterprises commit murder during the course of their illegal activities. I strongly support the death penalty amendment to H.R. 5484 because the people of Westchester County in New York's 20th Congressional District are sick and tired of drug kingpins literally getting away with murder.

Mr. Chairman, let us look the truth straight in the eye: the people running the drug cartels in this country and internationally have no respect for civil activity, no respect for the kids, no respect for humanity and no respect for life. In short, Mr. Chairman, these people are out of touch with reality and the values we hold in this country.

For the House of Representatives to pass an antidrug bill without the Federal death penalty statute attached, we will have failed to deliver to our constituents meaningful action against major narcotics trafficking. The death penalty for activities of this nature is the only thing these high level drug dealers understand.

Mr. Chairman, I stand in support of the Gekas amendment and urge our fellow Members to support this important addition to this excellent piece of antidrug legislation.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. BERMAN].

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLPE].

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong opposition to Representative GEKAS' death penalty amendment now before us. There is no question that we all want to get pushers off the streets. Earlier today many of us, myself included, voted for Representative KRAMER'S amendment to create unprecedented mandatory life imprisonment sentences for repeat offenders pushing drugs on children. Such votes reflect our deep frustration with the current drug crisis and our commitment to doing all we can to effectively combat it.

If I felt for a moment that the death penalty could help us win the war against drugs, I would consider it. After decades of experience, however, we have no evidence whatsoever, that capital punishment is effective against crime. If we examine the experiences of Michigan and Illinois, for example—States which have similar socioeconomic backgrounds and would therefore be expected to have similar crime rates—Illinois, which allows the death sentence for capital offenses, has historically had a higher rate of such offenses that Michigan, which has never permitted capital punishment under any circumstances.

Let us be perfectly clear on this matter, Michigan and Illinois are not exceptional, they are the rule. There is no study anywhere in the world which has ever produced evidence that capital punishment deters crime. And there is absolutely no indication that the imposition of this sentence against drug offenders will in any way further our battle against drug abuse.

Nor can we forget that capital punishment has always been unevenly applied, with the poor and minorities receiving a disproportionate number of death sentences in this country. For example, in Florida—a State known for its high incidence of drug crimes—between 1976 and 1980, 286 blacks killed whites, and 111 whites killed blacks; yet 48 blacks were sentenced to death and not one white received the death sentence. We must face the fact that extending the death penalty to drug-related crimes would only encourage the discriminatory application of this ultimate penalty.

Finally, the criminal justice system does makes mistakes, and, tragically, capital punishment is wholly irreversible. In my own State of Michigan, there are recorded at least six cases of people who were convicted of first degree murder and would have been executed had Michigan had capital punishment on the books, but who were subsequently wholly exonerated of their alleged crimes. What could we possibly have said to the families of these people if they had been executed under their false convictions?

The calls we are hearing for the imposition of the death penalty in this Chamber today reflect a deep frustration with the current situation and a desire to demonstrate effective action to combat it. Tragically, the death penalty would achieve just the opposite; it would create no more than an illusion of effective action. And, in the process, the debate over capital punishment will only direct our attention and resources away from those initiatives that will have an impact on this problem. We must not let this divisive issue divert us from the central provisions of this bill—the drug education and treatment programs, the increased penalties for drug traffickers, the support for more aggressive enforcement of anti-drug laws, and the mandate for improved interdiction activities at our Nation's borders—that can and will make a real difference in our fight against drugs.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Chairman, my purpose in opposing this amendment is not to go into lengthy arguments about the reason why I oppose the death penalty or to argue why I think that penalty should be held unconstitutional. It is clear under present Supreme Court interpretations that under certain circumstances it is unconstitutional.

I simply say to the body that if you think in this amendment you are passing a death penalty which will stand the present Court's test of constitutionality for a death penalty, you are sadly mistaken.

We just passed a rule that carves out a good-faith exemption to the exclusionary rule. This amendment eliminates all prohibitions on admissibility of evidence, in introducing evidence at the sentencing with respect to aggravation or mitigation. This amendment attempts to foist on the defendant the burden of producing evidence, and demonstrating by a preponderance of that evidence that there are factors in mitigation.

This amendment is not restricted to people who actually kill or attempt to kill or intend to kill; it goes far beyond that. This bill will not be sustained by this Court; it is illusory, and I urge a no vote.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON].

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Gekas amendment. In fact, this is a happy day for me. I feel like I have died and gone to heaven. I never thought I would see a good bill come out of Judiciary without a discharge petition. Can you believe it, my colleagues? We did not have to get a discharge petition to talk about the death penalty.

I have gone through this bill. I think it is one of the greatest amendments I have ever looked at in my life. We protect the rights of all citizens. We even have a notice when we are going after the death penalty: Hearing before a court or jury. Can you believe that? We are not going to hang them on the street corner.

Proof of aggravating and mitigating factors. The list goes on and on and on and on. We could write an amendment that is this tall; and I will guarantee my colleagues on the Committee on the Judiciary would not agree with it, because they disagree with the death penalty.

Our committee, unfortunately, has turned into a graveyard for good bills. My colleagues will vote for this bill, it will turn into a graveyard for criminals. The death penalty is a deterrent. Let me repeat: the death penalty is a deterrent.

When you fry that drug dealer that caused the death of someone, that person is never going to come back and kill anyone else.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I just want to say to the gentleman I think his characterization is extremely unfair. In the first place, in this legislation, there are seven different provisions including a money laundering bill that is dynamite.

The Subcommittee on Crime which in fact has reported these bills out, has reported about 25 anticrime, anti-drug bills in the last two Congresses.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 additional seconds to the gentleman.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Chairman, I am going to respond by stating that the gentleman has his opinion of the Judiciary Committee, I have mine; the truth hurts.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 30 seconds.

Mr. Chairman, I hate to take this time, but the gentleman's characterization is so unfair, because the Committee on the Judiciary, Subcommittee on Crime has reported out some 25 bills including a forfeiture bill that a number of Members today stepped up and praised; a child pornography bill that is one of the strongest that we could possibly create; a whole host of anticrime, antidrug bills including the Justice Assistance Act, providing local law enforcement moneys which is part of this legislation; legislation to try to coordinate the activities—so I think it is an unfair characterization.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. STAGGERS].

Mr. STAGGERS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong opposition to the gentleman's amendment. I believe that it is ironic that the House is attempting to attach a death penalty to a bill that's ultimate purpose is to save lives. To my pro-life friends, I say, in a civilized society there is no place for capital punishment. Just as there is no place in a civilized society for abortion. The taking of a life is morally wrong—in every respect. Most non-Communist Western nations have abolished the death penalty. The only countries in the world that have the death penalty for drug trafficking are: Iran, the Republic of Korea, Malaysia, the Philippines, Taiwan, and Turkey. We don't want to add the United States to this list.

I ask my colleagues not to be drawn into the fervor surrounding this amendment. Yes, the drug problem is very serious in this country, and yes, we need to pass equally serious legislation to deal with the problem. But to attach a death penalty to this bill will not advance these efforts. The death sentence is an end in itself. It cannot be reversed if the individual is later found to be innocent. The death penalty does not allow for the fallibility of human beings. The possibility is very real that an innocent person could be convicted and wrongly sentenced to death. When we legislate, we take the chance of making an error. If we must err, then let us err in favor of life.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will inform the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS] that he has 8½ minutes remaining; the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] has 6 minutes remaining.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. HUNTER].

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Gekas amendment. I think there are rare circumstances where the death penalty is justified, and this is one of those circumstances.

I would like to take my colleagues back to what I consider to be the operative provision here. The amendment provides that the death penalty is only applicable if an individual intentionally engages in conduct during the course of a continuing criminal enterprise and thereby knowingly causes a death of any other individual.

Then that individual so engaging shall be subject to the death penalty in accordance with this section.

I think it is important to remember that, while the consumer of narcotics is motivated and driven mainly by his addiction to a particular narcotic, the people, the big dealers who are moving this stuff are driven by a very careful weighing of risks versus profits. Their decisions are business decisions, they are cold, ruthless, deliberate decisions. I have a particular memory of the slaying of one of my constituents, Enrique Camarena, drug enforcement agent in Mexico. It was very clear after a review of this case that Mr. Camarena was killed because he was investigating activities in Guadalajara, close ties between drug dealers and Federal Mexican officials and was causing financial losses to the drug dealers, and because of that they executed him.

It was not an execution of passion, it was not an execution that was motivated by intoxication or by addiction or any of the other things that are affected by the consumers of narcotics, it was a cold-blooded business decision.

If there ever was a right time to apply the death penalty, it would be in cases like this.
